Ohio and Liquor Revenue.—

Another wet fake exploded! The "Big Bertha" of the liquor defenses was liquor revenue. State and national governments were blandly informed that they could not exist were it not for the sustaining power of liquor licenses.

Governor Davis of Ohio in a recent statement asserts that the state treasury has to its credit a cash balance of $15,000,000—the greatest balance in the history of the State. It was further stated that the cash balance at the present rate of increase would soon amount to $19,000,000! This general revenue balance, it was declared, has arisen since September 4, 1920, when, with an overdraft of $109,588, it had dropped to its lowest point in history.

Ohio saloon receipts amounted to $110,000,000 annually, of which amount a measley $6,000,000 was returned to the State in form of revenue—a profitable business for the saloonists, but wretchedly bad for the people.—Exchange.

Memories of Plymouth Church.—

Joseph Parker and Beecher were friends, and it behooves us to recall such historic ties at a time when voices of consideration are few and faintly heard. Each in his own distinction and power was a supremely great preacher,—Parker a trumpet, Beecher an orchestra. Both made their pulpits shrines not only of Christian faith, but of international good will. In Plymouth Church there sounded the wondrous voice of the greatest preacher to the people our race has known, whose genius seemed inexhaustible in its fertility, whose ministry marked a new date both in the religion and politics of our republic. From that pulpit he went on his memorable ambassadorship to England, to plead the cause of Lincoln in the forum of British public opinion; and his victory was one of the noblest triumphs of the spoken word in history. Whatever may mouth Church and the City Temple must be be the chances and changes of the future, Plykept as shrines of historic memory and thrones of spiritual prophecy.

Got His Flowers Before He Died.—

Three years ago a farmer down in Southern Indiana, desiring to sit in at his own funeral, arranged with his friends that the obsequies should be held with himself the chief and most interested attendant. Sitting in a front seat he had the privilege of listening to the preacher's eulogy of himself and looking upon the numerous floral offerings brought by family and friends. Reporters from the metropolitan newspapers were present to cover the story. That farmer died three weeks ago and the services held over his remains were simple compared with the former occasion. Most strange obsession, we say. Yes—and yet that man in his desire to know what folks thought of him and to hear first hand any good that might be uttered but expresses a universal longing. He seized upon a rather gruesome method to accomplish his aim, one that is not calculated to become popular, but it seemed to have accomplished the purpose—he got his flowers before he died. That is the right and due of everyone, but, like many other claims, they are seldom honored until death.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

In the Days of Moses.—

An Associated Press dispatch, dated November 30th states that what is said to be the most sensational Egyptological discovery of the century is announced in a Cairo dispatch to the London Times from the "Valley of the Kings," on the site of ancient Thebes, near Luxor. A series of subterranean chambers has been explored and so far has disclosed the funeral paraphernalia of the Egyptian King Tutenkhamun, one of the heretic kings of the eighteenth dynasty reigning about 1350 B. C.

The discovery was announced today by Lord Carnarvon, specially summoned from England by the explorer, Howard Carter, who had been excavating at this place, with Lord Carnarvon, for seven years, but up to the present with little success.

In the royal metropolis of the Theban empire, directly below the tomb of Rameses VI, a chamber was discovered which contained Tutenkhamun's gem-studded throne. This is described as one of the most beautiful art objects ever found. However, the explorers came upon exquisite carved gilt couches inlaid with ivory, other furniture, a quantity of royal robes, some of them richly decorated, life size statues and vases of the most intricate design, and the remains of large quantities of victuals for the dead.

Important papyri also were found, which are expected to clear up many important points relating to the eighteenth dynasty.—Central Christian Advocate.

For the Comfort of the Modern Circuit Rider.—

Wed., April 21, 1773.—Some applied to the Quakers at Enniscorthy for the use of their meeting-house. They refused; so I stood at Hugh McLaughlin's door, and both those within and without could hear. I was in doubt which way to take from hence, one of my chaise-horses being much tired; till a gentleman of Ballyrane, near Wexford, told me, if I would preach at his house the next evening, he would meet me on the road with a fresh horse. So I complied, though it was some miles out of the way. Accordingly, he met us on Thursday the 22nd, six or seven miles from Enniscorthy. But we found that his mare would not draw at all; so we were forced to go on as we could. I preached in the evening at Ballyrane, to a deeply serious congregation. Early in the morning we set out, and, at two in the afternoon, came to Ballyhack Ferry.

A troop of sailors ran down to the shore to see the chaise put into the boat. I was walking at a small distance when I heard them cry out, 'Avast! Avast! The coach is overset into the river.' I thought, 'However, it is well my bags are on shore, so my papers are not spoiled.' In less than an hour they had fished up the chaise and got it safe into the boat. As it would not hold us all, I got in myself, leaving the horses to come after. At half-hour after three I came to Passage. Finding no postchaise could be had, and having no time to spare, I walked on (six or seven miles) to Waterford, and began preaching without delay on 'My yoke is easy and My burden is light.'—From Weseley's Journal.

President Harding and Prohibition.—

The opponents of the Eighteenth Amendment have been circulating a report that President Harding was in favor of slacking up in the enforcement of prohibition legislation, especially the Volstead Act. No less an authority than the daughter of Theodore Roosevelt was quoted as making that statement based on a letter from the President. The letter, however, was never published, and only quoted in general terms. The dirtiest campaign that has ever been staged in American politics is now being carried on by the enemies of prohibition. They seem to have lost all sense of truth and soberness.

In his message to Congress the President took occasion to express himself in unequivocal terms in regard to the amendment. He said there was no likelihood that the amendment would ever be taken out of the Constitution, and that it was the duty of the nation to see that constitutional law should be obeyed. He announced that he would call a conference of the Governors of the States to work out some plan by which bootlegging should be stopped and respect for law increased.

It was an awful blow to the enemies of prohibition. The present administration is squarely standing for law enforcement even against the liquor traffic. This will give an immense boost to the cause of temperance, and we are full of hope for a better day soon. It has been largely asserted that the forces of greed who want to bring back the liquor business have raised an immense fund to accomplish this aim. It certainly looks like it, and if such is the case it will explain many things which otherwise would be obscure. All honor to the courage of President Harding.—Exchange.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Sunday School of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., will hold its anniversary exercises the first Sunday in January, 1923, the School having been organized just three years. A special program has been prepared.

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., is arranging a special teacher's institute for Sunday School teachers. It is to be directed by the Secretary of Religious Education. Dr. Smith, the pastor, in thus leading off, is taking an advanced step.

"Would like to say here, I am proud of our church paper, and am always glad each week when it comes. For over thirty years I have been a regular subscriber, and the improvement in it has been great."—Mrs. H. E. Pearce, Franklinton, N. C.

From a letter containing a check for four subscriptions, we print the following: "THE SUN has had a place in my home for many years. It is a help to me. I enjoy reading it. Best wishes for the New Year."—Mrs. Ada Teague, Burlington, N. C.

We are now in mid-winter, and this is a time for real work to be done in the churches. We have no time or place for holidays in these winter days except in rare cases where they may be good reasons, but we have reasons to keep on at work, pressing the battle on to victory.

Several brethren have the impression that we are offering a prize on the Virgin Birth. Oh, no—we did not so desire to do that. We did desire the work well done, and for the best piece of work, along that line, we offered $5 as compensation for work done—but no prize.

That was a fine thing to do for Elon College. We mean the gift of $25,000 by The Carleton family of Richmond, Va. Now if a few more of our brethren could come up with such a gift, more or less, Elon would soon begin to take a leading part in all the educational affairs of the country. Indeed, it is already doing that much, but a few such gifts will put it well in the front rank of educational institutions. Keep the ball rolling in favor of Elon. Who will come next with an offering?

It is amazing how we can get wrong ideas mixed up in our minds. One thinks it just the thing to do to doubt some great truths. Alas, doubt of truth never brings joy or peace, nor does it give true strength. The celebrated Rev. F. W. Robertson puts this matter in this way:

To believe is to be happy; to doubt is to be wretched. To believe is to be strong. Doubt cramps energy. Belief is power. Only so far as a man believes strongly, mightly, can he act cheerfully, or do anything that is worth doing.

I am becoming very proud of my little son. He bears his grandfather Lightbourne's name *and our hope is that he will enter the Christian ministry—Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va. We rejoice with you, brother, as we believe our brotherhood generally, and all who knew the Rev. A. W. Lightbourne, D. D., will join you heartily in the wish if it may be in keeping with the Heavenly Father's will that this dear boy may follow the footsteps of his father, his grandfather and his great grandfather, and as they did, spend his days in the ministry of the gospel.

Cahaplain Rountree of Haiti has sent us two articles, one "My Parish" and the second one is on Official Duties." If we mistake not the articles will be full of information along the line presented. If you think the Chaplains of the U. S. Navy have an easy time, doing nothing, be sure to read these articles and learn at first hand the facts in the case, and then may be you will pray oftener for the Chaplains in their efforts to help the men who are sent out by Uncle Sam to take care of the interests of this country. President Harper classes Chaplain Rountree as one of our most studious men, and that means a good bit for this work.

That was a beautiful sentiment an old lady expressed as to her easy chair. Some people do not believe that there is any easy place for a Christian, but we cannot agree to that thought, not if we may put on that idea the interpretation of the old lady referred to above, for she said:

"We know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Golden Text, A. V.). A dear old saint who had seen much trouble, and was in dire need, was asked if she ever felt like murmuring. She replied: "When I do, I just ask the Lord to put me in the easy chair and keep me quiet." The visitor, seeing no easy chair about, asked what she meant. "My easy chair," she said, "is Rom. 8:2: "All things work together for good to them that love God."

We have secured a series of five papers on the question, Are the Jews to be restored to their Land, and be Converted to Christianity? by the well known Jewish convert to the Christian Faith, Mr. A. C. Fellman of the Brooklyn Mission to the Jews. He presents in a very strong light the whole matter from a Biblical standpoint. Most of our readers will know more about God's plans in bringing the Jews back to their native land, if they read carefully these series of papers than they have ever known before, and in the main, all this information is from the Bible. You may not have seen it as you have read your Bibles, but it was because you did not know how to find it. Mr. Fellman finds it for you and puts it in a strong light. Mr. Fellman, we believe, is a thoroughly reliable man. Though a Jew he is himself a convert to the Christian faith. These articles are wonderfully informing.

How true it is that God is a necessity to every life, but a great many people have not found it out yet. They are going along in the dark, supposing that they can do without God, but some day, it may be when it is too late, they will find that life itself could not have been given to them without God. The Northwestern Christian Advocate says:

God is not a luxury for our moments of sunlit exaltation, nor is He a convenience for our distressful emergencies. He is the soul's supreme necessity; the daily bread without which life is a famished failure; our daily breath in which we are to live, move, and have our being; our daily light for the shadowed paths of earth; our daily ("our dwelling place in all generations"). "Whom have I in heaven but thee, and on earth there is none that I desire but Thee" is one of the wisest as well as noblest aspirations of the human heart.

Our old time friend and brother [illegible] work, The Herald and Presbyter, Cincinnati, Ohio, in the days of our editorial work in that State, used to say some fine things along the line of truth and the Christian life. We see the saying of good things is still kept up in that excellent paper. In speaking of some people who wish to get rid of Christ, that paper says:

That ancient emperor, Julian the Apostate, thought to "get rid of that Christ." With all the resources of intellect, learning, wealth and power at command of an imperial will, he set himself to his chosen task. But, dying on the field of battle, we hear the confession of failure and defeat: "O Galilean, thou hast conquered!"

"We must get rid of that Christ!" cried a famous infidel leader. "Away with Him!" echoed the rank and file of infidelity. But Christ would not flee, He would not be crushed, He would not die. He walked sublimely down the hostile ages, while the voices of His enemies died in silence and the grave closed over them.

Get rid of Christ! Why, He is everywhere; in all lands; in all literature; in all noble thought; in all good movements to help, in all evil movements to control, restrain, defeat; leading the triumphant march of progress; permeating all society, as electricity does the atmosphere. He is everwhere, in heaven and in earth; the help and hope of man, the light and joy of heaven; the blinding glare of perdition. The whole round earth is vibrating with the sound of His name and thrilling with the power of His presence. "His name shall endure forever." cried a prophet voice many centuries ago, and today that name flames with supernatural light.— Herald and Presbyter.

Some men do like dreamers—they want men of philosophic minds, ever giving out the threads of philosophy, but whoever heard of philosophy winning a soul to Christ, or of saving a soul. John Bunyan was called a dreamer, and may be he was, but it is a pity that the twentieth century with all her boasted light has not a man who can dream and write such a book as the Pilgrim's Progress. Alas, if we had more such men as John Bunyan was in his day, most likely we should not have so many men who are crying out against dreamers. Listen to his dreaming on a great theme, as when he says:

I saw from that saying, "He that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst," that believing and coming was all one; and that he that came, that is, that ran out in his heart and affections after salvation by Christ, he indeed believed in Christ. Then the water stood in mine eyes, and I asked further, "But, Lord, may such a great sinner as I am, be indeed accepted of Thee, and be saved by Thee?" and I heard Him say, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Then I said, "But how, Lord, must I consider of Thee in my coming to Thee, that my faith may be placed aright upon Thee?" Then He said, "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "He is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." "He died for our sins and rose again for our justification." "He loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood." "He is Mediator between God and us." "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." From all which I gathered, that I must look for righteousness in His person, and for satisfaction for my sins by His blood; that what He did in obedience to His Father's law, and in submitting to the penalty thereof, was not for Himself, but for him that will accept it for his salvation and be thankful.—JOHN BUNYAN.

BEGIN THE NEW YEAR RIGHT.

Some one has said, "Well begun is half done." That may be a bit overdrawn, but well begun is certainly far ahead of no beginning, or a poor beginning, as is very often the case. In the first place, it is evidence of good thinking and wise planning. It is also proof that the worker has both ability and energy. When a man has all of these elements combined, you may expect something to be accomplished. But the opposite is true—when these elements are absent, you need not look for satisfactory results, for they will be absent. Every man who is to undertake work of value, should not only seek to qualify himself for the undertaking, but he needs to give himself to it with a whole hearted zeal, and that means the consecration, not merely of life, but with it every inch of body, mind and heart must be included in the consecration. A work thus begun may be said to be even more than half done. With heart and mind and body all given to the accomplishment of a single end, it will indeed be a difficult task to stop its progress.

Now that we are beginning a New Year, let us consider well what is involved in a good beginning and then let us do our best to apply the facts as we find them to the common tasks which the New Year in the good Providence of God may bring to our hand. This is not only primary in undertaking a year's work, but it is also fundamental, as a means of success. However, so far as work is to be real and permanent, even these elements may, though well combined, be not sufficient to achieve the highest end of the earthly life in its relation to the life to come, for all of these combined, if we leave out of consideration the importance of taking God into partnership with us will fail. With God left out of our plans for the year, we can never achieve permanent good results, either for ourselves or for others.

In beginning the New Year therefore, let us consult devoutly and sincerely our SAVIOUR PARTNER and give due heed to all of his suggestions, for He only knows what is before us and what can be made to work out end in keeping with His plans and purposes, and if one's work for the year is to count well, it must have God in it and if God is in it, we must give close heed to all His suggestions and plans. As a good illustration of what it means to follow the Lord's leadings in our daily work, let us call to mind the work of Moses in building the tabernacle. The Lord had told Moses what to do and how to do the work in building the tabernacle. When he had finished the work on the tabernacle he returned and made his report of what he had done and how he had done it. As he reported on each part of the work the Lord had given him to do, he finished his report on that particular part of the tabernacle, by saying: (I did it) as the Lord commanded Moses. Not only did Moses say he had set up the tabernacle as the Lord told him to do it, but in reporting his work to the Lord on each part of it, he stopped to say: I did it as the Lord commanded me to do it, and this he did, if we mistake not, as many as eight times in a few verses, of course, Moses' work in setting up the tabernacle, having been done as the Lord commanded Moses, it must of necessity be permanent in its character and usefulness. If Moses had done that work in his own way and for his own satisfaction, no permanent good results could have come from it, but the contrary, bad results.

Now as the Lord commanded Moses to do in setting up the tabernacle, so in like manner he has told us what to do for the New Year. He has a work marked out for each one of us for the year 1923. Not only so, but He has a plan of the work, as to how He wishes each of us to do the work for 1923. If we do the work, and do it, not as we may think it ought to be done, but as He has commanded us to do it, then we may expect His blessings upon our work, and the best of results to follow.

Do you wish to know where to find His directions for doing the work which falls to your hands? Then go to your Bibles and make yourself familiar with its teachings, its precepts and principles, and in a life of earnest devotion and prayer ask that the Spirit may make plain to you whatever message He has sent to you. At first you may feel that you do not understand. Be that so, but remember, He is only withholding that you may become deeply interested, till you are fully awake, so that you may receive His instructions and fully comprehend the same, and then go to your work fully equipped and ready to do that work. This will apply to the general tenor of one's life and also to the special work that He may give you to do.

As a good starting point, turn to John 14:6 and read: "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." Now then undertake to study your Bible till in your life you may come to know just what Jesus would do, and when you find out that, then follow the way of Jesus and you may find out the application of what Jesus would do in your life work, then do that and look to Him in faith, building and the best results of your life work and you will not be disappointed in what follows. It may be that many will think there are too many rules to follow and that it can not be done. On the contrary there is but one rule that is a necessity to keep. In other words, keep this one rule truly and all else will become comparatively easy and a pleasure. Do you ask what is that rule? It is simple and plain. It may be kept by the man or the woman whose life is truly given to God in Christ. We find the Scriptures full of this rule—it is given in many forms, but a most admirable form we have in the old Hymn, by Fanny Crosby, which we often sing, and it ought to be sung more often indeed. We sing it as follows:

"If your heart keeps right,
If your heart keeps right,
There is a song of gladness in the darkest night;
If your heart keeps right,
If your heart keeps right
Every cloud will wear a rainbow,
If your heart keeps right.

That is the rule which will make all other rules comparatively easy. Do not shirk the rule, but keep it and the work will be easy in fact.

STAND BACK AND LET JUSTICE DO ITS WORK.

In some portions of our country it has come to be a common thing for men to take the law in their own hands and put a criminal to death because he is supposed to have committed some heinous crime. Such things have happened in instances where the victim of lynch law was innocent, and in that event the crime for which he gives his life is more than doubled.

Lynch law is not worthy of even the worst heathen people in the world, to say nothing of a cultured Christian people, such as we have in most parts of our country. No doubt about the crimes often committed deserve death and more, if that were possible, but lynch law cannot be tolerated in a community of law-loving people. The man who commits the crime of using lynch law is more worthy of death than the original criminal. The man who uses lynch-law is defying the land in which he lives just as truly as the criminal on whom the punishment is visited.

One of our exchanges makes a strong case against all lynchers, for lynching is never right, and should never be tolerated, when it says:

Lynching is absolutely inexcusable in a civilized country and lynchers are murderers. There may have been a time on the sparsely settled frontiers of our country a generation or two ago, when it was necessary for the people to a very limited extent to take the law into their hands, when there were no properly organized courts. But even then it would not have been right for a mob to take the life of a fellowman. In this day there is absolutely no excuse for it. When some fiend has committed a heinous crime, naturally the people of the community are very much wrought up and excited. That, however, does not justify murder, and it is time that the people of this country should realize that the taking of life in such a case is murder. No man or set of men have a right to set themselves up as judge and jury to try a criminal and on their own verdict condemn him to death and execute him, no matter what his crime is. When a crime has been committed it is the duty of the officers in the community to aid the law in apprehending the criminal and in securing the evidence of his guilt, but the properly established court alone has a right to pass upon the evidence, and the criminal must be given a fair opportunity to prove his innocence or to show mitigating circumstances. If the mob has evidence enough to prove his guilt it will not be hard to convince the court, and if it has not sufficient evidence to convince the court of his guilt, they certainly have not sufficient evidence to justify them in pronouncing the death penalty upon him. Public sentiment should demand that courts should give quick and fair trials to criminals and it should also demand that those who violate the law by engaging in a lynching shall be held accountable and punished as murderers. The stopping of lynching devolves upon the courts and the officers of the law. If a few of the lynchers should be executed and it was understood that lynchers would always be treated as murderers, lynching would soon be stopped. According to recent reports two negroes committed murder in one of the Southern States. They were arrested by the officers and were being taken to jail, when a mob was formed which took one of the prisoners from the officers and burned him at the stake. A day or two later the same mob or another, took the other prisoner from the officers and burned him. In the sight of God every man in those mobs was guilty of murder and should be punished for murder. It is not a question as to who the criminal was nor what was his crime.

THE CREDULITY OF INCREDULITY.

Some think faith is a queer thing—they can not see how one can believe such unnatural things. To them the possibility of a miracle requires a stupendous act of faith. That may be true, but it seems far more strange that any man of reason can believe some things which superstition accepts as easily as if it were an established fact. Pity the amazing weakness of the human mind in rejecting truth and in accepting error as truth.

The Presbyterian Standard puts in a few good words on a line akin to this as follows:

THE CREDULITY OF INCREDULITY.

This phrase, while by no means original, expresses so aptly what we wish to say that we borrow it, with due credit to the unknown author.

If you analyze the cause of the present opposition to beliefs long accepted by our fathers and embodied in creeds that are sanctified by age, you will find it to be a feeling that these creeds demand a degree of credulity that is a reflection upon the intelligence of the educated man.

To demand of us that we accept the story of the virgin birth is to ask that we do what no man ever did—believe a story that in its every phase contradicts the experience of the human race for ages past. To ask us to believe that when the writers of the Gospel describe the cure of a violent man as the casting out of demons, is to demand that we believe that these writers, living as they did, in an age far behind the present age were so ignorant that they personified a disordered mind and gave it a consciousness distinct from the man afflicted.

Even if we could believe this, we could not believe that Jesus Christ Himself was either as ignorant as these men are represented to be, or else that, knowing the real facts, He willingly lent Himself to a lie that not only deceived those looking on, but also His own followers through all time.

We confess that there are many statements in the life of our Lord, given in the Gospels, that give rise to doubt in our mind when we test them by reason or experience, but we can the more readily believe all that we read there than that a man who was in all things the embodiment of truth, would make His hearers believe that lunacy was really the possession of demons, and would further deceive them by taking advantage of the sudden fright of a herd of swine plunging into the sea, in order to impose upon the ignorance of a simple people.

These scholars of the Modern School in explaining one wonder by a greater one, are certainly straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel.

HOW DO YOU KNOW WHAT A FRUIT TREE IS?

There can be but one answer to that question, so far as we know, and that answer is, we know the fruit tree by the fruit it bears. That is the teaching of Jesus as set forth in Matt. 7:16-20. By this standard we may know not only men, but institutions as well. Take the liquor business and the efforts they are now making to put the whiskey traffic back upon the people of the land, we shall get some idea of the character of the men who are working to put the curse back upon the people. They are bad men and this we know by the authority of the highest and best moral teacher who ever lived, that these men are bad men, and the proof of it is in the fact that the fruits of their labors are bad and only bad. On the other hand there is proof that Prohibition by the same principle, is good and because their fruits are good. That is what Jesus taught us concerning the tree that bears good fruit—We know it is good by the fruit it bears. Apply this idea to prohibition and its fruits are fine. One of our exchanges points out the fact prohibition is bearing good fruits, as it is shown in the following incident. Read it for yourself and be convinced that Prohibition brings only good fruits:

Fruits of Prohibition are seen in the West, where, it may be, they would not have been looked for. Every summer there are large numbers of laborers who go into the great harvest fields of that section of the country. As the harvest season advances up country, these laborers go from farm to farm. They are generally a rather rough class of men, living in very uncomfortable conditions. One who has been studying the situation says that there has been a wonderful improvement among them as has been shown on the trains on which they have gone west and returned. He says that during the past summer this was a perfectly orderly movement, while formerly these trains were like moving lunatic asylums. The difference, he says, is due to prohibition.

THE DEATH OF AN AMERICAN PRINCE.

A Republic does not make princes, but now and then the Lord makes a prince of a common man, if he has the right material in him, and that may happen in a Republic as well as in an Empire. And that kind of a man is the kind that makes a sure enough prince, a prince that is worth a bag full of men who are born princes, being fostered by royalty. We refer of course to John Wannamaker, the great merchant prince of Philadelphia, who passed away only recently, after a most fruitful life in many fields, but above them all in the cause of the Christ he loved and so faithfully served through a long life.

We recall an incident in his life and that of another leading man which was really a tribute to the individual worth of the great merchant. It was during the last illness of the late Hon. Samuel J. Randall, who, if we mistake not, was United States Senator from Pennsylvania while Mr. Wannamaker was Post Master General, Mr. Randall was ill and desired to be helped in the way of the Christian life. He did not send for his pastor, but for Mr. Wannamaker to become his spiritual adviser in his preparation for death. It will be remembered that Mr. Randall was a strong democrat, while Mr. Wannamaker was a strong republican, and yet in such a situation, Mr. Randall sent for Mr. Wannamaker to come and pray with him and otherwise lead him into peaceful relations with the King of kings and Lord of lords. This incident rests, not merely on a newspaper report, although it was from the newspaper report that we read it, but to make sure of its correctness, we wrote to Mr. Wannamaker and asked him if the report was correct, and he answered as humbly and as innocently as a child could have done it, saying, "Yes, it was true." This incident raises both men in the estimation of all good men, for the facts were a credit to both men, and especially was it a credit to Mr. Wannamaker to be called to minister in spiritual things to a man prominent in political circles and of a party opposite to the one in which the sick man was prominent. What a life Mr. Wannamaker must have lived in the sight of Samuel J. Randall to induce the great Political leader in the Democratic Party in a moment of illness to send for this leader in the Republican Party to minister to his spiritual life, and that when he was fast coming to the sunset of life. It is indeed a tribute to the life of the fallen merchant prince who early in the December days of this good year was called to his reward. Doubtless the two great opposing political leaders have met again ere this and where the beauty of the life eternal shuts out all thoughts of conflict and struggle in political life. John Wannamaker's life ought to be written by the most competent hand in all the circle of his wide acquaintance, for his life is full of lessons of great value to the young and the old, for to the very last he was a growing and useful man.

The Presbyterian of The South presents the leading traits in his long and useful and faithful life, as follows:

John Wannamaker, the merchant prince and the prince of God, has finished his work on earth. Last week he ended an earthly career that had extended over eighty-four years. Few men ever put as much even into a long life as he did. He had little to start on save a good character, energy, preseverance, faith and a determination to serve God and do good to his fellowmen. He started in business in a very small way. His business grew steadily and rapidly, until he became one of the largest business men in this country. In the development of his mercantile enterprises he introduced many new ideas, which were practically unknown before, but which are now commonly used by all first-class merchants. He gave very close attention to his business, but he always had time to attend to the Lord's business as well, and he did it faithfully. When he first opened his little store, which was the seed from which great trees have grown, he at once began to work for God by establishing a mission Sunday School. As his own business grew the Sunday School grew, until it became one of the largest in the country, and out of that grew a church, which has been noted not only for its size, but also for its efficiency in building up the kingdom of God. Mr. Wannamaker gave the church and Sunday School the same pains-taking care and laborious service, which he gave to his secular enterprises. When he undertook to serve his country as postmaster-general for four years, and had to spend most of his time in Washington, he never neglected his work for God. Every Saturday he returned to Philadelphia in order to superintend his big Sunday School and teach his big Bible class. His interests were never confined to his own affairs. He gave liberally of his time, his labor, his means, his love wherever they were needed. This country, the world, is better because he lived in it and served God faithfully.

THE REV. JOHN TAMKIN.

Rev. John Tamkin was born in London, England, July 1, 1832, and departed this life November 19, 1922, at the age of 90 years, 4 months, and 18 days. He served in the Crimean war in 1856, and also served in the Civil war in this country. For many years— about forty, I think— he taught school in various places in the Valley of Virginia, and in Hampshire County, W. Va. While yet a young man he entered the ministry, becoming a member of what was then the Virginia Central Christian Conference, and served various churches in that conference. For many years he was secretary of said conference. He was well educated and possessed a brilliant mind and ready wit. A remarkable thing about his physical make-up was the fact that although he was past 90 years of age he was able to read ordinary print by day or night without the aid of glasses. His wife died October 16, 1901, and was buried at Linville Creek Dunkard Church near Broadway, Va., her native community. He is survived by two sons and a daughter who live in Powell's Fort, and a daughter who lives in Clarksburg, W. Va. The last few years of his life were spent with his daughter in Clarksburg, and his ministry was then confined principally to the West Virginia Conference. His body was brought to Broadway, Va., and was buried by the side of his wife in the Linville Creek cemetery, November 21, 1922. Brief services were held at the grave by the writer. A sermon in his memory is to be preached at Dry Run in Powell's Fort first Sunday in January, 1923, at which place most of his relatives and many of his friends live.

THE SUN'S PULPIT

ENJOYING THE BIBLE.

By Rev. Edwin B. Florry,
Pastor First Christian Church Norfolk, Va.

Text: "Oh how I love thy law!"—Psalm 119: 97.

Christianity is a joyous religion and its Book is a book of joy. Though the Old Testament does not rise steadily upward in hope, yet it climbs from peak to peak, higher and still higher until it reaches the very summit of joy eternal in the New Testament. There, it is the very embodiment of joy supreme. It opens with the heavenly chorus singing to the Judean shepherds, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth, peace, goodwill to men."

If we follow the Master, we will hear him promising joy and peace to his followers, not as the world giveth but something infinitely finer and more precious. If we look about him we see the joyous faces of children with their natural happiness unrestrained. The men and women are glad in His presence while the sick, the halt and blind are leaping with gladness. If we follow the disciples after the Master's departure we will hear them singing in prison and rejoicing in martyrdom. No cave too dark or prison too cruel, no punishment too great or trial too severe but there is the radiance of heaven in their countenace. This Book closes with a new heaven and a new earth and the Heavenly chorus is singing again for the old world of misery is replaced with one of joy and gladness.

The Original Glad Book.

This Book of books is in reality the original Glad Book' of the world. It does not pretend there is no evil in the world, rather, it depicts and warns of the terrors of evil and wrong doing.

Nevertheless, its message is always of hope and joy. It does not assume any false optimism and soothe the feelings with the idea that all will come out all right. Instead, it warns of the difficulty and calls for some one to go carry gladness in the name of the Lord, God of Host. It is the source of true joy in that it rids the soul and the world of its misery and bids fear and woe flee away.

Christianity found a world in darkness and brought it light; in despair and gave it hope; in mourning by the side of many rivers and put a new song into men's hearts that they might take their harps from the willows and rejoice. It came out of hopeful, joyous hearts to make the heart of the whole world truly glad. This Book of joy unexcelled will make our hearts truly and eternally glad if we find it and give it a chance. We have done most everthing to the Book in late years and now we might give it a chance to do something for us. We have argued about it, we have tried to understand it, we have defended it or defiled it, we have searched it for proof of our chosen theory and what not, but this is a plea that we enjoy the Bible.

A Lost Book.

Yet to many people this is a lost Book. True, it is on their library table but it is a lost book. It has been lost many times and every time that it has been found by any man or people, it has refreshed the earth, bringing unspeakable joy and gladness. Its discovery has changed the thinking and action of every people that have found it. The story within the book of its being lost and found, is the story of the Bible as a whole. What irony in that story that the book of the law should be lost in the temple itself.

Yet no more than that the Bible has been lost to the home or to the church within its very walls. After the first century when the Book was in the Greek language, the common people became strangers to it for they no longer understood this classical tongue.

The natural desire of any people to reverence the form rather than the spirit, the wiles of the priest who for the sake of defending the Holy Book against any possible desecration and that ever present desire for profit which seems to be natural temptation to priests, kept the book in an unknown language.

Under the appeal of "What we have always had" and the cry of alarm "The Sacred Book" of the original Greek form, the Bible became a lost book. The people spoke Latin and the Book was indeed Greek to them.

Not until the year 400 was there an authoritative translation, when Jerome, against a storm of protest, gave forth his Latin version. And then for nearly a thousand years this version is supreme while gradually the language of the common people was shifting to other than Latin. But there arose the same old-line arguments from the fearful and everpresent "stand patters," that the Bible was too sacred for the vulgar crowd. The very text itself became holy and it was the common feeling that the Book should not be made cheap and common by being translated into the language of the common people. It deserved a royal garment, and that garment was the sacred Latin which a few centuries before had been too cheap and common even so that the vision itself has carried the stain in its very name, the Vulgate. The conservatives seemed to have no sense of humor, but strove to keep the book from being found. It, by its hidden pages, had become the bulwark of Kings and Despots and Injustice. The Dark ages needed but its radiance to have disappeared.

But the Book was destined to be found again in joy by the people. A new version in a vulgar tongue was steadily making its way through martyrdom. How queer that this book of freedom and joy should bring suffering to its lovers. Its pages always bring abundant life to those who read lovingly. The story of its translation and absorption into the life of the English people is the heart of the history of liberty of the English people from the bondage of Kings and priests.

Lost in Worship.

Love has been accused of being blind and the extreme worship of the Bible which took place of authority once held by the church itself before the reformation, now is a detriment to place in the minds of the people and the Protestant perhaps unawares worshiped the Book itself. It became a fetish and charm, a thing of magical power to be adored and reverenced, yet to be miserably neglected and not understood, to be forgotton and not enjoyed. Somebody by the wayside once gave Jesus profuse praise by calling out "Blessed is the woman that gave you birth." and we hear Him reply, "Blessed are ye if ye do the will of the Father." So would we remind those of past or present who would lose the Bible in Worship, "Blessed are ye if ye know the joy."

It is indeed the first book in the hearts of the people and shall never be given second place, yet it is not worship that the book asks for at all. To be worshipped it will be lost and the worshipper becomes an idolator. It stands helpless like a prisoner bound by such worship. It needs to be released from such poor blind love and be given its freedom, to bring joy to all the appreciative hearts that will devoutly read its pages and keep its commandments, walking in the light it sheds, and following its truth unto life eternal.

Lost in Study.

In these days we know more about the Book than ever before. We are in the happy possession of the story of its composition and the lives of its writers. We desire that every child shall soon know its literature and be taught the historical setting and be intimately acquainted with its authors and its chief characters.

That is a promise day in Bible study and we shall pray and plead for the most thorough study of the Bible, knowing fully that it needs no defense, but rather our sympathetic and persistant study and appreciation. Yet indeed there is danger in too much study and undue familiarity has bred contempt among some, because they made it their chief aim to study the Book as a book and delighted chiefly that they know its mechanical make up, dates and the very smallest detail of its structure. But first of all let us enjoy the Book as a book of life and make all our study to contribute to that end. Not that we shall be so foolish as to think that the Book is too sacred for study. It is not yet we dare not stop at understanding the Bible. Its less message to the head and no head has as yet outrun its pages but its first message is to the hearts of men. It is a Book of life and joy shall be known by its intelligent lovers who spend much time in its presence.

There is a possibility that the Botanist in his eagerness for knowledge of the construction of a flower shall take it apart and revel in its pieces, being able to admire each part and tell us marvelous tales of its make-up and its life, and in his enthusiasm lose his apprenciation for the rose itself.

Such study ought to make every student of botany more appreciative of roses for we must remember they are made for fragrance and beauty and all our dissection must add to our appreciation.

This is not a plea for less study of the Bible but rather more. It would be rather embarrassing if any one should find this message a defense for blind worship of his Bible. So many, many times the worst enemies of the Book have been those who professed to be its best friends and defenders. This book can stand all the inspection anyone can give it. If not, then it is unworthy of being the Book of life. I am not afraid for its life nor its future. There is nothing in it that needs to be hidden lest somebody find it out and expose it.

But to everyone who studies the book there must be more to them than the very finest knowledge of its construction, dates, and authors.

Though this Book has invited the most severe study of the best students and bids even now for the keenest minds to wrestle with its truths yet it needs to be to us a message of joy to our hearts releasing us from sin and ignorance and fear. It was written by great and burning hearts from sunrise to sunset with it we will discover that our hearts will burn within us. It does make a most worthy appeal to the intellect yet its very life is poured out its desire to give eternal joy and peace to its readers.

Its Themes.

The Bible can fully qualify as the great "Glad" Book of the world for wherever and whenever its pages are opened to men and nations, there arises hope, faith, peace, joy against which there is no law. Morley says "Great literature consists of all the books and they are not so many, where moral truth and human passion are touched with a certain largeness, sanity and attractiveness of form" and our Bible meets these requirements sufficiently for it to be properly called the Greatest English Classic. But it is even more, for its power is something even finer and more exquisite than great literature. The joy of this Book is not that of superficial happiness and it gives a very small place to humor, as it deals seriously with the great truths of life. No abiding book can use small ideas in its construction. To live it must dwell on things eternal.

The thoughts of the Bible are upon the highest and noblest, the deepest and most profound, the broadest and most inclusive things of all life. It has taken the wings of the morning and gone to the uttermost parts of the earth; it has ascended up into the heavens and looked into the face of God; it has descended into the very Hell of human misery, sin, and woe; it has searched the human heart and found its weakness and strength, its sin and for it divine salvation.

Its themes are as big as life itself and upon its lips are the words of eternal life. It talks of, with and for God. It considers man, his life and destiny, his faith and hope, his sin and salvation, his heaven and his hell, his relation to man and his responsibility to God. And all of these themes it touches with a certain largeness and sanity. It is not hopeless portrayal of man's weakness and failures but abounds joy and life for it has discovered the solution for man's woes. It has found God whom to know aright is life eternal. Though heaven and earth shall pass away, yet its joy shall not pass from the heart that has found God in its pages.

It's Attractiveness.

It has dealt with these themes not in any crude or shoddy manner but our English Bible stands as the most attractive work in our language. It has indeed arrayed the truth in most beautiful and becoming garments, not hiding the truth in the garments but revealing the truth by the garments. The joy of the beautiful must come to the reader as well as the joy of truth itself. The makers of this English translation came in a day when the English language was in full bloom and much of that fragrance and beauty will be found on the pages of this blessed book. It is not ornate and heavy, but in the chaste and pure Anglo-Saxon. These translators, to their everlasting glory, left creed and prejudice behind and came together to give the Bible to the common people. It was not written in the language of learned nor in slang of the street but in the best for the people. The Translators desired that it should become the Bread of Life to the hungry, and expectant people and that all might take freely and be refreshed. In such a spirit these men gave to the world this matchless Book in the most beautiful and simple English. It is indeed a work of art from the hands and hearts of artists. And works of real art are for the soul itself. And with what joy we may place this beautiful language with its eternal themes in the hands of our children or before the minds of our nation, and anxiously send to every nation.

It's Passion.

But there is a deeper source of joy then in its eternal truth and sublime beauty of form and that is in its burning passion for God by men and greater still the divine passion of God for men. A book might deal with great themes in the most ornate and beautiful style and yet be a ponderous dead thing. It is the Bible's throbbing message of the heart of man and the supreme love of God Himself that makes it vital. This book came from a people who were known for their passionate love of their God. The Greek loved his Wisdom and the Roman his State but the Hebrew excelled in his love for Jehovah. "As the heart panteth after the waterbrooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." The very name of God filled him with the deepest devotion and the most tender leve.

Our hearts grow tender with the thoughts of our sweetest word "Mother." It contains for us deep affection and the fondest of heart ties. A man told me the other day that though his mother died when he was five and he now was seventy yet his memory of her had never faded and the years had but glorified her love. Thus the Hebrew spoke in the same tender compassion of God. "When my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up.

We are stirred with patriotism at the sight of our national emblem and our native land is very precious to us. I stood beside a Southerner who was witnessing his first Decoration day parade in a Yankee city. He made various comments upon the procession but it was to him a matter of curiosity until just below him the band began to play "Dixie." Instantly his indifference changed into burning enthusiasm and he swung his hat out of the window and cried "Now your playin!" And that which stirred the Hebrew to burning zeal was the name of the Lord. "The Lord of Hosts is with US."

There is still another sort of passion known among men as one of the mightest and this is well represented in the fanatical zeal of the Mohammedan for Aliah and the prophet. But the Hebrew stood steadfast in the midst of persecution and scorn, in the face of idolatrous nations and tides of immigration of new ideas of other civilizations and whatever new was accepted, yet his deepest passion was for the God of Abraham, of Issac, and of Jacob.

Such was the passion of the people from whom came the writers of this book. It is no dead and inert thing but breathing and throbbing with love for God and compassion for men. The prophets were aglow with emotion for righteousness and their words are white with the heat from off the altar of devotion. Jesus comes with most intense love for God so that he taught us the word "Father." It is forever on his lips and with what perfect confidence he speaks this precious word. Jerusalem brings tears to his heart and the multitude burdened him. The cross is his sign of passion for men.

And Paul, his sayings are not wise proverbs or profound arguments but rather the passionate words of one who had learned to love the Lord and the center of all his thinking and writing is Jesus Christ. "It is not I, that liveth, but Christ that liveth in me."

His praise of Christ is comparable and his devotion matchless. For Christ he did all things, suffered all things and at last joyously, enthusiastically died for Him. He is most of all an ardent lover of Christ and all that he wrote burns with such love. His letters are great passionate love messages.

This Bible intends to stir the deepest emotions of the heart as well as the profoundest thoughts of the mind and with this double power it goes out to conquer the world. It is a living book and he who handles it will feel its heart throbbing with love for men and devotion to God. It is hot with indignation and hatred of sin and tender in its wooing for lost men.

How to Enjoy The Book.

By study? Yes, by all means get better acquainted with its writers and the problems that they faced. Be sure to appreciate its literature and its breadth of vision and never let our adoration become blind-love or even idolatrous worship, making of it a fetish, but pour out our finest and best of mental ability on its pages. Yet such study is not enough. We need to sit much and long as well as intelligently in its presence. A friend of mine visited St. Peter's Cathedral and went in to see the Transfiguration. He sat there for an hour when in rushed a company of nervous tourists who were getting their sightseeing by the ton. They looked about awkwardly and boldly asking superficial questions, listening to the comments of the guide and then went out believing that they had seen the Transfiguration. They had not. Having eyes they saw not for such seeing takes time and love and understanding. This Bible is the great work of art of the human heart and no rushing in careless to the book of Isaiah or the chance opening of its pages to Psalms and then rushing out will reveal its power to any soul. A man said to me the other day in reference to a certain part of the Bible "Why, I read that once." True enough and having eyes saw not and having ears heard not its message or beauty. We must go in and sit down long and often and with hearts open with great love and then we may see and hear.

When It is Read.

We shall keep silent and listen with appreciation. Now all too often we preachers pick out anything for the scripture lesson and read it without careful preparation of voice and spirit and the people,—how little they listen to its message. They hardly know what we have read. They move about, the ushers seat them, they listen so indifferently and we need to confess that our sermons will return, to the dust of which they so often partake liberally, very soon, but this book hath eternal life. It is of more value than many sermons and our people need to know the joy of hearing and knowing its precious words. Our children need to hear us read its glorious words to them. The Mohammedan fills himself with fervor by reading aloud the pages of so poor a thing as the Koran. How much more than shall the words of this book thrill the hearts of our children, if they hear them.

Once it was the only book of the people and they read it with joy. And how wonderful it will be when it again assumes the place of being THE ONLY book of the people in this day when of the making of books there is no end. Though we as a nation have flung aside everything that seems to beset our greediness for pleasure, we need discover the real joy which can come from living our best as found in the best Book the world has ever known. We are in desperate need of true joy, not that which is found in idle pleasure or miserable selfishness nor the doubtful pastime of reading our multitude of cheap papers but rather to give our souls a chance with this Book. It will take much care lest we let the good things rob us of the best things, and this is the best Book known to the world. We must have its faith, hope and love; we must find its salvation, from sin and we must travel its yoyous road to heaven. We need now to give to the world, beauty for ashes, as found in the Book of life. It is not what we know about the book but what we actually possess of the Book that shall bring us joy. It speaks to the heart and with heart we must listen, until we can say, "Oh, how I love thy law."

ARE THE JEWS TO BE RESTORED TO THEIR LAND, AND BE CONVERTED TO CHRISTIANITY?

By A. C. Fellman.

Chapter I.

God has foretold that He intends to gather back His ancient people to their own land. While the Christians profess to take their belief from the Bible about future events, they differ widely as to what the Bible says. How is this? It is because men take the true and faithful words of the Almighty God and subject them to a process of mashing, boiling and condensing till a spirit is obtained. One judicious writer has well said, "There is nothing so dangerous as this licentious and deluding art of spiritualizing, which changes the meaning of words as alchemy doth, or would, the substance of metals, making anything what it pleases, and bringing in the end, all things to nothing." Prof. Stuart has justly stated "That it is one of the plainest and most cogent of all the rules of hermeneutics that every passage of Scripture, or of any other book, is to be understood as bearing its plain and primary literal sense, unless a good reason can be given why it should be understood otherwise."

Their system of interpretation which they have adopted assigns to the Jews the special evils pronounced against them, and melts away or transfers to the Gentile Church all God's special promised blessings to the Jews. His word declares," For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict, so will I watch over them, to build and to plant, saith the Lord.—Jer. 31:28. Jer. 32:42.

Many Christian writers have supposed that the Jews will be converted to Christ in their present dispersed state by the usual means of grace and then be mixed and lost with the body of Christians, so that they will be no longer a distinct people. Others are of the opinion that they will be converted in their present state among the nations, and after that, return to their land and be preserved a distinct people. There are many who believe the true Scriptural teaching that the nation will return to their own land before their conversion,—that a remnant will be converted who will not return with the nation, but afterwards will be carried "as a present unto the Lord of Hosts of a people scattered and peeled, a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the Lord of Hosts, the Mount of Zion." —Isa. 18:7.

That the nation will be converted in a remarkable manner, as was the Apostle Paul, beholding the Lord Christ. The conclusion of the history of Israel will be by a direct interference of God and manifested to the whole world as supernatural and divine. "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off. He that scattered Israel will gather him and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock."—Jer. 31:10.

It is also said by some writers that the New Testament is silent in regard to the restoration of the Jews. We know that such statements are false, and are prepared to show that the New Testament says more than the Old Testament on this subject. There is one passage in the New Testament which says as much as the entire Old Testament upon the restoration of Israel, viz,.—Acts 3:19-21. The words of Christ. "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," marks clearly a limited period, otherwise it cannot be said to be fulfilled. The Jews will be restored, Jerusalem, rebuilt, and be no longer trodden down, when the "times of the Gentiles" will close. In Acts 1:6-7, implies a restoration of the Jews, though the time of the restoration is not revealed. Acts 15: 13-17 clearly states and declares the order of dispensations; (1) God did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name. (2) "After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David, and I will build the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." (3) "And I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel."—Acts 15:16-17, with Amos 9: 11-14. "And I will plant them upon their land." Here is a literal national restoration to their own land, referred to in the New Testament when it says "To this agrees the words of the Prophet." (4) The object of the restoration and conversion of Israel is that the whole world may be converted to God ," that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called." In Romans 11, 25-29, the Apostle is very clear on the restoration of Israel. (1) Their restoration is entertained in Romans 11-12. (2) Their restoration is argued in verses 16, 23-24. (2) Their restoration is dated in 25. (4) Their restoration is grounded in 28. The fact that the nation was cut off and is to be grafted on again, is ABSOLUTE PROOF of the restoration of the Jews as a nation to their old estate.

The Zionist Movement.

The Jewish national organization is the Zionist Movement, which was founded at the first Zionist Congress in Basil, Switzerland, August 28, 1897. The Congress solemnly proclaimed to the world that the Jews are a nation, and formulated its endeavors in the following program:

"The aim of Zionism is to create for the Jewish people a publicly recognized, legally secured home in Palestine, upon a national basis of its own." In order to obtain this object, the Congress adopted the following means:

(1) To promote the settlement in Palestine of Jewish agriculturists, handicraftsmen, industrialists and men following professions.

(2) To centralize the Jewish people by means of general institutions.

(3) To strengthen Jewish sentiment and national self-consciousness.

(4) To obtain the sanction of governments necessary for the carrying out of the objects of Zionism.

There are now in all civilized countries in the world Zionist organizations supporting the movement for the regeneration of the Jewish people, as a nation. The capture of Jerusalem brought joy to many Jews throughout the world. To the reformed Jew, it was unpleasant news, for they are opposed to Zionism, and resent their attempt of re-establishing the Jews a nation in their own land. In America, the Jews feel that Zionism, if carried out, would stir up their own nests. They wish to be regarded as Americans and call America, their Zion, but God says: "That which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the nations, as the families of the countries to serve wood and stone. As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you, and I will bring you out from the people and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand and a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out."—Ezek.20;32-34. Since the capture of Jerusalem, it has aroused the Jews all over the world to co-labor with the aim of the Zionist movement, those who previously have held back from it. The time has come, through the fortunes of war, when Israel is coming to his former inheritance. The Jews will soon occupy their own land, Judea, and Palestine will again blossom as the rose and bloom as the lily of the valley. Jerusalem will again become a great center in the world. Many striking prophecies are now being fulfilled. "And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations."—Isa. 61;4. Already within the recent years a new civilization has come over Palestine. There has been more development in the last fifty years, than in the preceeding thousand. Great numbers of the Jews have gathered there and are preparing the land for the great national restoration. Houses are being build, the waste cities are being repaired, the land is being cultivated, and vineyards and olive orchards planted. Schools and colleges have been established. Plans have been laid to raise a great fund throughout the world of a hundred million dollars, to place the new state on a firm foundation. Thus the way is being prepared for the Jews to go back to Palestine. How many will return, cannot be known. At first it will be a restoration in unbelief before the Lord comes. God states that when He assembles and gathers the Jews, that "their King shall pass before them." "The Lord will go before them, and the God of Israel will be their reward."—Micah 2;12,13. Isa. 52:12. Christ comes before the general restoration of the Jews.

Thoughtful people have noted this, and many Jews and Gentiles have been led to search the Scriptures to see what the prophets have foretold. That there is to be a restoration of the Jews to their own land, no one who reads the Word of God can deny. The world has not yet seen the last wonder in the history of this wonderful people. As they have been for centuries a wonder under divine wrath, so they are to be, and more conspiciously than ever, a wonder of divine grace.

ELON LETTER.

The Elon Letter this week deserves a careful reading. It contains a message of cheer and happiness for all who love our cause. I can say this without fear of being charged with seeking personal praise.

Thanks to the liberal-hearted of our Brotherhood and to the blessings of God, it has been my joy to see our people give liberally and largely, even more liberally and more largely for Christian Education in our church during the past twelve years. The response to the Special Fund, to the Alumni Fund, to the Standardization Fund, to men and millions has been beautiful and exhilarating.

The Christian Church in the South is certainly growing in liberality. For the Special Fund Dr. Moffitt had a hard pull to find ten persons to give a $1,000 each. When Brother J. M. Darden gave $5,000 for missions, a new day had dawned in our church and every heart rejoiced. During the Standardization Fund Campaign twenty-one were found willing to give $5,000 each and one hundred and one a thousand each for that gripping cause. Again every heart rejoiced, and again we took courage, giving God thanks for the enlarging life that evidently lay immediately ahead for our work.

Hon. F. A. Palmer, a member of our church in the North, had given Elon in all $30,000, just as he did to three other of our colleges, and Mr. W. F. Corwith of Brooklyn $10,000. But the largest single gift by a member of our Southern Christian Church up to December 31, 1922, was $5,000.

January 1, 1923, I devoutly believe presages a new day for our work and for the Kingdom through us, for on this day the Carlton family of Richmond, Va., gave $25,000 in cash to the general endownment fund of Elon College, in memory of Mrs. J. W. Carlton, wife and mother in this Christian home. Brother J. W. Carlton, the head of the family, and his four children, P. J. Carlton, Trustee of Elon, L. E. Carlton, Herbert Carlton, and Mrs. T. S. Parrott (nee Miss Nannie Carlton) certainly have presented the Christian Church by this magnanimous gift with the occasion of great rejoicing and genuine thanksgiving.

Another cause for rejoicing is that this gift came out of generous hearts and not as the result of high pressure methods of persuasion. In Richmond last June, I incidentally laid on the heart of Brother P. J. Carlton the needs of our College. In November, at the laying of the corner stone of the First Christian Church of Richmond, this great-hearted layman and man of big business stepped up to me and informed me that "$25,000 will be available on January 1st for Elon, and payable within ninety days thereafter." I am not sure what I said in my corner-stone speech following this heartening announcement, but I could see a rainbow of hope athwart the clouds that hovered over us in the open—a rainbow of hope and good cheer for the Christian Church in the years yet unborn. I saw visions and dreamed dreams. Behold all things that day became new for our beloved Zion, as I contemplated this magnanimous gift.

The Carlton family and the Farmer family. Mrs. Carlton (in whose memory, as has been said, this princely sum is given) being a Farmer before her marriage, have been the strength of our cause in Halifax County, Virginia, in Pleasant Grove and Ingram Churches. This family too is devoted in a rare spirit to our new enterprise in Richmond. The members of this choice family circle combine two often dissociated gifts—business ability and consecration of life to the interests of the Kingdom. This was especially true of the late E. S. Carlton, the eldest son of the family group, who climbed to the presidency of The Imperial Tobacco Co. because of his rare talent in business and his fine organizational ability. Devoutly should we give thanks for such a group of the King's servants in our ranks and with equal devoutness pray that God may raise up other such groups for the promotion of His cause through our Brotherhood. God bless the Carlton family and make them a continuous blessing! How beutifully they have begun the New Year for our beloved church!

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

The year 1922 is history. It is a finished book. The contents of its pages cannot be changed. "What I have written, I have written." Time cannot erase records that have been made during the year. The record will face us in judgment. But the past year does not constitute the only book in the great volume of life. Other records will be made. But the records of yesterday and today will determine in large measure the record to tomorrow. The proper use of yesterday will produce in the mind of man the proper conception of today and the right conception of today will awaken in the heart and mind of man the fondest hopes and keenest anticipations of tomorrow.

As we stand upon the threshhold of a new year, we should not look back with tear-dimed eyes upon the mistakes and failures of the past any more than it is necessary. But it is necessary to review the past to the extent that we seriously reflect upon our mistakes, seek forgiveness for them and resolve to improve upon them. We may obtain wisdom from our mistakes and inspiration and encouragement from our achievements. In his struggles, man needs the inspiration that eminates from serious reflection upon the great events and glorious experiences of life. Although the past may be worthy of reflection because of its hallowed and happy experiences, man must not live in the past, for "Sorrow's crown of sorrows is remembering happier things."

It is impossible to forecast the blessings or the tragedies that the coming year has in store for us. But our ignorance of these things will not lessen their effect upon our lives. The uncertainty of the future should not throw us into a panic. It is an indispensable factor in life. We should enter upon the new year with a new vision and a new hope. The future is a gift from God. It is a sacred stewardship and God is sensitive about the way we use it.

We should use considerable reservation in making ourselves promises for this year. We are apt to make many promises that we cannot fulfill. In justice to ourselves, in justice to those about us, and in justice to God, we should refrain from making too many promises to ourselves. The new year offers an opportunity to make promises and resolutions and these resolutions are usually so framed as to be productive of our interest. This is a temptation which should be avoided. Remember that the year just ahead of us is in the hand of God and all of our promises should be made to Him.

Within a few weeks the people of our church are going to be asked to give and pledge money to help build Bethlehem College. It should be borne in mind that whatever amount is given or pledged will be given as unto God and not man. The chief business of man is not to build new barns and pile up goods, but to ply with fortitude and faith the best methods of preparation for the future. To make it possible for young men and women to secure an education under the proper Christian influence is to render a service that cannot be adequately estimated this side of eternity.

R. F. Brown.

BROTHER ABE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PASTOR.

Dear Brother:—

I haste to write that I may endeavor to get you to correct a very serious impression which you made at your last preaching service. I was so sorry to hear about it, and was sorely grieved to know that you acted and spoke as you did. I was hoping better things of you, as you had a new pastor, and that you would join him wholeheartedly in every good work of your church. But, alas, like the dog turning to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire; so you are walking in your old ways again. You need not squirm, nor explain, nor say a word. I know I heard the truth about you; for I know you. I can not only analyze your word, but also your mind and heart. You are altogether wrong in what you said and did. You are full of error and suspicion, and unless I can set you right again, your church will be to you a burden instead of a blessing.

Now it happened that your pastor, obeyed to the reasonable request of his conference, set forth in a sermon in a very clear and logical manner the Men and Millions Movement He showed, to the delight of the large congregation, how this movement had been a blessing to our church; how it had made glad the hearts of our missionaries by increased appropriations so that more workers could be added; how life-recruits had placed themselves on God's altar, and how, by this movement, we were educating in our college more men and women for the ministry and the mission field than ever before; how we were increasing our efficiency in our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, and how we were pushing our way up into the mountains and building churches there; how we were drying the tears of orphan children, and making it possible for them to have a chance in life; how our Christian Sun might continue to shine, even though the price of paper kept soaring upward; how our aged ministers and their widows were receiving a competency in the evening of life from a grateful church for glorious service, instead of a mere pittance; how that, by and through this movement, we were expressing to the world the revelation which Peter had: "Than art the Christ the son of the living God." It was a wonderful sermon, And, after the benediction, there were many who expressed themselves as glad, and assured him they were going to pay their pledges as soon as they could. The pastor never felt better in his life. He smiled, and he smiled, and said: "Thank you! Thank you!" as he shook glad hands, hurried to his car, and was soon out of sight, and on his way to the next appointment.

But hardly had the sound of the motor died away when you (after you enquired about the price of pork and cotton) began to talk. And such talking! Here is what you said:

"Fellows, it looks sorter like the preacher we've got now is just about like the one we had before. I am awful tired of hearing about movements. And I happened to know something about this movement that none of you know. I would have replied to the preacher this morning, if it had not been that he was new. If he repeats it again, you'll hear from the old man Abe. 'Boys,' and here you gesticulated with both hands, I take THE SUN. I know what I am talking about. I've got proof (you put emphasis on proof). Three-fourths of the money we send away from this church goes to Germany. John King says so! He is a layman, not a preacher; and he told us not to send any more money over there. He went over there to find out; and, believe me he found out, just what I've always believed. And here is one that's going to do what John King says!"

You have no idea, Bro. Abe, how that speech hurt my heart. There are three things about it to which I wish to call your attention: First, the influence for evil which it may cause; second, your inability to come to truth; and thirdly, that you are still a man with strong prejudice and pre-conceived ideas. I know you were honest in your intentions, and that you thought you were right. But thinking you are right does not make you so. Paul thought he was right when he persecuted the church.

Now, the lesson I would have you learn is, How to come to the truth. There isn't anything that will give you greater joy than to find truth; and your speech shows that you have this lesson to learn. In the first place you are a very shallow and superficial reader. Brother King never said what you said that he said. You have slandered him. What he said was that we should send our money through the regular channels of our church. Brother King gave a very interesting address to our people in Windsor, and he lamented the fact that you had misunderstood him. He is an ardent supporter of our Men and Millions Movement; and he seemed so surprised that any intelligent person should have gotton such an impression from his articles. Just read his letter again, and I am sure you will be convinced. I know, too, that you will be sorry you made such a mistake. As a penalty for this mistake and as a preventative against future mistakes, I suggest you memorize the following lines from Pope:

"A little learning is a dangerous thing,
Drink deep, or touch not Pyerian Spring,
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely, sobers us again."

But your greatest trouble, Bro. Abe, is that you have pre-conceived ideas about things especially about the church, and these always keep you from the truth. When you read anything, you read your own ideas into it. You need to be very careful here; and in order that you may see how ridiculous you constantly make yourself, and that you be careful in the future, I am going to relate to you a very embarrassing circumstance which happened to one of our best known ministers, Rev. G. R. Underwood: I almost fear to tell it, lest I offend him. And I would not do this for anything in the world, for I have always loved him, besides he was once my pastor, and he conducted the funeral of both my parents. I hope he will not seriously object, as it so well illustrates the point I would have you observe. Sometimes Bro. Underwood has a preconceived idea of things which are wrong. Remember I said, sometimes. And you can see that it makes no difference who it is, whenever they are so possessed, it is the hardest thing in the world to convince them that they are wrong.

Now, it happened while I was on my vacation from Porto Rico that Bro. Underwood visited my father while I was present. The subject of conversation, naturally, was about Porto Rico. Bro. Underwood had a pre-conceived idea that everybody there had a mixture of African blood. I objected to this, and undertook to convince him that there were many in whom no trace of such mixture could be found. But saying so, and having been there, would not convince him that he was wrong. Well, after a considerable time and a change of conversation, I remembered that I had a photograph of Rafael Hernandez and myself, taken together. I have always thought that the photographer must have done me a great injustice, but the picture of Rafael was good. I presented this picture to Bro. Underwood, and pointed out that Rafael was our native preacher. Here his great love for our church asserted itself, and the fine thing he said about him, I need not relate. I then pointed out myself in the picture, and said: "What do you think of this one?" He paused a moment and said: "Well, he certainly shows he has the negro in him." I laughed aloud, and told him that that man boasted of as pure Anglo Saxon ancestry as he could claim, that he must have a pre-conceived idea, that I knew that person to be a white man. Once more he scrutinized the picture, and remarked: "You are mistaken; he has African blood in him, I can see it in his lips." When I told him that it was my picture, he said nothing. There is much he might have said: He could have brought down condemnation upon the photographer; or he could have said, "I am getting old, and my eyes are dim;" or he could have said: "I have a pre-conceived idea about Porto Ricans, and have things mixed up." But he said nothing. I do not know till this day that he has been convinced. One thing I know is, that it is very embarrassing to him. I remember when we were together at Seagrove, N. C., a few years ago and organized the church, that one night it so happened that we had to share the same bed. And I could not help remarking: "Well, my brother, there is one thing that you do that I don't, you will sleep with a negro, but I won't."

Now, I can almost hear you say, Bro. Abe, that you would never have gotton into such a predicament, and I hardly believe you would. Yet you went to your church Sunday with your mind full of suspicion and preconceived ideas. Bro. King's letter proves it. You thought you were right; now you know you were wrong. What can you do? Make the wrong right. Go back to your church and show those same "fellows" that you have repented by paying your pledge.

Sincerely,

T. E. WHITE,

Windsor, Va. 12-22-'22.

OUR CHAPLAIN WITH THE MARINES IN HAITI.

(His Official Duties.)

MY PARISH.

In the military service the Chaplain has charge of all religious work and all libraries in his organization, and such other duties as may be assigned to him. In Haiti the duties consist of a general supervision of all these in the entire Brigade including the work of the Chaplain of the Second Regiment at Cape Haitien as well as the organizations of the Brigade in the Vicinity of Port au Prince and those of the Regiment to which he is attached; and in addition to this he is also detailed as Regimental Morale Officer which duties involve all entertainment, and athletics of the Regiment.

LIBRARIES.

Let me speak of the Libraries first. These consist of about six thousand volumns which are to be made available to about fifteen hundred men scattered over the Southern part of Haiti, in organizations from three to sixty miles apart and in numbers ranging from forty to three hundred. This requires a circulation of books throughout all the camps and organizations and with frequent turn over to meet the demand of reading. These men read a great deal and their knowledge of books puts me to shame sometimes for I never get time to do professional reading but little, much less fiction. Notwithstanding, if I am to take advantage of my opportunity to direct men's reading, my knowledge of books, both modern and classical, must certainly go ahead of them and I find that it is considerably taxing to meet this requirement.

We are continually replenishing our shelves with new books by the hundreds, and at the same time surveying all obsolete ones and those worn to an extent so as to be unfit for further use. This involves a mass of clerical work not only to put them upon the shelves and have them catalogued but to properly account for all. It is no small matter to be responsible for all these books and, of course, it is an impossible job without the proper assistance.

Our library is classified as most others are and our system of records is also the same. Men of ambition may advance in their education by the technical, and it is the Chaplain's duty to assist any one who may need him to help fill up the gaps of his training. This affords an interesting and direct contact in developing reading taste, which covers a length from the drawing up on a pedigree to an appreciation of the classics.

DAILY CONTACT.

When the new drafts come in, consisting mainly of "boots" (recruits), experience has taught the Chaplain to be on the job, and, with all assembled, he gets in on the ground floor of their experience and without mincing matters speaks to them about their moral conduct, warns them of the temptations and dangers and tries to appeal to their conscience and pride. Separated from home influences and far away in a strange land where restraint is at a minimum, it is something to them to live worthy of the noblest ideals and to honor their mothers who gave them birth. The importance of religion is urged as being necessary to the making of the best soldier, and it is made plain that religious principles find expression in every act of life, and then they are dismissed. After that, from month to month he touches elbows with them and knows their slightest delinquencies, and in these he may show his own care by letting them know that he expects better conduct of them. Once he has gained their confidence, his office is often a rendezvous for men who seek his advice in their personal matters. This affords another opportunity of contact which may be met only by his wisdom and good judgment.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

My duties every Sabbath consist of holding Divine service at the following stations: Aviation, Field Hospital, Marine Barracks, Pont Bendet, Motor Transport unit, Sunday School at the Marine Barracks for the children of officers and others of the American occupation,

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

EACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

direct a song service in the evening and deliver an address. To make such a program possible, I preach the same sermon at every place and my address consists of current events gathered from magazines and papers together with comments emphasizing the moral and religious point of view, but not infrequently I devote an entire address to a religious topic such as "Why Believe in God," or "Why Believe in the Church," etc. These addresses are usually prefaced and interspersed with jokes and a little fun-making.

It is not hard to preach to these "Guys." Once the point of contrast is established, their minds are found to be very susceptible. How hard it is to minister to mixed audiences which include men, women and children; peddlers, ditchers and brakemen; laborers, loungers and loose, liberal and lustrous lives; merchants, lawyers and jurist; to undertake to speak to all these at once with a force that reaches all is a collossal undertaking. No wonder a preacher "Hollers" sometimes. Like my friend who spent his Saturday fishing; on Monday morning when he was asked what he was "Hollering" about last night, replied, "I was in distress. My fish sermon didn't work."

How often the pastor observes from his pulpit, the millennium twist, the nod of approval, the cringe of shocked nerves when some gramatical error or some unguarded and unrefined expression has been made, the air of indifference assumed when stating something that is misunderstood, the sleeping of the tired one and the humor of his fading eyes; all these he may see at a glance; were it not for the others,—the faithful, prayerful, receptive believers and followers, the poor fellow would be terrified and perhaps give up.

One never realizes these things so fully until he stands before voluntary audiences of soldiers and sailors, all of whom are much of the same age and experience, who never seem to have a critical thought and never go to sleep in the pew. One suddenly finds himself endeavoring to suit his words to their needs in a most straighforward sort of way. A virile Gospel presented to virile men in a most virile sort of way, seems to be the way.

It is true that a military organization is not a religious one. They are organized to fight and every thing is done to make them efficient at this. They are trained to fight and drilled daily in the fighting spirit. There is nothing about it that is Christlike or conducive to Christianity; and, with no place to call church or to hold church services except in the quarters, the mess hall, or in the recreational hall with the pool table as an altar; or perhaps out in the open in God's temple beneath the dome of the skies lighted by the moon and the stars, large crowds are certainly infrequent; and yet, with the few who do attend, one never feels half so neglected as when he was a pastor he looked out over a spanse of church furniture and empty pews and knew that his church roll numbered hundreds who should fill them.

Last month, in order to reach as many as possible, I held twenty-seven different services with a total attendance of six hundred and fifty-seven. I delivered five different addresses to an attendance of nine hundred and fifty. This attendance is a bit below the normal but it is a safe average and it represents a regular-going constituency. As such they are not angels by any means, but they are not a heathen lot at that. They are not sinless by any means, but their sins are men's sins growing out of untrained childhood, exuberant animalism, bouyant youth, a false understanding of life, and not out of hypocrasies. There is nothing of the "Whited sepulchre" about them.

All of these men may be included in the age from eighteen to twenty five, with a few exceptions who are older, and many of them are in the service because they have been hard to handle at home, or they have revolted against school restraint, or they have objected to the prosaic and unromantic toil of the farm and parental discipline. The soldier's life appealed to them,—for to be able to travel, get experience and eat three meals a day (even if it is only beans sometimes), have a place to sleep and draw regular pay is thought to be fine business; and so they enlisted, severed every tie of home, and launched out on the deep of the world. Once in the harness they have endless routines, rising at revielle, "chowing" three times a day, doing all the work of the camp, attending all drills, standing the watches, engaging in the exercises, taking the liberties accorded them and sometimes when not accorded, going to bed at taps, and all by the call of the bugle. Ordinarily all of this is done with such a system that it works no hardship on any one, but often in a foreign country perhaps engaged in warfare it is a "dog's life" at times. However, every duty carries with it responsibilities and there is never a moment when every one is not under the eyes of some one to whom he is responsible, and for every act he is called unto account.

It is not infrequent that only a brief experience in this kind of life makes one see the errors of his past, and he begins to see what it is that runs the world and the character of him who is promoted to do it. Co-operation is his first lesson and the sting of doing wrong is the second, and [illegible]s many become willing to consider right from wrong and plan for something worth while in the next "hitch," or, when this "hitch" is done, to go back to their home and school to face life at the best advantage.

What an opportunity it is, as Chaplain and father to the flock, to stand at the "parting of the ways" of these young men, at the turning point of their existence, as a guardian to their souls in the most critical period of their lives. It is heartbreaking to see the down-fall of so many of them, but on the other hand it is inspiring to believe that so many others are really serious and strive for the mastery.

This is my parish, and my parishioners are a thousand strong, my pulpit is the great open, and my altar is the human heart. We are all marching through life together and one's experience is common to all. This is where "the carpenter encourages the goldsmith," where religion is life and since God is in life to make it perfect, we will make our lives good and godly as far as possible.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

The secretary of the Brown's Chapel Sunday School, in ordering literature for Men and Millions Sunday, reports a very good Sunday School, and plans to organize a Christian Endeavor Society in the spring.

Mrs. Lillian Sellers, of Tifton, Georgia, writes that the Christian Endeavor Society at the Vanveville Christian Church is doing fine work, and that they have had some of the best programs lately that they have ever had.

Several Sunday School superintendents have written for leaflets for use on Men and Millions Day in their Schools. Any worker who can use them can get them from the Board of Religious Education.

Miss Fleda Summers, of Raleigh, North Carolina, is Secretary of the Junior Christian Endeavor Work of the North Carolina Convention. She is trying to organize new Societies, and will be glad to hear from all who are interested in this work.

The Official Board of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, has arranged for a Sunday School Institute of five sessions for the teachers in its Sunday School, Beginning January 8th. The classes will be led by Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary of Religious Education.

Richmond, Virginia, Sunday School will celebrate its third birthday on Sunday, January 7th. The Sunday School was organized the first Sunday in January, 1920, with seventeen members, all of which are expected to attend the anniversary service. I. Christian Church History.

Q. When were the followers of Christ first called "Christians"?

Q. When was the name "Christian" chosen for our denomination?

A. In 1794.

Q. Why was this name chosen?

A. Because the church believes in the union of all people who love Jesus Christ and are following Him.

II. Christian Church Principles.

Q. How many principles has the Christian Church?

A. Five.

Q. Name the first one.

A. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the church.

Q. Does the Bible teach this?

A. It does. Cor.1:18: "He is the head of the body, the church."

Q. Name the second principle.

A. Christian is a sufficient name for the church.

Q. Is this found in the Bible?

A. Yes, in Isaiah 62:2, and Acts 11:26.

Q. Name the third principle.

A. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

A. Yes, in Psalms 19:7: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.

Q. Name the fourth principle.

A. Christian character is a sufficient test of church membership.

Q. Does the Bible teach this?

Q. What is the fifth principle?

A. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience a right and a privilege that should be accorded to all.

Q. Does the Bible teach this?

A. Yes, Romans 14:4: "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant; to his own master he standeth or falleth."

Q. Do these principles make a creed?

A. No. They are truths given to us by God, through holy men, for building the church.

III. Work of the Christian Church.

Q. How does the Christian Church carry on its work?

A. Through seven enterprises or institutions. . .

Q. What are these enterprises?

A. Missions; Religious Education; Religious Journalism; Education; Orphanage; Superannuation; Southern Christian Convention.

Q. Why does the church have these enterprises?

Q. What are these enterprises trying to do?

A. To make the church more active and more successful in its work of winning souls to Jesus Christ.

Q. Which was the first of these enterprises?

A. Missions.

Q. Why Missions first?

A. Because it is our Saviour's most emphatic command and the church cannot prosper unless it be missionary.

Q. Are Missions a burden and a tax upon the church?

A. No. They are the greatest blessing and benefit to the church.

Q. Where is the Christian Church doing missionary work?

A. In many states in the United States, in Porto Rico, Japan, and plans to enter China soon.

Q. What is the greatest missionary need?

A. Volunteers for the mission field, and money with which to send them.

Q. How can the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies help?

A. By teaching missions in every class, and by giving a monthly offering to missions.

Q. What was the second enterprise to become a part of our church work?

A. In 1830, we find the first record of a Sunday School in the Christian Church. This was our first step in Religious Education.

Q. How does the church carry on its program of Religious Education?

A. Through Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor and Missionary Societies, Week-Day Religious teaching, Daily Vacation Bible Schools, and all organizations that teach in the local church; through our Christian Colleges; summer schools and conferences, conventions and institutes in groups of churches.

Q. Why do we have such a work in the Christian Church?

A. To bring to Jesus, and hold for His Kingdom, every boy and girl, teaching them the great truths of the Bible and Christian life, training them to serve God.

A. Over 200. A few churches still have no Sunday Schools.

Q. How many Christian Endeavor Societies have we?

A. Over 70 doing active work.

Our heavenly vision is in works of love,
A new age summons us to new saintliness."

You and I are living in the glow of this new age about which the poet sings so truly. This age summons to a new sort of saintliness. Time was when mystic voices from the heavens satisfied the souls of men and women who confess Christ. But in this day we ask, What is his Christianity doing for him, and what is he now doing as a Christian that he would not, or did not do, as a non-Christian? Our noble ancestors may have been content for Europe and Asia and Africa to remain as interesting colors and outlines on the map of the world. But our time will not allow us to be content with knowing. We take a hand in doing. We have to. Turkey and Greece and the Balkans are in turmoil just now. We may want to be easy about it all and feel no concern. But we cannot. Turkey and Greece and the Balkans have thrust themselves into our world and have become a part of us, and we a part of them. Up to a few weeks ago the only interest that the city of Smyrna in Asia Minor had for you and me was that in the Book of Revelation we find John on Patmos writing a letter to the church there. But recently when the Turks set fire to it, a feeling of very horror seized us, and was trembled in dread that another ghastly war was imminent. We have come to be so economically and commercially interlocked with them that any day their trouble may come to be our affair. No one could have believed that Austria and Serbia could plung us into war and compel us to spend billions of treasure and thousands of lives, but they did. Truly have we come to see that, there is in reality just one race, and that is the human race. And there is one kind of man, and that is mankind.

But instead of standing before such an event with dread and trembling, we should welcome it with joy and gladness. John 3:16 has come to be very real to us. "God so loved the world that he gave his Son for it." So every father and mother who gave a son in the recent world war. Heretofore men have given their lives upon the altar of their country, that their country might be free from the invader and the oppressor. But in the recent war they offered their lives not upon their country's, but upon the world's altar that this whole world wide might be saved from the invader and the oppressor. For the whole, wide world is open before us, and the strong can prove their strength by helping lift up the weak. Not only prove it, but add to it. For we get strength by using what strength we have. When our Saviour said, on leaving His disciples "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," he was not laying on them a tax and a burden they could not bear. He was giving them a cure for their own selfishness, blindness and weakness. He wanted to add to their strength, not demonstrate their weakness. He wanted to show them what strength they could, by His guidance, develop. He wanted to show them the burdens of the world and give them the strength to bear them; show them the sorrows of the world and give them the heart to endure them; reveal to them the poverty of the world and give them the riches and the power to abolish it. We live in the glory of a strange new day for that glory lights up the dark places of the whole wide world, and makes us realize that we are no longer citizens of a State, a nation or a country, but of a world. We stand in the dawn of a new day of world-vision, of world out-look, of world brotherhood, and of world power.

Now as to Outlook. There are three aspects of our outlook I wish to mention.

1. We have a disturbed and an uncertain outlook.

Herbert Spenser, the scientist, said a long time ago "The more things improve the louder become the exclamations about their badness." In the industrial world you do not find labor troubles, strikes and lockouts in non-Christian lands. Christianity has created your modern industrial and labor problems. We have recently been disturbed with a coal strike and a railroad strike. Now these may not have seemed very Christian in their attitude and conduct; but even these were the offspring, the products of our Christian civilization. They do not have labor troubles, strikes, lockouts in China, India, Africa. In pagan lands labor contents itself with what it can get, and assigns its hard lot to the cruelty and unkindness of the gods. Christianity has stirred within men's hearts a divine discontent, a desire to be more than they are. And nowhere save in Christian countries will you find the laboring man so well fed, so well clothed and housed. And the problem that Christianity has created it must now solve, and please God, will solve.

But going beyond the economic and industrial situation to the moral and spiritual. Time may have been when people in Nansemond County, Va. could have heard with complacency and with mental ease that outlaws in Carroll County, Va., had shot up the Hillsville Court House, killing judge, clerk and juryman, but that time is happily passed. And we here with higher regard for human life and greater sanctity for the law say that Carroll County needs the leavening lump of the Gospel, and we take of our number and our means to send it to them. Our outlook across our own mountains is disturbed until we have done our duty to give the people, our brothers there, that light which has lifted us to higher and holier pursuits. And we are the richer, the better and the happier for sending them that light. We Christians in N. C. and Va. spent $6,080.93 in Carroll County last year; and I don't believe we are the poorer, but the richer for it; richer in the consciousness at least that we have tranformed a chaotic community into one of law and order, given a knowledge of the Bible to 85 young people who before had possibly never read a line in it or in any other book, and won a hundred souls to Christ. That God of all bounty and riches does not impoverish people who do things like that for their fellow-men and for His glory.

Prior to 1890 say, what did we care about the crass and cruel and ghastly Catholicism that Spaniards taught and practiced in Porto Rico? That was their affair, not ours. But a little later the fate of empires and the God of nations flung Porto Rico into our very faces. Then we became very much disturbed. And we know today that we must pull Porto Rico and Cuba and the Hawaiian islands and our Spanish possessions up or they will pull us down. For no nation can rise any higher than the conditions of its lowest subjects. Every nation rises by pulling the lower strata of its society into higher and safer ground, and by the higher ascending unto still higher heights. In every nation the higher must pull the lower up, or the lower will drag the higher down. We did care that Havana was a city infested with yellow fever germs; for any hour the germ infections there might become our disease and death here. Our outlook was disturbed until we made Havana one of the safest cities from disease on all our American coasts. And the same is true with the moral and spiritual ailments of these possessions. We began to send missionaries to turn on the light in the dark places of these islands. That two out of every three people die in Porto Rico without ever having medical attention whatsoever disturbs us very much. We want a medical missionary, or missionaries to go there to give those our brothers the same privilege to length of life and enjoyment of health that we have. And we will not cease our prayers, nor our gifts, until we have the medical missionary to send, because good health in Porto Rico means better health of body, mind and spirit to those who give it to them.

You and I are much disturbed in our vision when we see millions in Japan who because of their educational progress have abandoned their ancient gods with their crude superstitions and now have no gods or God to worship. Japan is fast becoming a nation of atheists, agnostics, infidels. We sannot look with complacency and mental poise upon this alert and quick-witted and powerful little nation as sheep without a Shepherd, and not do our best to lead them to the true and living God. Japan has suddenly come to be one of the first rate powers of the world, taking her seat at the council table of the nations along with American, England, France, as one of the big four. Not to give this people a saving knowledge of our God and His Christ is to keep slumbering flame in the neighborhood of a powder house, and threaten the moral and spiritual safety of the world.

And then we are soon now to enter China with our missionaries. We can no longer look with complacency and mental ease upon China's teeming millions where one fourth of the world's population live, and leave them to their fate in pagan darkness and disease and death. This mighty nation with her millions cannot be left in her solitude, and will not be. We are not content to see her bowing down to stocks and stones and idol gods, for we must give China our light, or her great darkness will obscure our vision. You and I have to look at and see heaven through the dark spots we might have lighted up; and only as we light up the dark spots does our vision of the celestial City become clear.

But it is, second a hopeful outlook.

We who first declared to the world that the name Christian was sufficient for a people and a church to wear; that Christ was the Head and only Head of the church, and that the Bible was a sufficient rule of faith and practice to be governed by have been a long, long time in waking up, and showing by our deeds the value and worth of our creed. But we are waking up. We have discovered that even the best principles are not sufficient. They must be demonstrated and reinforced by practice. We are beginning to feel that no church is sufficient, safe and progressive unless it has and harbors a missionary society, or socie-tics. We are beginning to feel that our young people must hear and heed the missionary message. Our fathers and mothers may have been willing and they were, for us to grow up without missionary knowledge, information and inspiration. But you and I are not willing that our children shall go without such knowledge. Our pastors of twenty-five years ago might have been content to preach non-missionary sermons; but our pastors of the present day know full well that they must inform their people on missionary lines, preach a salvation that is world wide in its scope, if they are to hold their pulpits. Churches twenty-five years ago may have been satisfied without a missionary society, but a church of the present knows it cannot grow and flourish without a live-wide awake missionary society. Hence we are planting everywhere young peoples missionary societies and Willing Workers Missionary Societies and Missionary Cradle Rolls. And moreover we are carrying the missionary message into our Sunday Schools and seeking to make them missionary in gifts, in facts and in practice. We are beginning to teach our children, our young people, our women, our men, that the name Christian is a glorious name and that the truth of the Bible are sufficient to be taught in and save all the world. We greet each other today with a hopeful outlook.

Not only hopeful, But third. A glorious outlook. In these latter and larger days we have been brought to a more glorious outlook. We may not yet have discovered it, I think many of us have not, but we will one day discover that one of the most glorious days for our mission cause and all our Christian undertakings was when Men and Millions was born amongst us a little over two years ago. With that thought and Movement came our most glorious outlook for missions and for growth. For this Movement meant, and still means, that we have come to a day when our whole church can and must go forward, and go forward together. This Movement takes into its loving embrace all that the Christian Church has and is and stands for, and cries from hundreds of pulpits and thousands of homes, "Forward Together." He or she who gives to Men and Millions or prays for Men and Millions, or helps Men and Millions, gives, prays, helps all that we have, are, and undertake. Missions, home and foreign, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Religious Journalism, Christian Colleges, caring for the fatherless, the motherless and the needy—all are embraced in Men and Millions. The time has come in the Providence of God when the individual, the church or the society would help one can help all the interests, institutions and enterprises of our dear church.

Through this vision we see a coming race and generation of well rounded, loyal and generous Christians whose lives will reach in helpfulness to the uttermost parts of the earth and whose missionaries shall go everywhere to carry glad tidings of great joy. And we hear today stand in the Glow and the Outlook of such a vision. God be praised for the dawn with such a glow, and the day with such an outlook.

I am thinking of a scene long ago, but never to be forgotton. Jesus had called His disciples out into Galilee on a high mountain where he had appointed them. Lifting up His pierced hands He said "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Since that far off day God the Father of our Lord Jesus has given to us Christians seven trumpets through which we sound that Gospel message to the world. One of these trumpets we call Missions; one we call Sunday School and Christian Endeavor; another we call Christian Education, still another we call Religious Journalism; another yet we call a Christian Orphanage, and on till there are seven and only seven. Now Men and Millions is the effort through which we increase the volume and the voice of all those seven trumpets—that voice with which we cry to all the world that Jesus Christ is the only and true Saviour and Redeemer of the World. Friends and loved ones here today let us know that every prayer offered for Men and Millions and every penny given to it helps swell the volume and power of that voice.

"I am always go glad when mother gets a letter from father," said a little girl gleefully, "for he always prints something at the bottom just for me. He knows that I can't read ink writing, so he prints them out so I can read them for myself and know that he has not forgotton me."

Can a child of God read the Bible carefully without saying in his heart many times, "The good Father wrote those lines just for me?" The Bible is a bold Book and it takes up courageously the greatest problems that men can face —life, death, heaven, hell. They are all there. Much of its language is symbolical, much of it gives every evidence of having been written by an infinitely wiser mind than man's. But again and again as we read it we instinctively say: "Why, that is just what I want! I can easily understand that. It must have been written just for me."

RECEIVE-TRUTH'S CONCERN FOR HOPE-LIFE.

Away off in China, at Nanchang-hsien, Kiangsi, the lady mission teacher, Miss Ethel A. Hopkins, was holding a boy's prayer-meeting.

"Teacher," said Receive-Truth, "Hope-Life has gone out as an apprentice. He will have to worship heaven and earth and burn incense to the god of riches."

"Oh," said teacher, "but he is a Christian, and they will not make him do that."

"Yes, indeed, they will," exclaimed Imbibe-Learning, who is about eleven years of age. "They forced me to, and they beat you very hard if you don't do it."

This boy spoke with great feeling, as indeed he had cause to. During the last summer holidays his widowed mother, who is very poor, was persuaded by the neighbors to apprentice this her younger son to a chinaware shop. He was so cruelly treated that at last in desperation he jumped down a well. He was rescued, and then ran many miles away. When he was found at last, his poor little body and hands still bore traces of the terrible blows that had been inflicted upon them.

"Now what have you boys seen today that has made you want to help some one else?" asked teacher.

"I saw a mother with a baby in her arms early this morning teaching the child from its ealiest days to bow down before the incense and worship heaven and earth," said Receive-Truth. "And the little sister about two years old watched the mother, and bowed and prostrated herself every time the mother did."

"It's wicked to make them worship false gods made of wood and mud and stone. It ought to be stopped," said Shun-Evil.

Everything was still for a moment. Then teacher said, "Let's pray for them."

"Dear Jesus," prayed Imbibe-Learning, "help that lady to find out about you and not to make her children worship idols any more."

"O Saviour," prayed Do-Rightly, "help the American and the English boy and girl to be grateful that they don't have to worship idols. Make them pray for China. Make them give for China that China may know as well as other lands, that you died that we might live forever. Amen."

Very quietly they all filed out, and went home with serious little faces, one of them humming a Christian tune.—S. S. Times.

DAY

Edna Pearl Day, daughter of Robert and Florence Day, near Woods' Chapel, was born February 4, 1911, and died November 30, 1922, aged 11 years, 9 months, and 26 days. Funeral at Cedar Grove cemetery, December 1, 1922. On the day of the funeral, the father who was not a Christian, knelt by the lifeless form of his little girl, and there, in the presence of the officiating minister and others, consecrated his life to God and united with the church. It was one of the most touching scenes I have ever witnessed.

TABLER

Marguerite Virginia Tabler was born February 21, 1920, and died November 23, 1922, aged 2 years, 9 months, and 2 days. The family now lives in Washington, D. C., though the mother and her people formerly lived in Powell's Fort, and are members of Joppa Christian Church. The little lifeless form was brought to Powell's Fort for burial. Funeral services were held at Mt. Zion Lutheran church, November 26, 1922.

WILLIS ALLEN MITCHELL

Died December 19th, 1922, age 65. Funeral services took place from Mt. Carmel Christian Church, 20th, inst. He was a devoted member of said Church from young manhood. One child preceded him. His devoted wife and the ten living children did all they could to alleviate his trials during a long spell of sickness. Kind neighbors ministered unto him. Dr. Harris, one of the ablest and most experienced physicians in Franklinton Co., N. C., attended him regularly. No medicine in the best of pharmacy could stay the ravages of internal cancer.

CALLING, CALLING!

Calling. Calling. Can you hear them calling? The man of Macedonia, the child-widow of India, the starved soul of China, the demon-tortured heathen of Africa, the neglected Indian of South America, they are calling, calling you.

A vision appeared to Paul, and there was immediate response. Oh, that the young people of the church might see the vision of the lost souls—four thousand heathen dying every hour ninety-five thousand every day swept out in blackness without God and without hope! Paul saw one man calling him; today there are over a billion calling us. We have ears to hear the latest song, and eyes to see the new styles in clothing; must we confess that we are blind to the vision of millions marching on unwarned to hell, and deaf to their entreaties? —*S. Casein and Its Importance.—

More than ninety per cent of all the casein consumed in the United States is used in the manufacture of coated paper and wall paper. It is also used in the manufacture of glue for furniture and other wood-working purposes, insecticides and other sprays, coating for airplane wings, imitation ivory and tortoise shell, paints, plastis, paint removers and other products. In the manufacture of coated paper it is absolutely essential, so far as high grade printing and lithographing papers are concerned. It has been stated that hide glue or starch products may be used as a substitute. This is not correct. For the past fifteen years, casein has been used almost exclusively in the coating of high grade papers in this country. The experience of the manufacturers has shown that it is impossible to substitute other adhesives and maintain the quality of paper that is demanded by the printer and the public, and especially the quality that will compete with foreign papers.

Work with Great Britain.—

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson preached recently in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, a very true and exceedingly pointed sermon on the importance of maintaining friendship between this country and England. Here is one of its significant paragraphs:

"We ought to work in harmony for great ends because we are big. Great Britain is the greatest of the world's empires, and we are the greatest of the world's republics. We two are the richest and the mightiest of all the nations on the earth. Great Britain rules over 13,000,000 square miles, and the Stars and Stripes float over 3,000,000 square miles of American soil. We have a continental population of 106,000,000 whereas the Union Jack floats over a population of 442,000,000. Because we are strong and so wealthy we owe it to the world to stand together. We have it in our power to set the pace for all mankind. We can, if we will, mold largely the policy and programme of the next five hundred years. It is for us as for no other nations to say in what direction humanity shall move."

Rich Man Has the Hornet.—

"The commonest objection I have found," writes a traveler, "is the unfairness of the law which permits one of means to have or get liquor, and denies it to the poor man."

People who take this view of prohibition evidently show their lack of information as to the nature of the substance prohibited. They are in the position of the mother, taking a siesta in a railroad-car while her child was in the care of a nurse.

The child disturbed her by crying for something.

"Give him what he wants," she commanded the nurse without looking.

"But—" commenced the nurse.

"Never mind; give it to him," the mother repeated, still without taking the trouble to find out what the child wanted. Presently the child shrieked.

"Why don't you give that child what he wants?" the mother demanded peremptorily.

"He's got it, ma'm," the nurse said meekly, while the passengers roared with amusement.

The mother looked, and saw the child had grasped a hornet which the nurse had been trying to keep from him, and had been properly and effectively stung.

The nurse in this case is the prohibition law. The child is the people who do not know the sting there is in all liquors which contain ethyl alcohol, whether produced by the legalized brewers and distillers or the home brewers or moonshiners. The mother represents the wet sympathizers who say, "Let the poor man have his beer."

The rich man is the child who gets his beer, wine, or whiskey, and gets stung. The audience is the poor man who should see and enjoy the joke.—E. L. Transean.

Cost of Living.—

Both retail and wholesale food prices increased 2 per cent more during November, according to figures made public on December 17th by the Department of Labor. Notwithstanding this increase, the Department said here was a decrease of 5 per cent in the country for the year ending November 15th in retail food prices, but wholesale food prices increased about 2 1-2 per cent during the year.

Costs for other living expenses, in addition to food, have on the whole changed very little during the past year. In the cities one of the chief items of expense is rent, but except for rentals asked for the new apartments, in which some reductions have been allowed, there have been no material changes in the past year. In Richmond, prices of board and room rent have not declined at all during the past year, and few changes have been made from the high charges of 1919 and 1920. Clothing prices are approximately the same now as they were last fall, and merchants are not so much inclined to cut prices to get business as they were a year ago. Miscellaneous expenses, such as transportation on street cars, illuminating and cooking gas, telephone charges, taxes, laundry, and the hundred and one other small items that enter into the cost of living, have all remained about stationary during 1922, while fuel is higher than it was a year ago. On the whole, living cost for the average family are probably little changed at present from the levels of a year ago, but because of a recently discernible upward trend in wages in many branches of industry many earners are better off now than they were last Christmas. Also, as pointed out in our paragraph on Labor, there is now plenty of work for all workers, which was not the case a year ago.

Can Liquor "Rot" be Dignified as Fiction.—

Did you ever hear of liquor fiction? If so, what does it mean? Why we suppose it means that there are people preparing false stories against the liquor business and with that one thought in view—to make it better for the liquor business, but we all know that all such stuff is fiction and for the reason there is nothing in favor of the business: The Methodist Protestant puts it this way, and it is well worth your thought and discussion, for the more you study it, we think the more you will see that there is nothing in all the pleas for the liquor business except lies. There can be no truth in its favor, for such a thing is not known among men:

It is argued that the prohibition amendment was passed in haste; but the American people have considered the question in every phase for half a century.

The liquorites contend that prohibition was not approved by a majority of the people; but long before national prohibition came, thirty-three States were dry, three-fifths of the people were under prohibition, and the amendment carried both Houses of Congress by more than a two-thirds vote, and forty-six of the forth-eight States ratified. Later another State, after seeing the situation, also ratified.

It is argued that prohibition interferes with personal liberty; but so does practically every law ever enacted.

It is claimed that crime has increased; but the record shows that crime due to drunkenness has decreased 60 per cent.

It is charged that the cost of enforcing the law is excessive; but the expense is only $6,250,000, while penalties collected from law-breakers amounts to $63,000,000. It is insinuated that prohibition is making law-breakers; but it is forgotten that before prohibition came the liquor men were the greatest law-breakers, and encouraged and promoted fraud in elections and all kinds of crime in connection with the saloons.

Prohibitionists should not allow themselves to be discouraged by the noise that is made by those who never tried to obey the law. If we stand firm for ten years, there will be no more opposition to the prohibition law than to any other law aimed at wrong-doing.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. E. E. Benson, of the People's Church, Dover, Delaware, conducted the prayer service at the Holland Church, Holland, Va., Dec. 27th. His son-in-law, the pastor of the church, was afterward told to look to his laurels.

On New Year's night the Holland Sunday School gave an entertainment. Games were indulged in; music, both vocal and instrumental was enjoyed, and refreshments were served. At the close Deacon I. A. Luke presented the pastor with a purse.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference Ministerial Association will meet at the Central Y. M. C. A., Norfolk, Va., Monday morning January 15th. Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of the First Christian Church of Norfolk, will review Glover's, "The Jesus of History," and Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, will read a paper.

Secretary Burnett gives notice that the late session of the American Christian Convention at Burlington last October, the name of that body was changed to The General Convention of the Christian Church. We rather like the change, although, as a rule, we do not like too frequent changes—the public finds it hard to keep up with names which are frequently changed.

Christmas has come and Christmas has gone, but see to it that your loyalty to Christ and His truth be not slackened. If there was ever a time in the history of the Church of Christ, when every member needs to be loyal to righteousness and truth, that time is now. See that you do not slacken in your loyalty to Christ. This may be your last year in the earthly life, and if so, then how blessed to make it the best year of all your earthly life?

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., has prepared and the Board of Religious Education has published a program to be used in our churches on the day they celebrate the rally of the work of Men and Millions. It is a program of information especially for our young people, and it is well done, and ought to give to our younger people (and to all others among us) a new insight into the work of the Christian Church. We presume copies will be sent for the asking and their use. Address Miss Eldredge as at above address.

Some of our brethren have seemed to understand the editor of this paper to be offering a prize for the best sermon at Christmas time on the Virgin Birth of Christ. No, we had no such thought. We do not believe in offering prizes for work in religious spheres. We simply offered as compensation for the labor done $5 in gold to the man who would produce for our people the best sermon on the Virgin Birth. It will take, or did take, considerable work to prepare such a sermon, and the money was to serve as a compensation for the work done in preparing the best sermon on that subject. We presume the manuscripts for this sermon are all in, and just as soon as we can get the verdict of the committee which is to decide the matter, the money will be sent, not a prize, but as compensation for the labor performed in the preparing of said sermon.

Mt. Carmel Sunday School, Walters, Va., Mr. Otis Joyner, superintendent, will entertain the annual session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention July 17th and 18th. A pleasant and profitable session is anticipated. All of the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference are members of the Convention. Col. E. E. Holland, Suffolk, is President.

With the opening of this year we have with us an opportunity of the highest importance. The Christian life has been given to us for the one great purpose of getting ready for the life to come, and to do that we must all seek to come to our best in this life. The man or the woman who fails to use this opportunity to bring themselves to the best that may be possible for them, simply fail to use this life to the best advantage. God help us all to do our best. Do not put it off with the thought that in 1924 you will do your best—it is much better and far safer to do your best this year since it is not only possible that you may not have another year in which to take advantage of the life that now is as a means of getting ready for the life which is to come. Beware of idling your time. Watch for every opportunity that comes your way.

Does not some church in North Carolina wish the privilege of entertaining the Southern Christian Convention in its extraordinary session to be held next spring? This year it is time to have the Convention meet in North Carolina? There is no time to waste in deciding this question. We understand that the Richmond Christian Church has extended an invitation to the Convention to meet in their new church building. That place is suitable in many important respects were it not for the fact that North Carolina is entitled to it this year. If any church in North Carolina desires to entertain this session of the Convention let them speak as quickly as possible, for the officials, having the matter in charge, are anxious to get the matter settled at an early day. If you wish the privilege, then write to Dr. Leon E. Smith, 4312 Colonial Street, Norfolk, Va.,

What are you doing for the support of your church paper? Very few of our people seem to realize how valuable and how essential to the prosperity of our work as a people is the church paper. The (Nashville) Christian Advocate one of the ablest of the great family of Methodist Advocates, gives a most important view of the place and power of the church paper in the work of the denomination in its work for Christ. That paper says:

The church has before it today no cause more important than that of the church paper. The bishops, presiding elders, pastors, evangelists, and connectional men all know that they cannot do the work committed to their hands as it should be done without the church paper. They are all dependent to a large degree upon the church paper. Neither can any person be the church member that he should be without the church paper. Is it not true, then, that no cause before the church today is of more importance than the church paper?

Now, seriously do you belong to that class of people who are tactless and cannot help the mistakes which come in to your life? If so it is time you were up and doing your best to overcome this tendency. The Methodist Protestant puts it this way:

There is a class of people in the world who cause a great deal of mirth and no little trouble because they do not know how to speak and when to refrain. They are spoken of some times as "never opening their mouths without putting their foot in it." They are usually goodhearted and utterly without malice. They insult people and have no idea what they have done. Such people are dreaded in company gathering. They are as likely as not to get the whole company by the ear by some remark. Half the trouble in the world is caused by people who mean well, but do not know how to use their tongues, and when they see the havoc they have wrought they cry out in consternation. "I did not mean to do it." The trouble is that results follow unwise speech [illegible] regard as to who does the speaking. [illegible] for such persons to put a watch upon their lips.

Rev. Jas. H. Moss, Ph. D., in The Richmond Advocate says:

I listened to a learned exposition of the passage of Scripture taken from the book of Acts, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, for the remission of sins," given recently by Dr. Morgan in this city.

Dr. Morgan contended that epi not en, was the correct manuscript reading, and that the force of the preposition might be brought out by the translation, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, depending on the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." The discussion was scholarly, and worthy of the careful consideration of Bible students.

We claim no great scholarship, but we believe a free and easy translation of that passage will bring out the true idea more pointedly and clearer than the one proposed by Dr. Campbell Morgan. Will some of our Greek scholars tell us if the following reading will not be clearer and so far more helpful? Let us read it this way: "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you because of the remission of sins." That seems to us to settle many of these difficulties and at the same time answer all the demands of scholarship. As Dr. Morgan puts the case, he would make baptism precede the forgiveness of sins, and we find no Scriptural authority for such a thought. The translation we have given the passage fits exactly into the orthodox view of the question, viz.: We are to be baptized because of the forgiveness of sins. In other words having been forgiven of our sins, on that account, we are baptized. Of course, we are depending on Jesus for the remission of our sins, but if we are not much mistaken, we are be baptized when and not till he has forgiven our sins, and therefore baptized be*cause* (not for) of the remission of our sins. Let us hear from our scholarly men on this point, please.

BARRETT-WATKINS.

A the residence of Mr. J. A. Eley, 110 East 30th Street, Norfolk, Va., December 30th, at five P. M., Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, Editor of The Christian Sun, was united in marriage to Mrs. Mamye Carr Watkins, of Windsor, Va. Mrs. Watkins is a prominent member of the Christian Church of Windsor.

It was a quiet home wedding with a small number of friends present. The bride and groom left on the Baltimore boat for a few days in Baltimore and then back to Henderson, N. C., where Dr. Barrett is Pastor of the Christian Church in connection with his many duties as Editor.

The brotherhood at large will join in extending best wishes for health and happiness. The ceremony was performed by the writer.

A VERY TIMELY AND INTERESTING QUESTION.

There are some questions which are of more interest in one age than in another. In the particular age in which any question is uppermost in the minds of the people, we say that question is timely and in some important sense interesting. When Martin Luther took his stand for Justification by Faith, that question was soon filled with deep interest and the minds of the people were soon turned toward its consideration. So of many other questions and ages. There is a question of unusual interest which is just now confronting the Church of Christ. We find this question discussed in one of our exchanges by the Rev. W. B. Woodrow of Collingsworth, N. J. We ask a particular attention to it at this time for the reason it is a discussion of a matter of unusual interest just now. You may not agree with Mr. Woodrow, but what he says is well worth our best attention. The following is his article:

Will the Church Survive the Tide of Modernism, and How?

The tide of modernism (so called) that is sweeping in and threatening to engulf the Church of Jesus Christ, of every name, has been permitted, if not invited, by the apathy of the church in recent years, and its willingness to permit the essential doctrines and teachings to be set aside, in many instances, without even a word of protest.

The tide will not be turned backward by legislation; that may help to curb it. Dismissal from places of trust, in which men have betrayed the church into the hands of unscrupulous, if not sinful men, will not turn the tide backward. Appeals in the name of past glory, achievement and experience fall upon deaf ears. The successful process must change the heart and move outward through the ramifications of the church.

Holiness practiced, preached, patronized and pushed, until a churchwide revival of pure and undefiled religion is kindled, is the need of the hour. A red hot church, aflame with the fire of the Holy Ghost; living testimonies and aggressive spiritual conquest will solve the problem; these modern leeches who are sapping the life blood of the church, spiritually and in many instances financially, would be burned loose, fall off and go to their place. The church thus on fire for God and the salvation of souls would shed them as the duck sheds the water. God's word declares "All things are possible."

How then can such a revival come? It will not come through ecclesiastical "Nuncio." Would God that is might. It will not come through perfectly organized forces, programs and drives; these have produced many things, but have failed to produce a revival. It will not come through efforts to silence criticism, which may have ample basis for existence. Nor through efforts to befog the mind of the church as to real conditions. The average Layman, while not versed in the profundities of theology, philosophy, etc., may and does know life from death, and the real from the veneered. The revival will come, and come through the faith and prayer of the Remnant that has held on to God through the lowering clouds of modern infidel teaching; have kept themselves unspotted from the world, with their windows open toward Jerusalem, looking for the first grey fingers of a dawning day of hope and promise and victory.

Shall we make such a revival the theme of incessant and insistent prayer until it really comes —A spiritual awakening, a Church-wide revival?

Quantities sent upon request. Write the author.

DOES THIS CONCERN THE FUTURE OF YOUR CHILD?

This is a day of fads and fancies. How many young people are turning from the way of the better life, yea, the best life, through the following of some fancy or some fad, or some vice-producing habit. The tide is rising against these tendencies in centers of character-making influences, and it is none too soon, for many of the vice-making tendencies are wading up to the neck in order to turn the minds and hearts of the people away from the higher standards of a true life.

We find the following clipping in one of our exchanges which is so timely as a warning to thinking men and women. We hope if any of our readers are headed in the direction of these evils they will at once see their danger and stop. Let us set our faces and minds and hearts against them and stand like a stonewall against the encroachments of these evils. Let us do our best to drive them back to darkness and to oblivion where they may rest from their over zealous efforts to sweep out into this maelstrom of destruction and ruin these habits of the nature or vice, and so pave the way for a better life, a better service and a better fruitage.

The clipping which follows ought to awaken our readers to the dangers which beset and threaten the safety of our young people. We need to watch for them since they have not an experience that will enable them to watch for themselves against all these evils. If you sympathize with these sentiments, then do your part bravely and faithfully to stay the tides of evil which seek an entrance to the lives of our young people. It is bad enough to have a man smoke cigarettes, but when the evil dares to engulf true and pure womanhood in its clutches, then we say the day has come in which every true man and woman should take his stand against the tendencies and seek to turn the tide in the direction of a better, purer, cleaner life.

The Flippant Cigarette.

Every serious-minded person is commending the faculties of those colleges placing a ban upon cigarettes. Indeed, the most outstanding action taken in recent months has been that of Wellesley. The ban on smoking was clamped down rigorously. Two or three of the girls rebelled, and after heartily protesting, withdrew from the student body. They expected extensive sympathy for their action, but instead received the opposite. The alumnae of the institution upheld the official action and condemned those who failed to appreciate the high personal standard that the educational institution sought to place before its student body.

A young woman seeking to follow the conduct of some of the liberal actresses of the moving-picture stage should be taught very early in her educational career that there are other standards after which an American woman should live. These ideals should be incorporated in the curriculum and realized in the atmosphere of our women's colleges. They should be insisted upon if we are to have cultured, refined, well-poised, and highly-developed women.

That was a very commendable move taken recently by Mount Holyoke, when an announcement was made that "nickers" should no longer be permitted in the classroom. The modern American girl quickly accepts fads and caters to the petty vices and extreme form. The conservative girl is in the minority, but she carries the future of American womanhood in her hands.

Let the colleges of the country set the pace for the young woman. Let them insist upon certain morals standards. Let them demand the acceptance of certain personal ideals and they can change the course of the entire nation. They have it in their power to make unpopular any fad, fancy, or flippancy that may seek for a place and demand recognition among our younger women.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM MR. MOODY.

In the year 1894 Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey held a great revival meeting in the city of Norfolk, Va. Of course his preaching raised many questions and many sought to have him answer them. I myself addressed the following letter to him, and received the letter below in answer to my letter. I have kept it all of these years, and believing it may be helpful to some, I am now giving it to the public:

Norfolk, Va., March 24, 1894.

My dear Mr. Moody:

You may remember I asked you last night to give me five minutes this morning, and you could not because you are going away. Well I feel like I must have your counsel on this point:

What do you think of church fairs, concerts, entertainments, etc.. as a means of raising money to support the Lord's cause? Is it right, or is it wrong? Is it Scriptural or unscriptural?

I believe you live under the Spirit's guidance, and so I desire your thought on this matter. I have fought these indirect methods with zeal, but many in my pastoral care think it is perfectly right to raise money in that way for the Lord. Some of my brethren in the ministry are stirred up against me because I fight these indirect methods. If I am wrong, I want to know it, that I may give up my opposition. If I am right, I want to stand my ground, if alone.

Do help me as a brother.

Truly Yours,
J. P. Barrett.

Mr. Moody's Reply.

What we want today is to separate the church from the world. Anything that brings them together on same footing is bad for the church and the world. We should not ask the ungodly for their help. The best way to get money is to go directly to God and ask for what you want.—D. L. Moody.

THE NECESSITY OF A TWOFOLD CLEANSING.

This twofold cleansing is truly based upon the fact that man in a state of nature has in him two forms of sin, namely: (1) Sin Inherited.— Psa. 51:5: "I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." Romans 5: 12 "Wherefore death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." (2) Sins Committed, Ps. 51:4, Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight. The Prodigal said I have sinned; "Achan said: "indeed, I have sinned." Now, in as much as sin cannot enter into heaven; we therefore, must be cleansed from all sin. The first cleansing removes all committed sins. Rev. 1:5 "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Matt. 1:21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins. The Second cleansing purifies the heart from inborn sin. Acts 15:8-9, And God which knoweth the hearts, bore them fitness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. John 15:2, And every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. We can see clearly, that the church or the individual cannot be at their best until they have the second cleansing. God cannot be satisfied with us until we come to our best, both in life, and service. A man who has malaria in his system will doubtless have chills, and he will become very weak, and he can do some work. Tonic will delay or stop the chills for a while, but calomel will purge the system and the chills will stop, and the man can have his full strength, and be at his best for service. So when man is cleansed from all sin, he can be at his best for the Kingdom These two terms of cleansing, are classified in the Bible (1) Is Justification—Luke 18:13, 14. The publican smote upon his breast, saying: "God be merciful to me a sinner. I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other, Romans 5:1 "Therefore being Justified by faith. We have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. (2) Is Sanctification, I Thess 5:23. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Thess 4:3. For this is the will of God even your sanctification. God wants his children to be set apart absolutely, for righteous service, Romans 6:22, But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life. We now see more clearly that the first cleansing, applies to sinners and the second to believers in Christ.

CHRIST.

From time to time men attempt to explain Christ, He cannot be explained or analyzed by human beings. He is the son of the living God. God manifested in flesh. Christ asking his disciples saying: "Whom do men say that I am?" Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." Christ accepted that answer as true. The Scriptures of the Old and the New Testaments sustain this view. While our explanations and our arguments cannot reach Him, our faith can. He is supernatural, infinite, so that we who are finite, hedged about with so great limitations cannot by searching find Him out to perfection.

I am against all this present-day explanation of Christ. He is the son of the living God. He is what He claims to be, and all that He claimed to be. The angel at Bethlehem gave to the shepherds his title and his mission. "A Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Let us be glad that we can and do believe in Him and by His grace find peace—a peace that passeth all unsterstanding. For more than fifty years I have preached Him as the Christ, the son of God, and my faith in him cannot be shaken by the so-called higher critics.

Let us above all else rejoice with joy unspeakable, because Christ is the same today and yesterday and forever. Some dear disciples see the varient utterances of men, who have never known Christ, when they attempt to explain Christ, the church, the Bible, became despondent and mourn for the days that are no more.

Admittedly, the church is not absolute, she was Judaic at the first, while afterwards Greek and Roman influence colored her doctrines and her practice. The Bible also has its human traits and we receive its divinest content through human media. Concede these sobering facts and possibilities and what is left for which we can now render unfeigned and hearty thanks to God.—This, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotton son that whatsoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

SOME THINGS ACCOMPLISHED BY THE EAST END CHRISTIAN CHURCH NEWPORT NEWS, VA., FOR THE YEAR 1922.

The year just closing has been a good one for the East End Christian Church. Like all churches it has had its problems, but dispite the depressing situation that hit our city a year ago, we have managed to keep on our feet at this church.

The Sunday School under the faithful and efficient leadership of Mr. Caleb D. West, has made commendable progress during the year. So far as we know it has met all its obligations, and contributed liberally to the Christian Orphanage, at Elon College, North Carolina, with monthly offerings, and has mentally made contributions to missions.

The Senior C. E. Society under the leadership of Miss Ruth Holland, and Mr. W. L. Rilee, each serving as president in turn, has faithfully met its obligations, and increased its membership rapidly during the past two months, during which time a membership campaign has been on. We have an expert class with Miss Mary Robins as teacher.

The Junior C. E. Society has made rapid progress under the leadership of Mrs. T. G. Hyatt. It has nearly doubled its membership during the year, and is now the largest Jr. C. E. Society on the Peninsular. It also has its class in Junior Expert work. This class held a test last week on one third of the book, and the lowest grade made was 90.

The regular services of the church have been maintained during the year with an average attendance of half of the active membership. We have been able to meet all our bills, and the church is free from debts. We cooperated with the Simultaneous Revival Campaign held in our city last spring, and Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, was with us at that time and conducted the campaign in our church.

Two Sundays have been set apart as Men and Millions forward movement days, and our members are paying their pledges to this fund as they can.

The Christian Orphanage Day has been observed, and our church went over the top with its goal and quota set for that day, which was $75.

Elon College Day has been observed, and Mr. John King of Suffolk, Va., brought to us the address on Education for that occasion.

Thirty one members have been received into fellowship during the year,

We face the future full of faith and courage, with a spirit of optimism, trusting in Jesus Christ our Saviour, and more determined to stand by our cardinal principals, namely:

1. Christ our only head.
2. Christian Church our only and sufficient name.
3. The Holy Bible our rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian Character our test.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience our privilege.

BROTHER HUNT AND HIS CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

Dear Brother Barrett:

Will you allow me to express my thanks to the church at Beulah for the nice pounding, given us on Thanksgiving—I had asked our people to come prepared to pound Bro. Robinson, the pastor of the Baptist Church, and they did, and also gave us a Genuine pounding. We are glad and hope to be of service to them in the Lord's work.

The church at Antioch has also made us glad again, by giving us a nice set of China-ware for the table, this is indeed a valuable gift, and one we prize very highly, may the Lord richly bless them.

Those who made the donation—and again the church at New Hope made us rejoice by presenting to us many valuable Christmas gifts—and also a purse containing about $6.25 in cash.

I wish I could do something to show my appreciation of all these kind remembrances and God being my helper, I will do my best to serve them better in the future than I have in the past. My family rejoices with me in all these gifts. God bless you and Brother Kernodle in your work—You are giving us a good paper—I wish a merry Christmas to all your readers and a happy New Year to all of God's people.

G. D. HUNT.

HERE'S THANKS AGAIN.

We have received for our Mebane Church building the following amounts from friends namely:

Mrs. O. P. Shelton	5.00
Mrs. Sallie McCauly	5.00
Mrs. C. O. Robins	1.00
Brother T. H. Crocker	10.00

With Brother Crocker's offering he says the following nice things. "He hopes that the Mebane Church will become a strong one in the town and will have great influence for good. I often think of many of my friends who could help us if they could realize how the little strugling band needs their financial aid. We have our folding doors in and two good stoves. We expect some day to heat this house with a furnace. The house is not plastered, but we are expecting soon to have it done, will it be by your help or some one else? I fully believe it will be done. I wish you might have a part in it. We will appreciate a check from you. God bless every one who has made a donation to this church, and we hope some day, those who have aided us will be glad of their part in it. Send all checks to the pastor.

Our people will be glad to hear that Miss Olive G. Williams, a missionary from Porto Rico, who has been for several weeks in a hospital in Raleigh, N. C., is now much improved after several relapses. She was to leave the hospital last Sunday (Jan. 7th) and after spending a number of days with Mrs. Vaughan, giving an address before the local church on her much loved work in Porto Rico, on Jan. 10th, she was scheduled to go on to Norfolk for a few weeks for further recuperation, and then leave for Porto Rico about February 3rd, where she will be devoting her time and talents to the good work on that needy Island. Let the prayers of the church go up in her behalf as she makes a brave fight against the inroads of disease. We wish for her great usefulness in the work in Porto Rico.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

The above caption is very significant. The thought: Men and Millions. And, yet all of it belongs to the Father of us all. The church in launching this campaign, I feel, had two reasons:

First, to honor the Lord with a larger program for the church.

Second, that the church might accept the challenge for larger service. For this cause we can appreciate the inspiration that suggested it.

It has been my privilege to represent the Mission Board in the interest of the movement during the last few weeks. I have with the local captain canvassed several hundred subscribers. With but three or four exceptions we were received cordially and cheerfully. The people are proud of their subscriptions. Quite a great many spoke of the blessing it had been to them because of the effort put fourth. and, the system of giving—it is causing many to tithe. All have great confidence in the movement, the church having taken a forward step for meeting the demands upon it. The Men and Millions Movement has caused many to look beyond their immediate location; that, in loosing their lives they would save them.

The captain, with the pastor, holds the key to the situation. If the movement is kept properly before the people and encouraged, it will succeed.

GOOD NEWS.

All CHRISTIAN SUN readers are interested in our Carroll County, Va. work. Splendid reports from the good workers there come in constantly. Following is from Miss Margaret H. Morey, our good teacher at Rocky Ford: "I attended services at our school and church building, Fancy Gap, last Sunday. Our pastor, Brother Bradshaw preached. Three young people joined the church. The Spirit was present.

We have singing and prayer here (at Rocky Ford) every Thursday night except when Brother Bradshaw comes. He preaches for us when it is possible for him to be here. Two young men joined the Rocky Ford Church last Thursday night.

We are very busy with preparation for Christmas. I shall spend the holiday week visiting the people here."

Brother Bradshaw under date of Dec. 20th writes: "We had five to join the church last week. The work goes well."

Gratefully,

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Secretary.

These schools sent to us as Missionary offering, one half for Home and one half for Foreign, a total of $5,089.95. I am sure Brother Johnson has received a far larger sum than this from these schools for the Orphanage. If one of these schools is poorer in purse or in membership or in progress because of these offerings I would certainly love to know it. I am sure they are the richer and the better for it. Moreover, every member of these schools has the joy of knowing that he or she has had a part in building up and carrying forward our Mountain work, to which every penny of the Home Mission money went the past year, and also of helping to build our Kindergarden and Night School in Japan, to which every penny of the Foreign Mission money from the schools went the past year.

What great things we could accomplish during the good year 1923 if every Christian Sunday school in the Southern Christian Convention would decide as a new year resolution to begin the year right, prove itself loyal to its Convention and give one Sunday's offering to the Orphanage and one to Missions. Again and again the testimony has come that Sunday School undertaking this program find ample income from the offering of the other two Sundays to pay their local and current expenses. Just why our schools cannot see their way clear to adopt such a program is difficult to understand. I have no doubt but that the schools not on this list are doing a great and a good work; but what have they accomplished definitely for their church and its enterprises beyond their own doors? In union and cooperation there is strength and there is conquest, and what our Convention is trying to do is to secure united effort on the part of all our schools for some worthy and definite undertakings.

J. O. ATKINSON.

IS YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL IN THIS LIST?

Our Southern Christian Convention and all of our Conference Sunday School Conventions have repeatedly voted that ever Sunday School in the Convention give one Sunday's offering a month to the Orphanage and one Sunday's offering a month to Missions, the offerings of the other two Sundays per month to be retained by the school for local and current expenses. The following schools the past year, 1922, proved themselves loyal to this decision of their church.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION OUR YOUNG PEOPLE SHOULD HAVE.

How many cardinal principles has the Christian Church? What are they? Whence came they? What is the Southern Christian Convention? Where, when and for what did it originate? Whence came our Sunday Schools, our church schools, our Orphanage, our missionary interests, and how are they supported and carried on?

These and many other like questions are such as every one of our children, grandchildren and neighbor's children should be able to answer. Can they do it? If they cannot whose fault is it? That is a question that should be laid to the heart of every CHRISTIAN SUN reader. The Board of Religious Education, through Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Sec., 1012 East Marshall St., Richmond, Va., has prepared a pamphlet in which all these questions pertaining to our Christian Church history and its belongings are asked and answered. They are for free distribution and are prepared to be read responsively in our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor societies. I regard it as the most valuable piece of literature that has been issued in many months. It is fundamental, conveys facts which should be in the mind of both young and old in the Christian Church and is so arranged that all can get it. While it is prepared as a responsive reading, not to interfere with the regular Sunday School lesson, but to take the place of the opening exercise, it really should be studied and used as a catechism in the class until all could answer the questions there put down. I am often startled at the ignorance of our Christian principles and position, what we stand for, what we have done and what we are doing. If these questions and answers by the Board of Religious Education are propounded to and learned by all the members of our Sunday Schools a large part of this ignorance will be dispelled. Every Christian Sunday School should certainly use this responsive reading, and those not using it will certainly lose a wonderful opportunity to render real service in teaching our salient Christian principles.

(A Comparison)

Just five and a half brief years ago I was pastor of a church on a corner of a down town city block preaching three times a week to congregations ranging in size (and likewise in age) from five to seventy five, occasionally as many as one hundred and fifty, and these with a perceptible inclination towards the feminine sex.

My duties as a pastor to these people were, as all pastors know, too numerous for detailed mention. It is needless to say that it took all my time, and thought I was not altogether void of everyday experiences which were disagreeable and often marred my happiness and contentment in the work, I was nominally successful. The faithful few made it so. There were the indefatigable ones, titheres, workers, players, stayers, payers, and the ever present host who always gave their consecrated support to make the cause success; and I recall with pride the painful but sincere, cheerful and consecrated effort to raise the annual interest due on the debt and to meet every other phase of the church's program.

In those days I did not know a "scuttle-but" from a coal bucket, nor a canteen from a quart of whiskey. In fact I have a dreamy recollection of them being both one and the same thing. Circumscribed by religious training from childhood, and by personal limitations which followed me excruciatingly, I was disassociated from the common everyday things the great life outside offered and with which the masses have to reckon. My understanding of practical Christianity was set in a well made groove and, to my way of thinking, salvation for any one depended upon conformity to the requirements of that channel. Though not entirely void of a knowledge of life's vicissitudes and understanding that in each there is a religious and moral point of view which is right and of God, it was impossible for me to concede, always, any compromise of my own understanding of the right way; all of which was not wrong, but in which there was not enough right; and as the World War came on I was destined, it seemed, to learn a great many things in which my theology, though functioning fruitfully, stand me now in poor stead.

At that time my experience consisted in sermonizing for my three per week and, out of pure and simple devotion, forcing my lessons by what others had to say about it. In all of my other duties in the church, and the State, in Conference and Convention, there was nothing that brought me in touch with the life outside, nor with the people who knew but little of religion, or, if knowing, were in such constant contact with the cold hard facts of living and life's evils, and so remote from elevating influences, that all semblance of religion was smothered into nothing. Having a sound Christian foundation, I can see now that my ministry needed a first hand conception of the existing facts of the lives of folks on the outside, and this I was destined to obtain.

It has not been long since I tendered my resignation to accept a commission in the United States Navy, but long enough for a number of things to happen, such as, the experience of my duty at the National Capitol where thousands of our young men were taught war and gunnery; my experience at the Naval Prison where thousands of miscreants were penalized for their wrongs; the last months of the war; the armstice; the return of the military forces from France; the return of the dead; the signing of my commission as a permanant Chaplain in the United States Navy at the solicitude of members of the Chaplain's Corps and other friends; and now my present duty with the United States Marines in a country where all, except the military forces and the American occupation, are negroes, and the masses of them uncivilized.

Though I have not had sea duty, and therefore I am not sea-going, I do know what a "scuttle but" is and I know also the difference between a pint of Scotch whiskey and a canteen. Please do not misunderstand me. To the amazement of many of my comrades, I still adhere to my W. C. T. U. pledge, but in a country where alcoholics are considered a virture as well as a source of revenue, and associated with folks who love to think that way any way, one cannot fail to learn some differences, to say the least of it. I have come to know something of what a roughneck is and of the many reasons why he is one. I am acquainted with the influences that steal a man's soul and drive him to the devil; and I have learned also that not every person who appears to be wicked is void of a Christian heart and the best intentions.

Occasionally I am told by a friend, sometimes with a tone of blame in the voice, that I should get out of the Navy and return to the pastorate; sometimes it is with a poorly veiled hint that I am a "loafer" and disloyal to my church unwilling to the sacrifice which the pastorate requires. I do not blame them, for I know almost every thought that prompts the suggestion. In addition to the claims of the church and its great need, I am frank to admit that there are some fine things about the church which are not known in the service and which tug at my heart-strings and call me back. May I innumerate them?

There is the sanctuary with its art and altars, organ and anthems, singing and making music, by devout choirs whose voices, however poor, re-echo now as though it were the angels from heaven. The recollection drives me to tears when I realize I have nothing but the bare dingy walls of the Barracks, no organ but my own voice and no choir but my own music. It it far from angelic, and sometimes not even worshipful. It makes me heart-sick indeed.

Once I enjoyed the prayers of the faithful who were always there with their support, and the spirit of a sympathetic audience which lends inspiration to the speaker; I was moved by this spirit and my weaknesses were nearly always tnrned to power; but now I have nothing but a passive audience, cold and irresponsive, sometimes antagonistic. A soldier does not venture to exprress or demonstrate his religion in any public way, for the "Gang" will jeer him and not many are able to stand the "Gaff."

I recall the devotional meetings with personal testimonies and praises to God and the wonderful spirit they always gave. I do not have this any more and I find myself longing for it.

I cherish the splendid associations of friends and the normal and natural conditions of home-life so abundantly afforded in the pastorate, but this is terribly lacking in the millitary service, wherein, the friends of a minister of Christ are but few, the most of them being superficial, unsympathetic, unappreciative. The fellowship of the brotherhood of the church is a total loss to me. I go for a year without striking hands with any of my brethren, much less to have fellowship with them. Being thus separated from them and all my church affiliations there has come a feeling that even my brethren look upon this as divorced from the interest of the church and therefore they are apathetic to, if not unsympathetic with, this field of labor.

These are the things which to our personal relations have greatest values, and having known them for fourteen years as a pastor and now to be totally deprived of them certainly breaks the heart. One ponders, wondering if there is any compensation.

Yes, there is, and it is not all in the salary. In the first place military organizations involve the outlay of millions of money, by the side of which the hundreds of thousands of the church is but pin money. The investment in this plant is not less than half the valuation of a large city, and, with the proper authority, it is spent liberally for the efficiency of any of its departments. The Chaplain is equipped for his needs and furnished transportation et cetera in order that he may attend to all his duties.

I remember with what difficulty the pastor, through endless miles of streets, reached the doors of remote homes hunting the elusive communicant, trying to collect from disgruntled members, and soliciting from disinterested friends; how he has called at door after door of his parishioners in the interest of their welfare, which had its basic in the church, and in the interest of stimulating their happiness through the church; but he could find only a few at home. Amidst it all, the Sunday School, the church service, the Young People, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Men's Class, the Prayer-meeting, the Board meeting, the Ladies' Aid, the Missionary Society, the Debt, and practically everything that is related to life, were on his heart demanding his attention and claiming the consideration of every one else; as a result, if there were one hundred and fifty at the Sunday School and perhaps the same number at the church service, notwithstanding there should have been five hundred, it became a matter of boast and special report to the papers.

In our military orgainzation there are from five hundred to one thousand whose noses are counted every morning at a certain hour and the most of them go no further than four hundred feet from the Chaplain, and there is not a one in the garrison that may not be called to his elbow in five minutes notice. This is compensation.

Again, how hard it was upon entering the homes of parishioners, who needed the pastor most, to say and do the thing that would be most helpful to them. So little is known of the undercurrent of a home, or individuals. Nearly everybody is elusive, and both their actions and their deeds are out of sight. Over the worst of sins they spread a net of camouflage and, though one might be able to read character and suspect conditions, a word of censure, though most kindly intended and well deserved, might sever entirely the flimsy ties that bind them to the church. But with us, it is different. Whether we are exemplary or sinful, our virtues and our voices are in the light and undersanding of all. There is not a sin that is not known by practically everybody else. That which in civil life the people think will wait upon judgment day to be revealed, we know each day, and tomorrow at office hours it meets the Commanding Officer's praise or blame. This gives every one a tremendous advantage, and those who would administer corrective measure have both the facts and the person, and a direct route of action; and the miscreant's consciousness of being checked serves strongly as a moral stimulus to his conduct and an example to others.

This by no means recommends that our military organization has the advantage of and is better than the conditions in civil life; but it does recommend that there is an association between the Chaplain and the men which is delightfully direct, and this is compensation. At the same time, it is my opinion, that our military personnel is about as good as the civil, for there is little question in my mind, that in civil life there is a great deal of rottenness hidden, and it is because of the openness of the military life that we judge them so immoral. If all facts could be compared, I judge that our soldiers would hold an even level with the same number of the masses on the outside. Of six hundred men, one hundred and forty-one were at church last Sunday morning, and at the evening address there were between three and four hundred, the latter, I am frank to say, were attracted by Motion Pictures which followed.

If comparisons are admitted further: How diplomatic a pastor must be! In his congregation are a great many splendid churchmen who are sensative with feelings sticking out all over them like the quills of a porcupine and the moment one is touched, out he goes, and the church has lost his dime and his presence. How many are the empty collection plates and pews from such a cause! I do not recall that I ever tempered my ecclesiastical dicta for the sake of finance, but I confess that it was a long time after I put on Uncle Sam's uniform before I could admisister a reprimand without an apologetic tone, and without the disagreable feeling of knowing that I had hurt somebody's feelings and thus had hurt the church.

This comparison does not argue that a pastor should not be "as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove," Kind at all times; neither does it affirm that a Chaplain may be different, but children need corrective reprimands, and grown-ups do too, and I am glad that in my parish they can be administered without feeling that a coin has been nipped out of the collection plate, or that a pew has been emptied of a worshipper; yea, even better than that, when this is done in the right spirit and manner, a reprimand may be with the assurance that an admirer has been won.

When they do wrong they expect to be told about it and when it is properly done, they are apt to think more of the Chaplain for it. This is compensation.

It is thus that our associations are delightfully direct, sanguine and frank. If the Chaplain is sufficiently genuine and "A man F' A' That," instead of having to nurse the feelings of folks and build up contact, they tumble to him and they give him a fast hand. As Chaplain Neyman said, "It is not a matter of standing behind a pulpit armed by cloistered preparations, or going out guided by a list to pull door bells and sit on parlor chairs," or parishioners break in on our studies, grab us off at the mess, "Nab" us in the exchange, call for us in the library, stop us on the parade ground, kid us at play, hang out the windows and jeer us when we go by on a horse and wonder where we learned to "ride at," and accuse us of umpiring a ball game with spiritual eyes, all of which is well if one can be humble enough and sufficiently genuine, for after all, "religion is an affair of life and not a parade." And this is compensation.

In addition to the above, the Chaplain may guide the athletics, recreational activities, entertainments, and participate in the drills. As an athletic officer, he is limited only by his ability and energies. As recreational officer, he has something to do all the time from the repair of victrolas to the management of ministrels. And as the entertainment officer he directs all shows from the "Smoker" to the vaudeville. He not only learns how to apply the censorship to the shows and to the movies, but he also learns how to dress up a man to look like a woman and a man to look like a clown and make the "Gang" laugh; and in his own addresses, in an effort to catch (and the rein is the point of mental contact) he travels along the human side and does not fail to see the humor of things. He who can do this can get the "gang" at church or anywhere else he wishes them. This is his chance and his compensation.

ANOTHER POUNDING.

Dear Brother Editor and readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

A few words about our work in North Alabama or, in Cullman and Marshall counties, at Liberty Grove. Things are moving along very nicely and we feel somewhat encouraged with the outlook for our church down there.

The work at Bryan's Chapel goes well though we are being hindered right now on account of the bad weather. We are getting ready to build now. We have bought a nice building lot right up at the nice little town of Arab, Ala., where they have a good school. We are having the lumber cut for a real up-to-date building, one that will do credit to our dear church when it is completed.

Now we are few in number and stand very much in need of some help for our building, we want to complete at the earliest date possible and we will appreciate any amount from any of our friends. Brethren and sisters, churches and Sunday Schools, Missionary Societies, Christian Endeavor, or Ladies Aid Societies, send your contributions to J. D. Dollar, Roanoke, Ala., and acknowledgment will be given of the same through THE SUN as fast as they come. Let's hear from you quick for we need and will appreciate any amount. Brethren, pray for our work in North Ala., and for me.

On last Thursday morning while I was chopping wood and wishing someone would come, you know why?

It happened just this way: A ford car ran up into my front yard, driven by Brother B. E. Stevens, accompanied by Mrs. L. L. Lile and Mrs. Morris, who had come all the way from Mt. Zion to make glad their unworthy pastor and his family by giving us a real pounding of just such things as a preacher with a wife and ten beautiful children, need. I wish every one who had any part in this kind act knew just how glad and happy it makes us for having the privilege of serving so good and thankful a people as those at Mt Zion. The pounding consisted of flour, meal, syrup, sugar, coffee, dried fruit, canned fruit, lard, soda, soap, some dress patterns, and santa clause, oranges, apples nuts, and peanuts. And by the way, Mrs. J. B. Melton and a number of the ladies down at Abanda sent Mrs. Dollar a nice quilt.

Now words fail us to express our appreciation of this kindness, and may the good Lord bless every one of you.

And help me to be a better servant this eleventh year than I have for the past years at Mt Zion.

J. D. DOLLAR.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION TO MEET IN MAY.

By vote the Convention in its recent session in Suffolk the Southern Christian Convention is called to meet in "extraordinary" session on Tuesday the first day of May next at 7:30, P. M. I am reminding the brotherhood of this action through our paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and to invite any church wishing to entertain the Convention at the time to let me have their invitation at once.

According to custom the Convention should meet in N. C. Come on N. C. and give us an invitation.

The Executive Committee invites suggestions as to program, if you have any let us have them.

Yours in Christ,

LEON EDGAR SMITH, President.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

EACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The benefits of Prohibition are so significant and so far-reaching that they are often obscured by local violations and newspaper reports. A few facts may indicate the permanent results of Prohibition. These facts are the more impressive when one considers the centuries of legal traffic and thoughtless indulgence in ardent spirits. The question increases in importance when one considers the prohibitory teachings of Scripture against drunkenness more than fifteen hundred years before the art of distillation was discovered. The advocates of beer and wine forget Noah, Lot, Belshazzar, and Ahasuerus, when distilled liquors were unknown. The old Greek was not far from the truth when he declared, "Temperance is the moderate use of good things, and total abstinence from harmful things." One cannot be innocently temperate in things that are wrong. Let us consider a few things revealed in the Toronto Convention.

Railroads outlawed intoxicants before the nation passed the 18th Amendment. They will not employ engineers who use intoxicants. The rail road business is a great business. Twenty billion dollars are invested; 264,000 miles of trackage; 60,000 locomotives; see what an army of temperance engineers! Liquor interests do not even dare to defend the personal liberty of these engineers to drink. The application of electrical machinery in mining, in iron and steel industries, compel sober labor to operate these great industries that bless the world. INDUSTRY sides with Prohibition. Insurance companies employ strict rules in their great business, because investigations prove that the use of alcohol increases risks. The number of life insurance policies in force in the United States thirty years ago was not much over five million; now they are over sixty million. Insurance is not a weak witness in favor of Prohibition. When Business, for the sake of business, stands for Prohibition, how could the church ignore the moral demand for Prohibition?

Wisconsin's experience in one year of Prohibition is a good witness. Milwaukee is said to be the dryest big city in the United States. In 1920 savings accounts increased in the State 26 per cent, one fourth of the entire saving in the seventy years of her history. Big accounts in Banks decreased, but savings accounts made up a surplus of $56,000,000 over deficits. It is a dairy State, and is more prosperous with milk under prohibition than with beer license. In one of the most prosperous years of Milwaukee brewers the total value of products was $23,000,000; Dr. Hutton said: "The soap companies are selling this year $26,000,000 worth of soap; suds for the outside are much more profitable than suds for the inside.

Miss Agnes Slack of London said: "England will not be able to compete in trade with prohibition countries; and, for this reason, will be compelled to accept prohibition." The temperance sentiment is growing in England.

Prohibition became effective in the State of Washington January 1, 1916. At that time, every daily newspaper in the State, except one, and many of the business men, were opposed to it. Within ten months after it went into effect, Bank deposits had increased $125,000,000, the number of inmates in jails had decreased 76 per cent, and in penal institutions 50 per cent. The benefits were so plain that in the campaign in the last of the year, practically all the business men, and ALL the newspapers in the State advocated Prohibition, and the State gave a majority for Prohibition of 215,036.

North and South Dakota were admitted into the Union as Prohibition States in 1889. South Dakota went back to high license two years afterward. From 1890 to 1900 North Dakota increased in population at the rate of 66 per cent, and South Dakota decreased at the rate of 15 per cent. From 1900 to 1910, North Dakota increased at the rate of 80 per cent and South Dakota at the rate of 45 per cent. In 1913 North Dakota led every State in the union in railroad building.

In India working men spent 85 per cent of the money spent for liquor. The daily wage for labor is six cents, and 3 ounces of liquor cost eleven cents, or nearly wages for two days. This country of ours has the opportunity of all countries to demonstrate the value of Prohibition to the people, and set the example for a dry world.

ELON LETTER.

And so the SUN's Editor is married again. Dr. Barrett is certainly a charming, fortunate man to have won three such splendid women to be his brides. The whole church will congratulate him and wish for him and Mrs. Barrett, formerly Mrs. Mamie Watkins, Windsor, Va., long life with every happiness.

"And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone." I quote from the Word of God and experience justifies the quotation. Marriage is divinely ordained and is good for man. Married people live longer than unmarried people, the Uncle Wellons seems an exception. Uncle Wellons justifies his long life, however, on the ground that he was always ready to marry, should the time ever come. Bachelors and spinsters, generally speaking, do not live longer than married people, it only seems longer to them. And I think it is entirely true that widowers and newborn babies are very much alike. They both cry for the first six months, sit up and take notice the next six months, and are mighty hard to get through the second summer. On the widower's side there is good reason for this situation. He has known the journey companionship of home and is sad and lonely without it.

The Christian home is the basic institution in social order. There love reigns, love with all its sympathy and devotion and sacrifice and tender care for each other. In the Christian home we learn to live with and for each other and unto God. Such living is the finest equipment for good citizenship whether in the state or in the Kingdom of God. The Christian religion is nothing more nor less as to its virtues and ideals than the principles of the Christian home universalized. God is our Father; we are His children. We are brothers and sisters one to another. We are to love one another and the strong are to bear the infirmities of the weak. We are told too and experience approves that real happiness comes in giving and sharing. The highest Christian grace is sacrificed. But what are these but the relationship and virtues of the Christian home extended to the life outside the family circle? As go our homes, so goes the Kingdom of God.

How we should rejoice then when new Christian homes are founded! They are the seminaries of the Christian virtues, the guarantee of the progress of the Kingdom of God. Our Christian civilization cannot endure without the Christian home. The home life may be undermined and weakened from two directions—from the unwillingness of men and women to assume the obligations and responsibilities of founding homes and from the disruption of homes once founded, by divorce. It is certain that a statesman-like program of religious education will seek in every way to rescue the Christian home and reinstate it as an educational agency. The home is not only a place where food and shelter may be had and where children may be born. It is the place of prayer and nurture and admonition in the ways of the Lord. It is not the competitor of the church, but its basic ally. Unless our homes function in religious education, we shall have to do a continually increasing amount of reclamation work in adult life.

Personally I do not see why our churches should not offer either in Sunday School classes or elsewhere courses of definite instruction in the Christian home. One of the most satisfying classes I have ever taught was a group of some forty young men and young women who studied with absorbing interest this very theme. If the religion of Jesus is anything, it is practically helpful. Such instruction over a generation in every church would change the family life of the nation and deal the death blow to the divorce evil. It is useless to denounce the evil of divorce when we do nothing to remedy its causes except resolute and vituperate. Go and do as Editor Barrett has done for three several times—set a Christian home and in it live the Christian way.

The scribe of the Elon Letter rejoices that Dr. Barrett is benedictus again and we can safely say he is also benignus.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

On February 5, 1923, a campaign will be launched for funds with which to erect the initial buildings for Bethlehem College. It is impossible to build a new College here in the south without more money than will be obtained through the Men and Millions campaign. While this money will aid materially in the establishment of the College, it will not be adequate to meet the urgent demands upon the Trustees. This situation suggests itself without argument. And the thing most needed is action not argument.

If the immediate needs of Bethlehem College are to be met, there must be complete cooperation in this great undertaking. The very atmosphere must breath the spirit of union and cooperation. The growing interest of hundreds of people in Christian Education must find expression. Definite expression is an evidence of individual interest. The splendid interest of the people of the Christian Church is commendable. Cooperation in the various enterprises of the church has seldom been more evidenced than at the present. In many communities there are evidences which bear testimony to the fact that there is an ever strengthening tie which binds people together and enables them to serve the community more effectively.

The task of the Christian Church is one. And every member of the church should share in the accomplishment of this task. The church is charged with the responsibility of the total adjustment of life to them and divine conditions. This places upon the church a great and start-line degree of responsibility for leadership and safe direction.

Only cooperative effort can make the campaign for the college a success. A single church is unequal to the task; a single individual is incapable of accomplishing this task. There are but few things that a single individual can do in church work. And one of these things is, he can hinder what a thousand men are trying to do.

It is a well recognized fact that cooperation is not an end in itself. It is only a means to an end. Cooperation is desirable only in so far as it contributes to the accomplishment of the end in view. But it is useless to urge people to cooperate in any task until they are familiar with the objectives to be realized. The people must understand the objectives to be attained and work together for their accomplishment. Hence if there are those who do not understand the plans and purposes of Bethlehem College, you are urged to write the undersigned and make inquiry.

R. F. BROWN, Financial Secretary.

TAKE AN INVENTORY.

Have you taken Inventory of your year's work in the Church Ending December 31st?

At the end of each year merchants and all business enterprises take their inventory so as to learn how much they have made or lost during the year. Let me and you see in our year's work how we stand.

First, have we done our whole duty by our church during 1922? How many times have we stayed at home on Sunday away from our Sunday School and church, because of a headache, or because we felt too bad to go to church and then on Monday we felt still worse, and yet we went to our places of business. If this has occurred during this year, you will have to put it on the loss side. Some may say, but we have got to work to have food; yes, this is true, but please read the 4th chapter and 4th verse of St. Luke's Gospel. It says man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God, and there is not a place to hear God's word like His church. Our pastor who is his mouthpiece declares it to us, so you see we have made a loss if we are guilty of the first.

Second, have we given of our means to the support of the church this year as we have been [illegible] in God's word to do. So many of us spend dollars for the pleasures of the world, and yet neglect to give to our church. How many dollars have we spent this year for cigars, candy, moving pictures, and other amusements? How much have we given to our church to help spread the Gospel of Christ? Brethren, we are making a big loss in this second, and if we don't stop it we will certainly go bankrupt. For God's word says, Give as the Lord has prospered you. Let us stop this big loss during 1923.

Third, how many times during this year have we known of some one that was sick or in distress, and a visit from us would cheer them up and make their burden easier to bear, and yet we felt too tired to go. We contented ourselves with the thought, let our pastor do the visiting. Read Galatians 4th chapter and 2nd verse. Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the Law of Christ. We have our own work to do, read the 4th verse of same chapter. But let every man prove his own work. I am afraid all of us have made another big loss here. May our Heavenly Father forgive us our neglect and help us to be more faithful in visiting the sick, reading God's word to them and praying with them. The prayer of the faithful will save the sick, and if they have sinned it shall be forgiven them.

Fourth, have we done our duty in calling on those who stayed away from Sunday School or church? Those who we knew did not attend any Sunday School or church. There are 17,000 here in our own city between ages of 5 and 18 years who do not attend Sunday School any where. Have we done our duty in getting them into the Sunday School, where they may be taught of Christ's love. If we have not done our duty in this, we have made another big loss during 1922.

We have lots of room in our Sunday Schools, and there are thousands who do not attend any Sunday School. Let us all get about our Master's business, and go out into the Highways and compel them to come in that our Sunday School may be filled. To learn of our Saviour and to know of him is to love and serve him. He rewardeth a cup of cold water given in his name.

Now, Brethren, I hope we have taken a complete Inventory of our lives and work during this year just closed, and I hope that during the next year, we will be more dilligent. Godliness with Contentment is great Gain 1 Timothy 6th chapter 6th verse. This will be our Inventory at the close of 1923.

Let us all do our full duty by our church and God will bless our work. At the close of the year we will be better men and women. May our Heavenly Father bless each member of his church and give to us courage and strength and the will power to do whatsoever he would have us do, or go any where he would have us go.

THE PIVOT OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Christian Education is the organized mental, physical, social, and spiritual process by which Christian character is produced. And the youth of the land is the pivot of this process. The boys and girls of our day have a right to the best there is for them in spiritual development, and the Christian Endeavor is a place where every character is made stronger, every vision enlarged, and every soul educated.

In our modern methods of education it is possible to be very careful about intellectural culture and indifferent about spiritual development; but it is almost impossible to be anxious about spiritual development and be indifferent about intellectual expansion and culture.

The youth of our day are expressing themselves. The task of the church is to direct these expressions. But the impression is made before the expression is heard. All expression reveals the schooling back of it. Expression is the staunchest anchor of life in the swirl of deadly peril. If we do not want a depressed man-hood and woman-hood, a depressed civilization, we must direct the expressions of youth. This is what the Christian Endeavor is striving to do. It is an expression school where soul-culture blossoms into ripened fruit.

All things should be put to the particular use that God intended them to serve. We must look upon the earth for vegetation, the fruit tree for fruit, upon the flower for beauty, upon wood and stone for building material; but we must look upon the youth of today for the civilization of tomorrow. The best way to bring boys and girls into harmony with the Divine will is to induce them to express the attributes of God as gleaned from His word. No eloquence is so facinating as the new born soul expressing its emotions and sentiments.

There should be no vacation in the expressional life of youth. It is through effort that an individual learns to express the claims of righteousness and demonstrate the power of a virtuous life. By expression, truth is explained, love is proclaimed, and life made richer. The church should never tire of its mission of helping boys and girls express their best thoughts.

The church should do more than place its O. K. on Christian education. It should make Christian education a real factor in moulding the ideals of boys and girls. The greatest menace to any community is a man of means who is using them for his own selfish purposes and to the hurt of his fellowman. His life and his education is a failure. Nine-tenths of the business failures of today are caused from lack of ability, but more from lack of morality. Somebody has failed to teach the morals of business.

The home is valued in terms of the characters it produces. But many homes are failures today, because yesterday somebody failed to teach the sanctity of the home. Too many homes are built on false motives and this is due to the false teaching of youth.

The difference between the grown-up and the youth is significant. The grown person knows what he wants and is big enough and wise enough to get it. The youth does not know what he wants and waits for some one to suggest it. Will this suggestion be made by the church or the world? If the church is to make this suggestion it must have an agency through which to make it. One of the chief agencies through which it can make this suggestion is the Christian Endeavor.

A recent survey shows that of all the additions to the church, 83 per cent come from the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor. Only 17 per cent are not members of any Sunday School or associated with a Christian Endeavor society. Does this have significance to you? The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor society are the points of greater and most powerful contact with any community. It is noted that 50 per cent of the contact with any community is occasioned by the Sunday School, 35 per cent from other sources, and 15 per cent from different agencies.

Conversion is much easier with the youth than with the grown-ups. Conversion to the age of 16 is very easy. It has been shown that out of 8681 boys and girls under 16 years old there were 1021 conversions. But the probability of conversion decreases after the boy or girl becomes 16 years old. To the age of 28 years only 128 out of 8681 were converted. We must save this generation to Christ while it is in its youth or we will forever lose it to the evil one.

The fact has been recorded that out of 17453 cases of crime not one committed the first crime after the age of 21. The crimes of our day are being committed by the youth of our land. If we will save the youth we can minimize the crime wave of our nation.

If we are to save our boys and girls to the Kingdom of God we must do it now. We must teach them that an education is not a bread and butter affair; but a matter of Christian character plus service for God.

When you read this report you will have just a few more days to give us one push to help us reach our goal for 1922. We will close our books for 1922 on January 18th. We hold them open till that time to give all the delayed Thanksgiving offerings and Sunday School offerings for 1922 time to get in.

Our report today brings us nearly to our $10,000.00 goal. We just lack $157.63 being to it. We still lack $917.63 being to our Thanksgiving goal. We know we will reach the $10,000.00 goal. We want you to give us just one more push to help us reach our Thanksgiving goal. You have always pushed us up to it in the past—Don't let us fail this time—we would be disappointed. Pray for us. Back up your prayers with your help.

Through an error the check for $177.65 from Burlington Christian Church for a Thanksgiving offering was credited in our report to the First Christian Church, Norfolk, but proper credit was given on our books in the office. We regret the error occurred.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE RESTORATION AND CONVERSION OF THE JEWS.

CHAPTER II.

It is impossible to apply the predictions of the prophets of the restoration as having taken place under Ezra from the Babylonian captivity. Whatever they mean, it is certain that they all refer to an event which is yet in the future. This will be perfectly clear from a consideration of the following facts. (1) The prophets recognize the fact that there shall be two restorations Isaiah predicts thus: "It shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of His people which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathos, and from Cush and from Elam, and from Hamath, and from the Islands of the sea. Isa II;II. Moses in Deut. 30;4-6, puts the two restorations together; "If any of thine be driven out into the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord, thy God, gather thee, and from thence will He fetch thee; and the Lord thy God, will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it, and He will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers." The Babylonian restoration was the first and not the second, and as there has certainly been no restoration since, it follows, according to the explicit teaching of the Prophet, a second restoration of Israel is in the future.

(2) A restoration is predicted from the "four corners of the earth." "And he shall set up for an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcast of Israel, and shall gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.' The captivity in Babylon was local, the present dispersion is universal. The whole nation is here referred to. "The outcast of Israel" and the "the dispersed of Judah." Only portions of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin and Levites were restored from Babylon, consequently the gathering can only be fulfilled in the future restoration.

(3) A restoration is predicted after which there shall never be another dispersion. This settles the question of future restoration. "Thy people shall also be righteous; they shall inherit the land forever." "For I will set My eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land, and I will build them and NOT PULL THEM DOWN; and I will plant them and not pluck them up. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul. Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate. "Isa 60;21. 62-4, Jer. 24; 6; 32; 37-42. These passages speak for themselves and need no comment. Israel must be restored if such promises are ever to be filled.

(4) Because the promised land will be greatly enlarged, having never been possessed by Israel. The land of promise is bounded north and south by the rivers Euphrates and Nile. "In that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham saying: "Unto thy seed will I give this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates." "East and West it is bounded by the Arabian Sea and Mediterranean Sea." "Unto the uttermost sea, the east sea." "Israel shall possess the gates of his enemies." The Mediterranean Sea, the gate of the west, and the Arabian Sea, the gate of the east. Their feet have trod for forty years the whole of Arabia, and the whole of Arabia shall belong to them. Gen.15; 18; 22; 17. Deut. 11; 24. Ezek. 47; 18.

(5) The tribes when restored are to be differently located, and the land differently distributed, from any previous possession of the land. "Zebulon shall dwell at the haven of the sea and shall be for a raven of ships." Napthali "possess thou the west and south." Harborage on the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf. "Issachar and Zebulon shall suck of the abundance of the seas" etc. An examination of the 48th chapter of Ezekiel will fully illustrate this fact. If there be no future restoration of the Jews, how can God's promises be fulfilled? To deny their restoration is to undermine the foundation of our own salvation. The unconditional covenant with Abraham Isaac and Jacob has never been fulfilled. The land was given them for "an everlasting possession," "they shall possess the land forever." It was given to Abraham by promise and not by law. Obedience has nothing to do with its fulfillment. The Jews are children not of Moses but of Abraham. It has no condition in it. Paul reminds us with regard to this matter of Israel's future, "They are beloved for the father's sakes" and "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance."

(6) Another evidence that the Babylonian restoration cannot be meant of the gathering in the land, is the fact that in many places the restoration of the tribes, under the names of Ephhaim, Israel etc, as well as that of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, is distinctly predicted. The restoration of the house of Israel is distinguished from that of Judah. The prophet is explicit in language.—Ezek. 37:19, 22. "Behold I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the habitation of Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and I will put them with him, even with the stick, of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in my hands. And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one king shall be to them all, and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."

(7) We read of a restoration which shall be final and complete. "And I will multiply men upon you all the house of Israel, even all of it." From the restoration from Babylon only 42,360 return, which does not satisfy such language. "And I will make them a covenant of Peace, and will cause evil beasts to cease out of the land, and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods. And the trees of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have broken the bands of their yoke and delivered them out of the land of those who served themselves of them. And they shall be no more a prey to the heaven, neither shall the beast of the land devour them, and they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid." Ezek. 34; 25-29. The remnant which returned, were continually under the Gentile yoke and still continue: their restoration, therefore, is still in the future. And then it is added, after they are restored, the long history of Israel's apostacy shall end. "They shall not defile themselves any more with any of their transgressions." From that time on, the sanctuary of God "shall be in the midst of them forever more." It is needless to say that such words as these cannot be applied to their restoration from Babylon, after which they have committed the greatest crime of their whole history, the rejection of their Promised Messiah, the Son of God.

(8) The Scriptures predict that the return of the Jews is to take place "in the last days" Jer. 30; 24. Isa. 2:1, 3. What this expression means every Bible student knows. It is never used with reference to any other period before the first advent has occurred which could be so understood. It is plain, therfore, that the promised return is an event in the future.

(9) That the Jews will be restored to Palestine is evident from the descriptions of the prophets that when the Jews are back in Jerusalem, the Nations will attempt to overthrow them. They make mention of a war against Judea, the enemy is represented with a great numerous army before Jerusalem, the destruction of the enemy by the immediate power of God, and a great extraordinary deliverance of the Jewish people.

"For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle. For behold, in those days and at that time, when I shall bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel. For my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto God, Thus saith the Lord God, In that day when my people Israel dwell safely, thou shalt come from thy place, thou and many people with thee, a mighty army; and thou shalt come up against my people Israel. Thus saith the Lord God, Behold I am against thee, O God, and I will turn thee back and leave thee but the sixth part of thee, and I will smile thy bow out of thy right hand. Thou shalt fall upon the open field, and I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort." Zeph. 3;8. Zech. 14, 2. Ezek. 38; 15, 16, chapter 39. Since the days of the prophets to the present time, no such event has happened either to the Jews or their enemies. Single nations have attacked the Jews many times, but God has never gathered all nations against Jerusalem. We may certainly conclude that it refers to an event still in the future.

(10) It is clearly predicted by the prophets that their restoration is connected with the utter and final overthrow of their enemies, who have trodden them down and persecuted them. "And the people shall take them and bring them to their place, and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the Lord for servants and handmaids, and they shall take them captives, whose captives they were, and they shall rule over their oppressors." "Therefore, all they that devour thee, shall be devoured, and all thine adversaries.....' and they that spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey. For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord, because they called thee an outcast, saying: This is Zion whom no man seeketh after." Deut.. 30-7. Isa. 14;2. Jer. 30; 16; 17. No such overthrow attended their return from Babylon.

FIELD NOTES.

The Haw River Christian Church held its Christmas exercises on Monday night after Christmas. It consisted of an exercise of songs, recitations, drill and Christmas tree. The exercises were good and the tree covered with presents was very pretty. A report was made that evening of one scholar that had not missed a day in six years and of another that had not missed one in three years.

Members and friends of Union Ridge Church remembered the pastor and his family near the Christmas time with nice and valuable donations. The kind thought and good will which prompted it together with the donation made are much appreciated. Union Ridge is one of our old church organizations with important historic data, dating back far into the 18th century.

One of the best country Sunday Schools that I know, is at Pleasant Hill in the southern part of Alamance County, N. C.

They have a good attendance and excellent singing the year through.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

"Jesus Teaching Humility."—Luke 14.

Golden Text: "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble."—I Peter 5:5.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 15.

Referance Material: John 13:1-17; Phil. 2:5-11.

The fourteenth chapter of St. Luke tells the story of how Jesus spent a Sunday. On this day He taught, His words and His deeds, the great lessons of Helpfulness, Humility, Hospitality, and Discipleship. The most effective lesson is taught by the teacher whose life expresses the truths he presents. Judged by this standard alone, Jesus was the Master Teacher, who on every occasion, was ready to teach the lesson most needed and in the most natural way.

Helpfulness.

The opposition and criticism of the Jewish leaders did not stop Jesus from doing good on the Sabbath. This time the sufferer was a man with dropsy, and in the presence of the Pharisees he was healed and sent on his way. And the Pharisees had no answer to give to His question "Is it lawful?" By a deed of helpful healing, and a simple question, Jesus had both blessed the man, and taught His lesson.

"Help somebody today,
Somebody along life's way."

Humility.

Marion Lawrence, the great Sunday School leader, places humility foremost among the qualifications for successful leadership. Owen Feltman expresses most beautifully God's love of the humble: "Of all trees, I observe that God hath chosen the vine, a low plant that creeps upon the helpful wall; of all beasts, the soft and patient lamb; of all fowls, the mild and guileless dove. Christ is the rose of the field, and the lily of the valley. When God appeared to Moses, it was not in the lofty clear, nor the sturdy oak, nor the spreading plane; but in a bush, a humble, slender, abject shrub; as if He would, by these elections, check the conceited arrogance of man." After making his great speech at Gettysburg, Abraham Lincoln, the great and humble president, was depressed with a sense of having failed to do justice to the occasion, whereas this oration has taken a place among the few supreme speeches of the world as immortal. Humility is a Christian quality, a Christian trait, which Jesus taught in the simple way of referring to the seating of the guests at the banquet table. The proud, arrogant guest pushed up to the place of honor. The thoughful, kindly man took his place near the door. Both acted from the impulse of their natures, and from their desires. Jesus showed the results of these deeds, and carried the lesson beyond the banquet of the day, to apply the great truth that in all activities in life "every one that exalteth himself shall be humbled: and he that humbeth himself shall be exalted."

"O who like Thee so humble bore
The scorn, the scoffs of men before;
So meek, forgiving, godlike, high,
So glorious in humility."

Hospitality.

Then to the host, Jesus turned, perhaps privately, to reveal the true purpose and meaning of hospitality, showing that it was not only a process of "giving to get" as much is even today, but that hospitality should be broad enough and friendly enough to include those who needed the kindness of the host. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." Hospitality, in the name of the Master, brings the richest blessing to the host. Hospitality which expresses kindly courtesy and a friendly-minded spirit brings joy to all. Ralph Waldo Emerson has said: "Life is not so short but that there is always time enough for courtesy." This was Christ's lesson to the host.

And then to both guests and hosts, the lesson was carried further.

Discipleship.

A certain man made a great supper, and invited his guests, but "all with one consent began to make excuse." And the master sent out the servants to bring in the poor and the mained and the blind and the lame and the house was filled. The "great supper" was none other than God's great feast in His Kingdom. How weak are our excuses when bidden to that great feast. What an honor to be bidden to dine with the King! The true disciple has just one thought; "How shall I please my Master?" Jesus Christ pointed out that there was a cross to bear, a cost to count, perhaps sacrifices to be made, but the blessing of discipleship far surpasses all of these. "Whosoever doth not bear his own cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Helpful service, Christ-like humility, friendly hospitality, are all stepping stones to the blessing of being a disciple of the Lord Christ, and thus to share with Him the work of telling the story to others.

"Ready to go, ready to wait,
Ready a gap to fill.
Ready for service small or great;
Ready to do His will."

The Prodigal Son.—Luke 15.

Golden Text: There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.—Luke 15:10.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 143:1-8.

Reference Material: Ps. 32; Luke 7:36-50; Romans 5:1-11; Gal. 6:1-5; I Tim. 1:15-16.

The fifteenth chapter of Luke's Gospel gives three great parables, or three "earthly stories with a heavenly meaning," not found any place else in the Bible. They are stories told to a throng which pressed about the Great Teacher. Some of the listeners were publicans and sinners. Others were scribes and Pharisees who were there to critize and find fault. The message of the stories was to declare how powerful and how far-reaching was the love of His Heavenly Father, how valuable was every soul in His sight, and how great was the joy on earth and in heaven when the lost was found and when the wanderer returned.

The shepherd left the ninety-nine sheep safe in the pasture to go in search of the lost one,—not because he did not care for the ninety and nine, but because of his very great love and deep concern for the one who might be in danger.

The woman searched diligently for the lost coin until she could joyfully call in her friends to be happy with her because it was found. They are just simple stories of every day life. The sadness and anxiety over loss, and the joy of recovery are common experiences. "Even so ....there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

The third parable was the familiar one of "The Prodigal Son." Here was a lad who became dissatisfied with life at home. Into his heart had fallen the seed of evil which grew until he found himself in sin in a foreign land. Evil influences, bad pictures, profane words and sinful stories are still sowing this seed in the hearts of boys and girls. What will be the harvest, if this seed is allowed to grow? The supreme need of the youth of today is to know their Heavenly Father, to trust in His power, to look to Him for loving guidance. The task of the Church School is to bring to them this knowledge and faith and love which will keep them safe in the Father's house.

After some time, the wanderer "began to be in want." Sin allures, but never satisfies. The Prodigal Son returned to the one place of refuge and help— to his father, penitent, humble, eager to make amends. It is a beautiful picture,—his reception, the ready forgiveness, the loving rejoicing, his reinstatement as a member of the home. The only sad feature, is that of the critical, selfish elder brother, who condemned the sin and the sinner alike without a forgiving spirit— the attitude which has driven many a sinner back to his wrong-doing. The Christian spirit which Jesus taught and lived is the spirit of loving forgiveness and joyful service.

"Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Gal. 6:1, 2.

A Missionary Illustration.

The following missionary illustration from an India missionary for this lesson is given in the Westminister Teacher:

A shepherd met me in the field today, and quietly led me to his village where food was prepared and waiting for me, and all seemed in readiness for my arrival. Dinner over, he quietly said, "Now we are all here gathered to hear what you have to tell us." A cloth was spread on the ground, the shepherd father and son sat on one side, the son's wife with her tiny baby on the other. And we brought forth the big colored picture of Christ, the Good Shepherd who giveth His life for His sheep. How wise the Lord was to use an illustration that such lowly ones as these could readily comprehend. "My sheep hear my voice and I know them and they follow me," he said, "Why, of course," said Bhagat, "so do mine." And he sprang to his feet and made a queer clucking sound, and straightway his flock crowded round him and he reached down and patted them gently. Then he challenged me to call them, and not one stirred. Then Basant Singh tried, and they remained motionless. "Another they will not follow." So the lesson was clear as crystal to this shepherd lad and his father. What was to hinder them from obeying the call of the Good Shepherd? Water was brought, turbans laid aside, and there in the Sabbath stillness of departing day four wandering sheep were taken into the fold. One could almost hear the sound of rejoicing in the heavenly choir.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPICS.

"Why Do You Think the Bible is the Word of God?"—2 Tim. 3:14-17.

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

Paul believed that the Bible was the Word of God, and urged Timothy to abide in the things which he had learned. First, God wants us to know His Word, that we may believe it. The great challenge to the church is to teach God's Word, that men may know how to live its truths. —Verse 14.

"From a babe thou hast known the sacred writings." This teaching must begin early to be effective and touch all of the life. Little folks have a right to know of their Heavenly Father's love and care for them. They have a right to know the part of the Bible they can understand, and to learn more and more as they grow older. Then it will be the most natural thing in the world for them to believe that the Bible is God's Word given to boys and girls, as well as to men and women, to teach them the best way to live.—Verse 15.

The Word of God gives the knowledge and wisdom which leads to salvation, through faith in Jesus Christ. No other book can do this. Surely God gave this wonderful book to His children.—Verse 15.

The Bible was written by men, inspired by God, that other men through all the years might have its words to guide them to do right, to warn them to eternal life. Verse 16.

No Christian can do his work without knowledge of the Bible. No man's education is complete without a thorough study of the Book of books. Christian education is the hope of the world, as through it the youth of the world are taught the great truths in the Bible of the Christian life, and through knowing the Word, joyously accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Guide, and dedicate their lives to His service.—Verse 17.

ILLUSTRATION FOR THE MEETING.

We believe that the Bible is the Word of God because of what it has accomplished throughout the world where it has been read and practiced by men. In his book "Stories for Talks to Boys," F. H. Cheley gives the following story of what Bible Study had done in a foreign land:

"A white man, traveling through a country where the natives had some years before been cannibals, found one of them reading a Bible. The traveler, himself an unbeliever, sneered at the occupation. "That will do you no good," he said. "It never did us any; we are giving it up." The islander stared at him in surprise. "If it does you no good in your own land, it is surely of use to you here," he said, "for if it had not been for this book you would have been cooked and eaten before this." There are not a few scoffers at Christianity who forget that their personal safety and their liberty of speech are the gift of that which they revile."

POEM FOR THE MEETING.

Christ has no hands but our hands
To do this work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in his way;

He has no tongue but our tongues
To tell men how he died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to his side.

We are the only Bible
The careless world will read;
We are the sinner's gospel,
We are the scoffer's creed;

We are the Lord's last message,
Given in deed and word,
What if the type is crooked?
What if the type is blurred?

What if our hands are busy
With other work than his?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurement is?

What if our tongues are speaking
Of things his lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help him
And hasten his return?—Annie J. Flint.

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC.

"We must Evangelize or else we will soon need to be evangelized."

Study and understanding of the Scriptures are essential for evangelistic work at home or abroad. Communion with Christ in the Quiet Hour, still opens the minds of His disciples.—Verse 45.

Repentance must come before forgiveness, and makes possible remission of sins, through Jesus Christ.—Verse 46.

The last words of Jesus were a command to preach the gospel to all nations. His love cannot be confined to one small group, or a single locality. The goal of missionary work is "the whole wide world for Jesus."—Verse 47.

The soul-winner needs power from God. Prayer is his greatest source of strength and wisdom.—Verse 49.

Joy is a part of true worship. Praise is an indispensable element of worship. In every Christian Endeavor service there should be a time for joyful praise to God.—Verse 52, 53.

"To neglect the work of Evangelism is to invite failure all along the line of other church activities, for Evangelism is the initial work of the church. The growth and perpetuity of the local church and of the church universal depend upon a proper appreciation and a worthy response to the claims of Evangelism."—Dr. R. C. Helfenstein.

In his leaflet "Personal Evangelism—The Greatest Work in the World," Sherwood Eddy gives five reasons why personal evangelism is the greatest work in all the world. 1. Personal Evangelism was the greatest work in the life of Christ. 2. Personal Evangelism and our responsibility for service were central in Christ's teaching. 3. Evangelism was Christ's last command. 4. It was the greatest work in the life of the apostles. 5. Personal evangelism has been the greatest work all down the nineteen centuries. In conclusion, he says: "Let us each personally face this searching question, Am I a winner of men? If not, what is the cause of my being a fruitless branch of the living vine? Once we had found the cause of our failure let us confess it, get right with God in our own lives, and begin to work for men. Here is the greatest work in the world. A world of needy men is all about us. Why stand we idle all the day? Let us go and work today in His vineyard."

"Oft when the Word is on me to deliver
Lifts the illusion and the truth lies bare:
Desert or throng, the city or the river,
Melts in a lucid Paradise of air—

Only like souls I see the folk thereunder,
Bound who should conquer, slaves who should be kings,—
Hearing their one hope with an empty wonder,
Sadly contented in a show of things.

Then with a rush the intolerable craving
Shivers throughout me like a trumpet call
Oh to save these! to perish for their saving:
Die for their llfe, be offered for them all."

—F. W. H. Myers.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE MEETING.

Write to Dr. Warren H. Denison, Chairman Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, for a copy of the leaflet "The Place of Evangelism in the Forward Movement Program of the Christian Church," by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein. Study its suggestions for the organization of the year's work in evangelism. Here are found very definite things which your Society can help your church to do, as organizing a training class, preparing a list of the people in the community for whom the church is spiritually responsible, emphasizing the need of praying for those away from Christ, organizing a "Win a Friend" movement, helping in special meetings, and other work which might well be thought of at his meeting.

If your church is near a City Rescue Mission, arrange to visit its service, and see for yourself where much helpful evangelistic work is being done at home. Clip from all papers news items about evangelistic work abroad. Bring to this meeting information which will inspire every member to long to have a share in winning all men to Jesus Christ

Helpful Scripture Passages to be read and commented upon: Acts 8:26-38; Acts 10:1-5; Mark 10:17-22; Mark 2:1-12; Phil. 1:12-4; Matt. 11:28-30; Romans 10:9-13.

(For younger members have some of these Bible stories told in the meeting, together with a missionary story.)

Hymns for the Meeting: Jesus is Calling; When the Roll is Called Up Yonder; Let Jesus Come Into Your Heart; There is Power in the Blood; O Happy Day; Only Trust Him; Jesus Calls Us; A Charge To Keep; Where He Leads Me.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

The Teacher Training Class of the Ramseur Sunday School is progressing nicely in their study of "Preparation for Teaching" by Chas. A. Oliver. They have a competent teacher for the class, and also a number of leading workers who are willing to cooperate in any movement for the advancement of the class. Such a spirit makes good work possible.

"Armenian Christmas Day" comes January 21st, and by vote of the Burlington Convention that is the day for the Sunday Schools of the South to make their contributions to this worthy cause, of saving the lives of helpless children, and helping to train them for lives that will help to restore their homes and nation

To save a life means much. To save the life of a child and prepare him to serve is a great service, the value of which can not be estimated.

Beginning April 1st, the Christian Church workers will have a new publication, to take the place of "The Teachers and Officers Journal." The new magazine will be the Journal of Christian Education and will include Departments of Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, College life, personals and means and methods of work all along the line of Christian Education. It will be a monthly magazine which all of our progressive Sunday School and Christian Endeavor workers will want to read regularly. President W. A. Harper of Elon College will be the editor, and a competent board of editors will be associated with him in the work.

ELM AVENUE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

My former parishioners have not seen as many letters from their former pastor as "Brother Abe" has seen from his. For one thing this scribe did not make as big a speech at Conference as did the former pastor of "Brother Abe," nor did he get the many lessons from driving the Ford on the national highway, specially prepared for him and reminding him so much of the King's Highway.

I filled my first appointment in our new field the First Sunday in November, and went back to look after getting our goods moved by the next Sunday. We left Dendron, Va., Nov. 10th going by way of Scotland Wharf, on the historic James River, where we transferred to a private boat, the Herman Ellis, belonging to Mr. Waverly Bell of Bacon's Castle, Va. The boat carried no freight except our household goods and no passengers except my wife and me.

We had moved several times before but had never had such a trip as this. It was delightful. We shall not soon forget that afternoon's ride down the James River, passing through about 300 of Uncle Sam's fleet tied up with nothing to do but to draw on the U. S. treasury, and on by Newport News and through Hampton Roads. The weather was fine and the water was calm and placid. The boat was not as fast as some others, making only about eight or ten knots per hour. So we had time to meditate, which we did.

We could think of the experience of other passengers on board a ship. We could think of Jonah who paid his fare to Tarshish but who had an unexpected landing elsewhere. We felt easy along this line for we had no doubt of fleeing from a task that the Lord had laid upon us. We had served the Dendron-Wakefield circuit of five churches for seven years, and somehow felt that a change might be well. It was a consolation to us to feel that we had left so many friends who had expressed themselves as having been helped by our ministry.

We could think of Paul on his voyage to Rome and who had the Lord to assure him, through His angel, that he would get there in safety. We could think of the blessedness of living so near the Lord as to have the assurance of His protection. Then we could think about how much people lose by not living in fellowship with Him.

Our pilot was experienced and seemed to know just how to steer the vessel so as to keep us out of danger. We could think of that song we love to sing, "Jesus Saviour pilot me over life's tempestuous sea." The half has not been told but this letter is long enough. We made our trip safely and received a cordal welcome. More later.

RALEIGH CHURCH SECURES A PASTOR.

Our Raleigh Christian Church has, we believe, been very fortunate in securing the services of Rev. William Davidson Parry, D. D., as its new pastor. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, himself a preacher of great power, tells us in a private note that Dr. Parry was heard twice on Sunday, January 7th, with great delight, not only so, but Dr. Atkinson declares that all who heard him were likewise delighted. Our people generally will be glad of the good fortune which has come to the Raleigh Church in securing a pastor. Dr. and Mrs. Parry are occupying a parsonage and seem quiet happy in their new work. The people also seem happy to have them with them in this official relation. Dr. Atkinson declares that Dr. Parry is an able, eloquent and sane and safe expounder of the Word. Dr. Atkinson then adds: "Dr. Parry faces his great task here with courageous faith and happy optimism," which Dr. Atkinson believes, will win out. All this will be good news to our beloved brotherhood. Let every man and woman who loves the Raleigh Church and desires its prosperity and highest usefulness, daily pray for Dr. Parry and his people and their united labors.

Statisticians have figured that each day in high school is worth $10.00 to a pupil. If this be true, is it not worth staying in high school and finishing the course?

Exiles for Christ

Cut made from photo of part of the 5,000 children of the Harpoot Orphanage trudging the 500 weary miles to Beirut for safety,

Lester James was killed and Enoch R. Applegate wounded in raids on this trip. Both were Americans.

ALL CHRISTIANS DRIVEN OUT.

Two and a half million Christians are involved in the catastrophe that drives them out of Asia Minor and Thrace in wholesale exodus. Great multitudes of Christians are fleeing in terror. Their misery is beyond words. They are women children, and aged people, the men of military age being missing.

If they are later allowed to return, our need for funds will be multiplied.

The children in orphanages in the interior are being moved to places of safety in the coast cities.

WHAT WILL YOU DO ABOUT IT?

You have the power of life and death.

The number of orphans and refugees saved, depends directly on the generosity of American givers; to no other source can they look for aid.

A large increase in gifts is necessary to move the orphans, to assist refugees, and pay the higher costs in the coast cities.

$5 a month saves a child.

Remember January 21st.

The ARMENIAN CHRISTMAS SUNDAY, January 21st, is recommended by the American Christian Convention as a Field Day on which this worthy cause be presented, and offerings received in the churches and Sunday Schools of the Southern Convention. This date is for those churches and Sunday Schools not co-operating on another date.

Send church offerings to J. F. Burnett, Secretary, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio. (This will be sent to the Near East Relief to be allocated to your State and community.)

HART

Annie Sue Hart, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Reuben Hart of Granville Co., N. C., died December 19, 1922. Age 21 days. While Annie Sue's stay was for a short time here, she was a real part of the home and it has brought deep sorrow to be without her. Strong brothers and sisters wept with the parents. But the home of the parents is an ideal Christian one, and their grief can but have a sanctifying influence on their lives.

HONEYCUTT-LONG

of Miss Ruth Virginia Long and Mr. Gilbert Mansfield Honeycutt, a senior at the University, took place Sunday.

The ceremony was performed by Dr. W. S. Long, former president of Elon College at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Long. The wedding ring was the one used by the bride's maternal grandmother at a wedding just seventy years ago. Only the most intimate friends of the bride and bridegroom were present.

The bride wore turquoise blue taffeta, with silver lace, her only ornament being a necklace of pearls, the gift of the bridegroom.

Mrs. Honeycutt is a graduate of the Chapel Hill High School. After leaving the school here, she attended Meredith College in Raleigh and then the University of North Carolina. Mr. Honeycutt is the youngest son of Mrs. R. A. Honeycutt, of Chapel Hill.

The parlor was beautifully decorated for the occasion. These young people came to the marriage altar to the strains of the wedding march, played by Miss Irene Cotten, sister of the bride. The marriage vows were taken in the presence of the members of the family and a few friends. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for Washington, D. C., and points North. The bride has been employed for some time as stenographer in the office of the Surry Lumber Company at Dendron, Va. The groom has been engaged in farming. They will make their home for the present in Dendron. Their many friends join in extending to them their best wishes.

What Will Come Next?—

What will come next? Now we are told that the State of Oregon has passed a law outlawing church schools. The question is asked: Whose is the child? Oregon answers: It belongs to the State. It therefore has passed a law requiring all children between the ages of eight and sixteen to attend the public schools. It is claimed that this will close church and private schools. It is claimed that the Ku Klux Klan in Oregon has brought this law about and is especially directed against the Roman Catholic Church and the Seventh Day Adventists, as well as against the Episcopalians and the Lutherans. Some claim that this outlawing of the church schools is an intolerable invasion of religious liberty. Thus we see what some call progress—we are going somewhere, it is true, but where?

Fighting Machines.—

Not-with-standing the Washington Conference for disarmament, last November a year ago, there seems to be no let up in getting ready for war. Our Government though in an important sense leading in that Conference, yet goes right on preparing for war. Already the Government is lending its influence to the construction of fighting machines. The latest in this line is a development of the machine known as the Caterpillar-tractor, a most formidable implement of destruction, self-propelled, long range, six inch gun. It is claimed that it will go anywhere cross country, making fourteen miles an hour. So instead of decreasing our implements of war, we are increasing them and getting ready for the bloodiest work ever done on the field of battle. It is claimed that as a nation we have already decreased our war expenditures, but if so, what mean these new machines of death and destruction?

Newark's Modern St Luke.—

"My tiny patients, what of them?" The question fell from the lips of Newark's modern St. Luke, Dr. Royal Miller Whitenack, specialist in children's diseases and "good angel to the poor," as he lay dying from infection caught from a child he had been treating. "He saved my babe; what can I do to help him?" A woman, grasping a little boy by the hand, asked that question at the hospital door. It was the question on the lips of hundreds of mothers in Newark—the mothers, we are told, of 7,000 children whom "the beloved physician" had brought into the world, many without pay, and of others whom he had saved. But the people could not help the twenty-one doctors who worked to save Dr. Whitenack, so they resorted to prayer during his illness—Protestant, Catholic and Jew. On the Sunday before he died, the entire city united in prayer for his recovery, and it was reported that the church attendance was greater than it had been on Easter. Rarely, news dispatches agree, has such an exhibition of affection and gratitude been shown by a whole population. Columns were devoted to the dying physician by the Newark and New York press, and the story of his life and his martyrdom permeated into distant newspaper offices where before his name was unknown. "What a glorious crown for a man to wear—the love of his fellows!" exclaims the Rochester Post Express in commenting on the country-wide tribute. "His life has not been lived in vain. Indeed, it has been crowned with the myrtle of the highest success." —Literary Digest.

Eastern Gates of the Mediterranean.—

Already some people are planning for the next war. Some have even worked out what will be the cause of the next war. It is now predicted that the control of the Dardanelles will be the main question in the next war. And why should the control of the Dardanelles become such a serious matter between the nations? It is claimed that these waters constitute the sea road from the Mediterranean into the Black Sea. The waters of the Black Sea wash Turkish, Russian, Bulgarian and Roumanian shores. These Straits are the Eastern gates of the Mediterranaen and of the world's ships to the wheat of the Urkanine, oil from the Causasus, metals from the Urals, and the hides and timber of Western Siberia. It is said that in war or in peace the whole world needs these waters as they have business on the Black Sea. Furthermore it is said that Constantinople is the padlock on the Gate to that sea. Why should not these great waters be free to all nations? Oh, the selfishness of the human family!

What France Has Done in Three Years.—

The world is involved in the present European problem, and so far it seems that no one can see the way out, meanwhile the final crisis is approaching. As we see the situation the difficulty arises in the fact that France is demanding just reparations from Germany for the great wrongs done to France during the war, and Germany is doing everything she possibly can do to keep from paying what France so justly demands. It is said that so far virtually all the restoration thus far accomplished has been done at the expense of France, meantime Germany has done but little, except to try to get out of paying her just assessment. To give you an adequate idea of the injustice which seems to be done to France, let us state it in this way: In your imagination see a man fully six feet tall. Then by his side stand one who is three and a half feet tall. Then by the side of these two stand one who is about six inches tall. Now take a good look at these three persons. The tall man (six feet high) represents the total amount of damages done to France during the war by Germany or its allies. Then let the second man (just three and one half feet high) represent what France has paid out of her own treasury toward reconstructing her country's damages. Now take the man who is only six inches tall and that represents what Germany has done to reimburse France for all the injuries done to her country during the war. In other words the whole damage done to France herself in her impoverished condition (impoverishment due to the war) has paid to reconstruct her own country the sum of 44 billion francs, while Germany is standing by, having paid only four billion francs, and yet Germany would if she could, get out of paying France for the ruin she brought on France by a war which Germany precipitated at the dictation of her own will. We believe France has a right to a resonable reparation, and she ought to have it. When we remember that no fighting was done on German territory, and consequently Germany was damaged in this way practically nothing, let us remember that Germany invaded France and did everything possible to destroy the country, and yet she is trying to get out of paying what is so justly due to France for the devastation Germany wrought on the territory of France. It is practically sure that Germany, having done all of this mischief, now seeks to get out of paying what she so justly owes to France. Some one has estimated the cost of the war to France as follows: Seven devastated departments; ninety-four per cent of her wool productions; ninety per cent of her steel productions; seventy per cent of her sugar productions; fifty-five per cent of her electric energy; thirty-three per cent of her coal production; four hundred kilometers of railroads, all told an array of destruction such as the world has rarely ever seen. Now in three years France has raised and paid in an effort to reconstruct her country the sum of $7,500,000,000 and all this she has spent in an effort to reconstruct the ruin wrought in her midst by Germany. Meanwhile Germany is doing everything possible to get out of paying for the damages she wrought in France. Do you remember what Germany did when she conquered France in 1870? She laid a heavy indemnity against France, and if we remember correctly, she required no dilly-dallying in the payment of the same—France had to get the money on some account and pay it down. Of course, France remembers all this, and remembering it, how can you expect her to let up in her demand on Germany? We believe France has a just cause for the stand she has taken and we hope the Allies will see that she gets what is a reasonable due.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Lend a helping hand to our brethren in the far south in their efforts to establish Bethlehem College. If you are interested and wish to obtain futher information, you may do so by addressing Rev. R. F. Brown, Financial Secretary, 1020 Park Place, Columbus, Georgia.

Emile Coue, a French healer, known as a self-healer, is now in America. We do not quite get the idea, except that he claims to heal by autosuggestion. Self-healing may have in it virtue, but that will not relieve the suffering of humanity, or stop the inroads of disease. Great results are claimed for his methods so far.

Do not allow your subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to lapse, if you do, you will miss some very good things—as our columns will attest in these early days of the New Year. Not only keep up your subscription, but lend a helping hand toward getting some of your friends to take it. It is only $2 a year. Make just an effort. Do your best and watch the results.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., on January 1st, entered upon his ninety eighth year, and he is still busy in his work for the Masonic Old People's Home in Greensboro, where he is chaplain, and also in his chosen old age work of praying for people who are chronic sufferers from troubles of long standing. We rejoice in his pluck to keep at his post of duty to the last day that may be given him in this life.

Let us have the helping hand in the way of contributing matter for the columns of this paper. We could greatly enrich our columns if only our capable writers would just give the needed help. We may not be able to use every thing which may be sent in, but we will try to be fair to all contributors. Sharpen your pen and get to work with the view of enriching the columns of our church paper.

Russia is facing a great crisis. She has before her three of her greatest enemies. They are: Disease, War and Famine. Since she entered the great struggle in 1914 it is claimed that she has lost twenty millions of her population, and still she does not see the end. Besides the loss in her population, she has lost in property values almost beyond estimation, and still the work of destruction goes on.

Hon. Daniel Albright Long and wife of North Carolina are prominent visitors in Tampa and are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs R. W. Trice, on South Newport avenue. Mrs. Long is well remembered here as the widow of Hon. Robert Easley, who was mayor of Tampa thirty years ago, and has many friends in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Long will spend the winter in Tampa.—Tampa Florida Tribune. January 9th, 1923.

We regret to hear of the illness of Dr. A. M. Kerr, Editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty. He was stricken a few weeks ago with a nervous break down, in so much that his physician forbade all work and enjoined complete rest from his arduous toil. He is now resting in Michigan and hopes to be able to return to his work in a few weeks. We know something of the strain under which he labors—we know by an experience of more than twelve years, during which time we served as editor of the same paper, and many a time we felt that we were fast hastening to the time when we should meet the fate Dr. Kerr has met. In some way we were spared the complete break down which has come to him. We wish he may be speedily restored to his usual vigor.

A TELEGRAM.

The following telegram was received as the last form of THE SUN was going to press:

Burlington. N. C., Jan. 18, 1923.

The Christian Sun:

Administration building, Elon College, completely destroyed by fire at six-thirty this morning. Loss one hundred twenty-five thousand dollars partly covered by insurance. Origin of fire unknown. Class work will be reorganized and carried on.

C. B. RIDDLE.

Our brethren, under the leadership of Rev. R. F. Brown of Columbus, Ga., will start a campaign for funds for Bethlehem College on Feb. 5th and continue the same till Feb. 17th. Bro. Brown is the Financial Secretary and hopes under the blessings of God and the cooperation of our people to raise in these twelve days one hundred thousand dollars. We really feel a great interest in this good work, for its success will mean so much to our cause in Georgia and Alabama and adjoining States. We are not directly authorized to say as much, but since the success of the work they are now undertaking will mean so much to the future of the Christian Church, we do hope there may be many from a distance who will send a contribution to this good work. The success of Bethlehem College will mean a new day of prosperity to our cause in the South, while its failure would mean a state of depression to that cause for years to come. Let us all try to give them a helping hand and so establish our cause in the further South. We hope many from the West, North and East will join in and help the good work. Especially do we ask for a most generous hand to be given to this work on the part of our people here in the South. Remember the time of the campaign is from February 5th to 17th. Now let us get ready and give them a helping hand, for this is the time of their need. If this need is met now, then a new day will dawn upon our work in Georgia and Alabama. Get ready for immediate action on February 5th to 17th.

SIGNS OF PERMANENT PROGRESS.

In sending his final report for the year 1922 Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of our East End Church, Nowport News, says: "The year closing has been a good one for the East End Christian Church. Like all churches it has had its problems, but despite the depressing situation that hit our city a year ago, we have managed to keep on our feet at this church.

The Sunday School under the faithful and efficient leadership of Mr. Caleb D. West, has made commendable progress during the year. So far we know it has met all its obligations, and contributed liberally to the Christian Orphanage Elon College, N. C., with monthly offerings, and has monthly made contributions to missions.

The Senior C. E. Society, under the leadership of Miss Ruth Holland and Mr. W. L. Rilee, each as president in turn, has faithfully met its obligations and increased its membership rapidly during the past two months, during which time a membership campaign has been on. We have an expert class with Miss Mary Robins as teacher.

The Junior C. E. Society has made rapid progress under the leadership of Mrs. T. G. Hyatt. It has nearly doubled its membership during the year, and is now the largest Junior C. E. Society on the Peninsular. It also has its class in Junior Expert work. This class held a test last week on one third of the book and the lowest grade made was 90.

The regular services of the church have been maintained during the year with an average of half of the active membership. We have been able to meet all our bills and the church is free from debt. We cooperated with the Simultaneous Revival Campaign held in our city last spring, and Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk was with us at that time and conducted the campaign in our church.

Two Sundays have been set as Men and Millions Forward Movement days, and our members are paying their pledges to this fund as they can.

The Christian Orphanage Day has been observed and our church over the top with its goal and quota set for that day, which was $75.00.

Elon College Day has been observed, and Mr. John King of Suffolk, Va., brought to us the address on Education for that occasion.

Thirty one members have been received into fellowship during the year.

We face the future full of faith and courage, with a spirit of optimism, trusting in Jesus Christ our Saviour, and more determined to stand by our cardinal principles, namely:

1. Christ our only head.
2. Christian Church our only and sufficient name.
3. The Holy Bible our rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian Character our test.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience our privilege.

Fraternally and respectively,

B. J. EARL, Pastor.

THE WORK IN ELM AVE. PORTSMOUTH.

I wish again to tell you a little more about our work at Elm Avenue Christian Church. We are having some splendid services. Brother Harward gets better all the time. Dec. 24th, which was Sabbath before Christmas, he preached a very interesting sermon about the birth of Christ. He certainly brought every point out perfect. And on Sabbath evening of the same day, he preached on a very touching subject, which was, "No Room for Jesus." I think every one enjoyed it. God surely is using him wonderfully. I truly believe God sent him to our church. On the last night of the year, God wonderfully used him, he spoke about how precious God had been to him the past year and if God should spare his life the coming year, that it might be one of the best years, for God's service, and that the church may wonderfully be built up in the "faith."

Last Sunday being the first Sunday in the New Year, we had 150 present for Sunday School. We had pretty good crowds at the morning and evening services also. I am trusting and praying that God will continue to bless our work and that we, each and every one, may be a real channel of blessing. Do pray for our work at Portsmouth, that this year may be a prosperous year for our Master.

As to our prayer services, God is wonderfully blessing us. Each Wednesday evening we have from 30 to 46 present at prayer service. I feel that it is a day and time, when we need much to be in prayer, and pray without ceasing. I do long to see souls saved and won to Christ. Do pray for our church and the work here.

A COMPLAINT AGAINST THE SUN.

There may be complaints against THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but we now have no reference to them. Rather the reference is to the great Sun which rules by day. As strange as it may seem, and altogether uncalled for, yet we have read of a complaint made against the sun, the shining sun. Can you guess what that complaint was? We doubt that you can, and for the reason many people would scarcely imagine what sort of a complaint could be brought against the shining sun, and yet it is recorded as a fact. At least one person has found fault with the sun.

It is related that on a certain occasion the mistress of the house made complaint to Mary the house-maid that she had not cleaned the parlor properly. By way of justifying herself, she replied: "It is the fault of the nasty sun—it shows up every dirty spot that may be left." We think of this complaint as most unusual if not entirely out of line with propriety. That any one should call the sun nasty, and for no better reason than that the light which the sun gives reveals whatever is unclean and repulsive, seems inexcusable—alas, what of the life which complains because light has shown its uncleanness!

And yet the unjust accusation may be more common than most of us think. How many of us, like this house-maid, object to the work of the light of truth because it reveals the unclean spots in our lives? Think well. It may be true in your thought. Did you ever wish certain things were not in the Bible? And did you not so wish because the light the Bible throws upon your life is continually revealing to you the nasty life you are living. Did you not feel but for the Bible your neighbors and even your own family would not find the dirty spots, spiritually speaking, in your life? And did you not feel that you would stand much higher in the community and among your friends were it not for the light which truth throws upon your pathway? That may all seem reasonable to one who is under condemnation because of sin in your life and because the light of truth has revealed its presence.

We shall probably not hear a man or woman speak against the Bible again but that we shall at once think: Well, may be, he is like the house-maid who objected to the light of the sun because it reveals the dirty spots she had left behind her cleaning, and by that we mean to say that the strong probability is that men who claim to dislike the Bible most likely dislike it because it shows where the ugly and dirty spots of sin are. They vainly imagine that were it not for the Bible they nor their friends would so readily see the black sin-spots in their lives. Even granting that that may be true, the Bible is the great friend of sinners in that it shows where the sin-spot in your life is and so gives you a good opportunity to repudiate it and get clear of it. Hopeless indeed is the man who is living in sin and has no friend to point out the presence of sin. He who shows us our sins so clearly and with such force as to make us feel like one of old who under the revealing power of truth saw himself a sinner indeed, cried out: God be merciful to me a sinner! Whatever shows us our sins and turns us to God for forgiveness is truly highly favored in that, that he is shown the way out of darkness into light.

Then let us not rail against the Sun of Righteousness who, with healing in His wings, comes in the light of God to show us our sins and to make our escape from them possible. What we need and what we ought to desire above rubies, is to know where our sins are and then be pointed to the way of escape from them. In sin we never can be saved. If saved at all, it must be after we have been brought to see our sins as they are, and thus be persuaded to turn from them and live. God is saying to the lost: Oh, why will ye die? To continue to live in and love sin means our undoing forever. So we ought to be ever thankful for the light which shows us our sins, for until our sins glare us in the face so clearly as to make us see ourselves as lost sinners, we shall not likely turn away from our sin., nor turn unto Jesus for cleansing power that we may be made whole indeed and in truth? Men are not likely to give up their sins, so long as they are not sick of sin, nor so long as they believe no one knows of their sins. It is when sin is held before their eyes in such a glare that they cannot deny its presence in their own hearts and mind that they come to desire to put sin away and give the life unto Jesus whose blood cleanses us from all sin. Indeed, that is the very nature of repentance. When men and women are convinced of sin, they repent of sin, and may be sure they will never repent of sin till their conviction is deep and so pungent that they come to feel that they cannot live any longer in sin. That is the very nature of conviction. Conviction brings us to face our sins till they become so repulsive that we cannot bear them any longer, and then we throw up our hands in one despairing cry and renounce sin as it has existed in our life, and then we go out free from the load of sin because the blood of the Lamb has brought cleansing to our hearts and minds.

The word conviction has all of this thought wrapped up in it. It comes to us from two Latin words, con and vinculum. Con means with and vinculum a chain. As we interpret the meaning of that word it binds a man's sins before his eyes as with a chain and holds them there till he is made heart sick of their nastiness. That is what we call repentance. Conviction forces one's own sin upon him till he can stand it no longer, and in disgust he turns away from sin and turning to God is welcomed into the Father's great family of the redeemed, being through repentance and faith made an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ to an inheritance which is incorruptible and that shall never fade away. Can any sensible man say that the light of the truth has been a blessing to such a man, having shown him his sins and disgusted him with the same till he repudiated them and turned to God. We praise God for light, for the light of truth and righteousness, for the light of the word and of His Son which has brought us to see sin in our hearts till we have turned away from it and turned to God for everlasting life. The house-maid was wrong when she blamed the sun for showing the dirty spots in the parlor. Had she been a true house-cleaner, she would have rejoiced that the light of the sun had shown her the dirty spots she had left behind her. So ought we to rejoice in the light for showing us our sins and so leading to the way of repentance and life in Christ.

GREAT THINGS ACCOMPLISHED IN A SHORT TIME.

A great many people hesitate to give to the support of the missionary work. As to why they refuse many reasons may be given. Among these reasons it is often claimed that the money given accomplishes so little. Like many of the other excuses, used as an excuse for not giving to the good work of evangelizing the heathen world, it is based on ignorance, an ignorance for which there is little, if any, excuse, in a day like this, when there is so much light at the command of the people. If we really wish to know the facts we may easily find out by an effort.

Let us give one illustration of the wonderful progress the gospel is making in South Cameroun in the Philippine Islands. Mr. Ernest Gordon, a son, if we mistake not, of the late Rev. A. J. Gordon of Boston, tells us that on each Sunday morning the deep roll of the drum calls to church from more than five hundred churches and chapels, and this is in territory where less than a generation ago not a single person in all that region had ever heard of Christ. The Drum Call is the appropriate name for the little publication which reports the Christian activities of the Presbyterians in this section of the Philippines. We are told that the extent of its school work is astonishing. In Fulsai nearly 11,000 persons have been enrolled in the 118 village schools. Even in the Sakbayeme district 6,000 have been enrolled. In the Ntun village schools, besides Bible training, the young people get instruction in the fermenting of cocoa, hat-making, basket-weaving, and soap-making.

There is a chain of hospitals reaching from Manila to the Northern end of the island of Luzon, a distance of four hundred miles. There is one at Aparri, an extreme northern point; another at Laong, seventy miles further South, and in these hospitals thousands are annually treated. Fifty-five miles still further South the same good work goes on. At San Fernando, ninety miles South of Vigan, there is a fourth hospital. In Manila itself there are three good hospitals, besides various other hospitals on the island South of Luzon, and, as we understand it, all of these hospitals are Protestant, and they are a mighty force, not only for the healing of the sick, but also for the spiritual enlightenment of the people.

The Sunday School Times recently gave a brief survey of the missionary firing line, in which the following facts in part were presented:

The Christian Literature Society of Japan had sales in 1914 of yen 2,700; in 1920 of yen 26,000. Its monthly magazine for students, Myojo, has a circulation of 70,000 copies, reaching 1,540 academies and 1,672 elementary schools.

Self-Support in Japan.—So, too, in Japan there are these material indications of the growing strength of Christianity. The new Congregational church in Osaka represents an investment of yen 235,000 and a new Y. M. C. A. building in Kobe has cost, with land, yen 400,000. More than 1300 students are in the educational classes of this Kobe Y. M. C. A.

A Victim of the Senussi.—Pere De Foucald, a Roman Catholic missionary to the Touaregs of Morocco, was assassinated by the Senussi in 1916. Originally an explorer and scientist, he was converted and gave himself devoutedly to missions. It is gratifying to learn that along with compiling a Touareg grammar and lexicon he translated the New Testament into the Touareg language.

The translation of the Bible into Tibetan has been undertaken by Mrs. Shelton, wife of the martyred missionary to Tibet. Mrs. Shelton had previously completed a hymnal in Tibetan, a book of Bible stories, and a geography. This is the first literature of the kind in Tibetan. It is published at the Calcutta Mission Press, the only place in the world where Tibetan type is used.

A Manchurian Doctor's Job.—Dr. Christie, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission in Moukden, is the pioneer medical missionary in Manchuria. Dr. Webster writes in the Record of the Free

Church of Scotland, after attending a recent graduation of medical students from Dr. Christie's fine new hospital and medical school, "I was by his side when he saw his first patient, the first of a million or more."

The China Baptist Publication Society is having a remarkable growth. Its headquarters are in Canton and the sales of its bookstore in that city have advanced from $5,039 in 1915 to $35,736 in 1921. Its total receipts in 1921 were $110,262 and its present assets are $284,844. At the annual meeting of the board of directors it was unanimously voted to appeal to American Baptists, North and South, to provide for the opening of a branch establishment in Shanghai.

A new mission in Central Mexico has been opened by the Disciples of Christ, with fourteen missionaries already on the field and others in preparation. Its first church has now 139 members and six out-stations; also 356 in its six Sunday Schools. An orphanage has already been started. In Asuncion, Paraguay, this board has opened a mission school which is already esteemed one of the best in the republic. The sons of a former president are enrolled as students.

West Africa Has Now Its Keswick.—The convention this year was held at Lagos. Episcopalians, Salvationists, Baptists and Wesleyans participated. An account of the meetings given in the West Equatorial Africa Magazine remarks, after describing the packed church and the crowds pressing round the windows outside, "It is difficult to account for the enthusiasm and numbers." Clearly the Spirit is at work here at the present time, as at so many and various points.

Chinese Christians are more and more shouldering the financial burdens of the church. Every dollar of the beautiful new library building of St. John's College, Shanghai, was contributed by Chinese alumni. The Morrison Memorial Church of Hongkong has put $90,000 into a new church building, and at the same time has voted $1,000 to supplement the building funds of two dependent churches. The Chinese directors of the Hongkong Y. M. C. A. are raising $100,000 for a new building.

The late Dr. Yokoyama was one of the most prominent Christian laymen of North Japan. His practice was large and the needy ever had a privileged place in it so that it is not surprising to learn that all along the course of his funeral procession tables were placed with flowers on them and in some cases incense was burned in memory of the beloved physician. Head and front of the local church, he was also a citizen of quality, the promoter of high schools, president of the Red Cross, educational and medical associations, and much more. In his last illness he was concerned with the collection of money to buy a lot for a new church building. When this was secured his comment was, "Now the Lord Jesus will have a place of rest in Kakuda, a pillow on which to rest his head." Of whom else in human history have men ever spoken in this spirit of devoted affection, and that after 1900 years?

We wish our readers who complain that there is so little being accomplished on the missionary fields of the world that they do not feel like contributing of their means to its support, would read this article through and through, and then tell the SUN readers if they still believe that but little is being accomplished in the missionary world. It is true that the account given is meager, including only a little of the missionary territory of the world, but it is enough to show much encouragement as to the work being done.

It is true that great things are coming to pass and a greater out-look is now dawning upon the world. We are fast coming to the day when the world shall be at least evangelized, and being evangelized, it will itself become a great training school for the development of all Christian forces. A great day is almost at the dawning time, as we believe, and if the Church of Christ will but awake and seize the opportunity now within its reach, and use it well and wisely for the bringing of the reign of Christ, then we shall see a new day in which the glory of God shall be manifested through the establishment of the Kingdom of Christ.

DID THE IMPS FROM HELL REJOICE OVER DR. FOSDICK'S SERMON?

Most likely you do not know what we mean by that question. Well, read and learn. The story is not ours but it is well worth reading. It is more than that—it is worth a careful study.

The story, as we give it, comes to us from an editorial in the columns of The Richmond Christian Advocate, whose versatile editor seems to have spent a part of Christmas Day at church, where he either dreamed or saw some most unusual things. The hardest hit he makes is after Dr. Fosdick, who has recently attracted much attention to himself by preaching what many of the people believe to be rank error of a most dangerous kind. Dr. Rowland, the editor of The Advocate, seems to have his eye on the situation as it is now confronting the church, and we are looking for some fine work from his brain and pen against the popular religious errors of this day. The following is Dr. Rowland's editorial entitled, "The Devil Goes to Church." Read it and get your eyes open to the critical condition now confronting the church of the twentieth century. He says:

It was the night after Christmas,
When all through the house
Everybody was sick,
Even to the mouse.

The editor dozed a bit by the firelight's evening glow. His mind wrestled with bills and proof and delinquent subscribers. His digestion dealt with turkey dressing, cake, nuts, candies and pickels. Somewhere down in the shadows where the two worlds meet, he came in contact with several little imps, who had been visiting the earth and were on their way back to the bad place. He heard their conversation and a part of it was remembered.

"Where did you go while you were up here?" asked one with a toss of his impish head.

"I went to a Christmas ball," replied his impship, "and it would please our great Chief Satan to see how they observed the day called Christmas. The dancing, drinking, cursing and lust shows the kingdom of hell is strong."

"And where did you go?" he said, turning to a red-eyed devil near.

"I went to church," he replied with an impish grin.

"To church!" they cried in a chorus of ridicule.

"Yes, I went to church in New York. I heard Dr. Fosdick preach a Christmas sermon. He preached on the divinity of Christ. Said He was not divinely born of a virgin, that the Bible was full of errors, that the natural must take the place of the supernatural and reason supplant inspiration."

"Did he preach that?" asked the Lieutenant Imp with great concern.

"Yes, he did."

"Did the people accept it?"

"Many of them seemed to."

"Do you think other preachers will preach this kind of a Christ?"

"I am told the creed is gaining ground."

Then the Lieutenant Imp made a speech:

"Fellow devils, we stand for the Bible and overthrow of Jesus Christ. We have tried torch and sword and that failed, we have tried crime and sin, and this has not succeeded. If we can get the preachers to preach this kind of a Christ we win. Revivals will be no more. Christ will become a lengend, religion cease to grip the souls of men, sin will triumph and our King Apollyon will reign supreme."

AN EDITOR WRITES TO PREACHERS ON THE WORD OF GOD.

There has been not a little stir among the Baptist people of North Carolina and elsewhere, during the last year on Evolution, which of course runs contrary to the plain teachings of the Word of God. Now that the discussion has in a measure quieted down, the Rev. Livingston Johnson, D. D., editor of The Biblical Recorder, is using this time of a little quiet in this matter to say some wise things to the Baptist preachers of North Carolina and elsewhere. In The Recorder of January 10, 1923, he addresses the ministers of his constituency as follows:

THE WORD OF GOD.

The instruction contained in the Bible is the only hope for the preservation of our civilization. That being the case it is of the highest importance that the Bible be given its rightful place in the minds of Christian people and that its teachings be our guide.

Because of the importance of this matter we purpose writing this and another editorial on the importance of placing the Bible where it rightly belongs.

In this editorial we want to urge on the part of preachers two things. First, that they should know the Word of God as it is "the sword of the spirit." Those who use it should be familiar with this divine, all-powerful weapon. In calling men into the ministry God means that they shall go forth with His Word as their only weapon which is "quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword."

During this new year upon which we are entering all of our people, and especially our religious leaders, should determine to study more regularly and earnestly God's blessed Word and acquaint themselves with its contents.

The second suggestion we make is that we not only become familiar with the Word of God but that we believe it. It is possible for one to study the Bible cerefully and critically and still not accept as final and authoritative its contents. Men of conviction can speak with a note of certitude, and they alone can do it.

When a preacher, or any other Bible teacher, touches very lightly upon the great doctrines of the Bible and skims around as if he were on thin ice, his words do not carry weight and conviction to the hearts of others.

Paul, the great doctrinal spostle, was a man of deep convictions. He said "We believe and therefore speak," and it was this belief that gave effectiveness to his words.

Men speak lightly of dogmatism and say we cannot afford to dogmatize about the things contained in the Word of God. There are some things in the Bible too deep for our comprehension, and concerning these we cannot speak dogmatically. But the great basic principles of salvation are given to us so plainly that we can dogmatize about them, indeed we cannot afford not to speak dogmatically concerning these. If a man does not believe that the Bible is the inspired Word of God; or that Christ was God in the flesh; or that He suffered vicariously on the cross in order to provide a way whereby men can be saved; or that He rose from the dead and is at the right hand of God making intercession for His people; or that He will come again as He said He would to judge the world, what is there to offer men who are asking the all important question "What must I do to be saved?"

All our preachers and religious teachers should plant their feet firmly on the Word of God. Then, and not till then, can they speak with a note of certitude, and only such note can satisfy the longings of the soul in this age of doubt.

In all the ages and in all Christian countries, the men who have been great soul winners, have been men of deep conviction concerning the Word of God. The Lord thus honors those who believe in His Word.

We are in hearty agreement with The Reorder editor in his thoughts on the place of the Bible in the teaching of Christianity. Under the Holy Spirit, we have the Bible as our guide in matters of Faith, Practice and Doctrine. If we have no guide, we mean a reliable guide in the Scriptures, then we have no guide at all. If we were one of the doubters of the Bible, the moment we came to believe the Bible is not reliable, we would walk out of the pulpit and stay out till we could see our way to come back in faith, honoring the Great Book as the Word of God and as the guide of my religious faith and life.

It is gratifying to see so many of the church papers of various denominations coming back to a steady faith in the Old Book. We believe we are on the verge of a new faith in the Old Book —the day is even now dawning and we believe it will not be many years till these doubters will go out of the pulpit, or they will come back to the Bible as the reliable source of all Christian teaching, and the sooner that day comes, the sooner will the church come to know her Lord and Master as the Saviour of the lost—to know him in the forgiveness of sins and in the building up of the Christian life, and then she will again have power to reach and lead men and women to Christ.

There is another thought in Dr. Johnson's article that we wish to commend and that is the matter of preaching dogmatically. A great many dear men and women can hardly bear to have a man speak dogmatically in preaching. So far as human opinion is concerned, we care nothing for mere dogmatism in a general way, but if a man is not to be permitted to speak dogmatically when declaring the unsearchable doctrines of the Bible, then we do not know why he should preach at all. Jesus was the greatest dogmatist the world has ever seen, and if His servants cannot preach what Jesus preached dogmatically, then what can they preach, and what must they preach? If he is not to take a brave stand for the truth as Jesus taught it, then we do not see the need that he preach at all. If a man is preaching revealed truth, then we see no reason why he may not be dogmatic—positive and unyielding in his devotion to the truth his Master gave him.

THE PREACHER AND HIS AUDIENCE.

The minister appointed by God under the Christian economy, has before him a noble destiny and is himself a molder of human character and destiny. To his office belongs great honor, but his calling carries with it infinite responsibilities. The time was when he was called reverend because of what he knew, then as the years went by mere knowledge was discounted at the bank of reality; a time when the heart was exalted above the head, but now the hand takes first place. In this modern utilitarian age the question is not, what does he know, or what does he feel, but what can he do?

His is a high calling of God and should be looked upon by himself and others as such. The minister does not have the high esteem and reverence he once had, even from those who profess to be in the Kingdom. Who is to blame? It is said: "Reverence is kindled by the sight of supreme goodness, purity and power." Is the modern minister lacking in these virtures? Within certain limits it is right and good that they should be honored, but has the Master's work suffered because they are less honored? If there should be a revival of holy reverence for the ministers of the Word of God, there should be a corresponding desire upon the part to receive holiness and strength, that they may be channels by which men may submissively receive authoritative representations of Divine glory and Divine grace, for it is the prerogative of man to recognize, to admire, to adore supreme excellence.

He is not called to a life of ease, but to a life of service. In the faithful discharge of his ministry varied demands are made, which cannot be rightly met without entire and unreserved consecration—entire devotion to God the necessary qualification for ministerial service.

His success will depend upon his ability as a preacher of the Gospel; his skill in securing decisions; his thoroughness with converts; his tact in handling situations; his discretion in private and public; his judgment in dealing with the church; the permanence of the results of his ministry; his loyalty to the Word of God and his method of gaining and holding the interest of the community.

The pastor should have an audience. People should go to church, for it is the mightiest agency on earth for the realization of human progress; an advocate and ally of every great reform of our day; stands for the highest thinking and the most sacrificial doing; presents the noblest ideals of life, and points the way to their realization.

It furnishes the motive and the incentive for the expression of sympathy and compassion. It is the supreme character-making institution in the world, and is the only organization under the sun doing business for God exclusively.

It relates mankind to God and one another in joyful fellowship. If the preacher has anything to say he deems worth while it ought to be his great concern to have the largest possible hearing. His power, force and influence for the truth will be in proportion to the number of people who hear it. The message of the pulpit has twice the power when heard by a man in the midst of a multitude.

The preacher is largely responsible for the kind of audience he has. If his sermons are aglow with life, full of twentieth-century thought, clothed in twentieth-century language and addressed to human life, as men have to live it, he will get a hearing. Not enough to cry out against the pleasurable distractions of this age. If he cannot say something that is worth more to a man than automobile ride he will not have him in his audience. Thomas Carlyle said: "The beautifulest sight on earth is that of a strong, true man talking out of his inmost soul to his brother man about God and destiny." If there is in the city a preacher who knows God, can interpret human life, has a shepherd heart, who is able to compete with writers of fiction, in human interest, with poets in vision, with scientists in absolute honesty, with the lodges in human brotherliness, with the automobile in that he takes you somewhere, that preacher will have an audience every time he preaches to his fellow-men.

All people are interested in the ultimate things—love, life, God, death—and are willing and eager to accept the invitation to walk along the by-paths and approaches to these abiding realities, in company with the man who knows the way, if he has a friendly face, a courteous manner, and has any light to give.

CHEERING WORDS FROM PORTO RICO.

Since February, 1902, when the first evangelical service was held, it has been the desire of the Porto Rico Missien to see a Christian Church building in the little town of Santa Isabel. After twenty years, or nearly so, of waiting, we have seen the beginnings, and we're glad.

The first purchases of material for the proposed building was made on November 20, 1922, by Mr. P. C. Wehrheim, of San Juan, P. R., with whom arrangements have been made to do the building.

On December 11th, at 5 P. M., a number of friends from Salina, Renullas, Janca, Arus, and Ponce, met with the people of Santa Isabel, to lay the corner-stone. The service began by a short statement from the pastor, Bro. Aquino Ojeda, explaining the significance of the occasion. A hymn was sung and Rev. Ramon Sandoval, pastor of the Satinas church led in prayer.

Mr. Ventena Rodriguez, Mayor of Santa Isabel, was introduced to the congregation. Mr. Rodriguez is a man who has always been friendly to Christian work and on several occasions has attended our regular services. He had prepared a most admirable address for the occasion, in which he assured us on behalf of the people of Santa Isabel, of their appreciation of such a building as the plans showed they were to have, and also predicted that the building of the Protestant Church would assure for Santa Isabel fine American citizenship and noble Christian character.

Bro. Pedro Roman, pastor at Arus, read a selection of Scripture from I. Cor. third chapter.

Rev. Cotto Reyes, pastor of the Baptist Church of Ponce, and Editor of the Union paper, El Porto Rico Evangelico, preached for us.

The following list of articles were then placed in the stone: A letter from Dr. A. P. Minton, our secretary, especially written for the occasion; List of all missionaries, American and native, who have worked in Santa Isabel since the opening of the mission; Minutes of the first business meeting of the Church, which were found on record; Names of the members, as far as the record shows, who have ever joined the church; A copy of the Union paper, El Porto Rico Evangelico; A copy of St. John's Gospel; A photograph of Rev. Jennie Mishler, missionary who labored in Santa Isabel for many years; A picture of the foundation of the building in which Messrs. Wehrheim, Ajuda, Roman and Barrett appear; A long list of American contributors to the Santa Isabel Building Fund, as sent by Dr. Minton.

The stone was placed into the wall by the writer and a mason, who proceeded to make it firm by the application of cement. During which time Rev. Cotto Reyes and Mrs. Barrett sang.

The stone being firmly located, Dr. D. P. Barrett led in prayer. The congregation sang.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE RESTORATION AND CONVERSION OF THE JEWS.

By A. C. Fellman.

Chapter III.

(11) It has been predicted that when they shall be restored, all the tribes shall be converted. "Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in my anger, and I will bring them again to this place and will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear me forever. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. And I will cleanse them from all iniquity whereby they have sinned against me. I will put a new spirit within you, and I will take away the stony heart out of their flesh, and I will give them a heart of flesh. For I will take you from among the heathen and gather you out of all countries, and bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean from your filthiness, and from all your idols will I cleanse you. And I will put my spirit within you and cause you to walk in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least to the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity and will remember their sin no more."

It is useless to say that it has reference to their return from Babylon. The whole nation was not then converted. It is plain their restoration is in the future

(12) Because the coming of the Messiah is connected with the restoration of the Jews, such restoration must be in the future. "At that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; (that is, Daniel's people, the Jews), and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."—Dan. 12:1. Read this with Matt. 24: 15-29, and the 14th chapter of Zech. Christ's first advent did not deliver nor restore the twelve tribes, and neither the first nor the second advent of the Messiah, took place at the restoration from Babylon, consequently such restoration must be in the future.

(13) Still another argument for their restoration is the hope and general expectation of the Jews, which they have cherished for nineteen centuries for their restoration to the land, and expressed in the daily Synagogue prayers. They have prayed, "Gather us together from the four corners of the earth, restore thy people as of old," "dwell thou in the midst of Jerusalem," etc. On the feast of the Passover, it is said repeatedly, "this year we are here, at the next year, we shall be in the land of Israel." On the 9th of Ab, they fast for the destruction of their temples and the national calamities attending these events. Even after two thousand years of wandering and persecution, they have ever looked with longing eye towards Palestine, the land of their fathers, and their love for Jerusalem remains unchanged. The same noble sentiments expressed in the Psalms were always in their minds and still are, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." It was their hope in God's promise that has supported them in their unparalleled sufferings, that He will surely gather them again out of every country, and bring them again to the land which He gave to their fathers, for an everlasting possession, and which is now blazing forth with new light before the eyes of the Jew, since the capture of Jerusalem from the Turk and the pledge of the British and French governments for the establishment of the Jewish State in Palestine.

(14) Another argument in favor of their return to their own land is the wonderful preservation of the Jews as a distinct people. Were there no prophetic star to guide us in our expectation of them, their present state and circumstances might induce us to conclude that they are reserved for mighty purposes. It has been foretold by Moses and the prophets that, though they be dispersed amongst all nations, yet they should not be destroyed, but should subsist as a distinct people. God states "I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them to destroy them. Lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Though I make a full end of all nations, whither I have scattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee."—Lev. 26:44; Num. 23: 9; Jer. 30: 11. What a marvelous thing it is that after so many wars and battles, so many fires, famines and pestilences, after so many years of captivity and misery, they are not destroyed! Though scattered among all peoples, yet they subsist as a distinct people by themselves. Where is anything comparable to this to be found in all the histories and in all the nations under the sun? The drops of rain which fall, nay the great rivers which flow into the ocean, are soon mingled and lost in the immense body of waters. No people have continued unmixed as they have. The Gauls went forth in great bodies to seek their fortunes in foreign parts, but what traces or footsteps of them are now left remaining anywhere? In France, who can separate the race of the ancient Gauls from the various other people who have settled there? In Spain, who can distinguish exactly between the first possessors, the Spaniards, the Goths, and the Moors? In England, who can pretend to say with certainty, which families are derived from the ancient Britons, which from the Romans, Saxons, Danes, or Normans? But the Jew can go higher than any other nation, they can date their pedigree from the beginning, they know that they sprang from the stock of Abraham. What but a supernatural power could have preserved them in such a manner? They stand forth in the face of the world, a living miracle. The sovereignty, the faithfulness, the power and wisdom of God, are all illustrated in that nation, which God has called an everlasting nation, and concerning them, the sun, and the ordinances of the moon, and of the stars, are a pledge that they shall never cease being a nation before Jehovah for ever.

(15) Another strong argument for the returning of the Jews to the land of their fathers is that they are so remarkably situated, that at the shortest notice, they are ready and able to depart as easily as when they came out of Egypt. They have no country they call their own, they are strangers and so-journers as were their fathers. They have no landed property to dispose of; they do not intermarry with the nations; they have no share in the governments; they have nothing so as to be retained by relations, friends, and possessions, from returning. When we consider the many disappointments the Jews have met with in the different countries, it confirms and proves that the Providence of God intends for them to return and take possession of their ancient inheritance. He denies them a settlement in the countries where they are, to prevent any attachment to them, that they may not stay nor look back when called in the course of Providence to remove. He suffers them also to be hated and persecuted among the nations, that they may be more willing to quit the places of their captivity. He has also endowed them with riches, that they may have means to support themselves on their journey, and to establish themselves in their own land.

(16) The strong claim that the Jews have on Palestine on the ground of a recorded deed. The question has been asked, "Why should the control of the Holy Land be left to any particular race or nation?" Have the Jews a more superior claim than the millions of Protestants, Catholics, or other creeds? In answer, let it be said that the Jews have a well-grounded and just title to Palestine. Joshua, who entered the promised land and rid it of its godless inhabitants, cannot be called a Protestant. David, who stormed the citadel of the Jebusites and planted the Morgan David (the Jewish Emblem) upon the battlements, was not a member of the Catholic church, and Judas Maccabees, who redeemed the temple from the profanation of Antiochus, was not a follower of the other religious sects. God's promise gives the Jew the strongest claim to the land, which is recognized as their own. What He has promised, He will fulfill. Not a word shall fail. God cannot deny Himself. His truth must stand forever. "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the Children of Adam, He set bounds of the peoples, according to the number of the children of Israel." God will plant the Jews there, to be "rooted up no more forever."

Sufficient evidence has been given to show that the Jews will return to Palestine, and will develop in the land great increase of property. The Jews will build a temple in order to carry out their great thought that in Jerusalem there may be "an house of prayer for all the peoples," that thither all the pious of the earth may flock. Naturally the question arises, will the sacrificial system be restored? On this point there is a difference of opinion, both among Jews and Christians. The word of God indicates that such sacrifices will be restored, and that it will be an abomination and most displeasing to the Almighty. "He that killeth an ox, is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense as if he blessed an idol. Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighted in their abominations."—Isa. 66: 1-3, 6; Rev. 11: 1-2. The Jews will become, as prophesied, "a burdensome stone for all people."—Zech. 12: 3. Their prosperity will cause the nations to come up against them "to take a spoil and to take a prey." The Jewish people will pass through the terrible time of tribulation, which will usher in their national conversion. "Therefore, thus saith the Lord God, because ye are become dross, behold, therefore, I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem. As they gather silver and brass and iron and lead and tin into the midst of the furnace, to blow fire upon it, so will I gather you in mine anger and my fury, and I will leave you there and melt you." "Alas, for the day that is great, so that none is like it, it is even the time of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it." It is the day of vengeance of our God. At that time, God says, "I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplication, and they shall look unto Me whom they have pierced." Their sorrow will be great, the result is their national repentance and conversion, as they recognize in Jesus of Nazareth, their Messiah, "The Lord, our Righteousness," who will say to them, "It is My people, and they shall say the Lord is my God."—Zech. 13: 9. Then they shall turn to the Lord and the veil shall be taken away. In that day "the Lord shall comfort Zion. He will comfort all her waste places." "He will forgive their iniquity and remember their sin no more."

(To be concluded.)

A SAVIOUR FOR ALL.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; For unto you is born this day in the City of David, a Saviour, which is Christ, the Lord."—Luke 2: 10-11.

What a precious thought! "Glad tidings of great joy" were brought to the shepherds, and not only to the shepherds, but to all people—to all generations—glad tidings even unto the end. A Saviour was born into the world; there was prophesying of this many years before he was born. God had let the people know that there would be a Saviour some day for all people.

We find in Isaiah 8:14, that Christ was promised to the people, and they called his name Immanuel, which means "God with us." And as sure as God promised him, he was that sure born while the shepherds kept watch over their flocks by night. For the angel of the Lord appeared, accompanied by a heavenly host; and the glory of the Lord shone around about them. Then the angel spoke to them and said, "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." It was good tidings, indeed, to those who know our Saviour, and it was good tidings to those who have heard of him but are yet in sin—for Christ is willing to extend his mercy towards them.

Parents and little children have a hard time where Christ is unknown. They are neglected and mistreated in heathen lands and in non-Christian homes. But when Christ sends his messengers to them to tell them of him and teach them how to live, it is good tidings to them. What was Christ anointed for? Did you ever think? Read Luke 4: 18. These good tiding were also for the poor. Jesus especially mentions the poor in numbers of places. If we are poor, needy, or destitute while on this earthly sphere, if we will only do the will of God by serving him, he will give us a home with him in heaven, where there is no sadness at all, but joy, peace and happiness forever.

It matters not how heart-broken we may be, nor how many burdens we have to bear, Christ can comfort our hearts and lift our burdens, when no one else can. Christ brings good tidings to sufferers.

Homes have been prepared for orphan children. Aid and shelter have been given to the old people who have worked so hard in the service of God, trying to do his will and carrying his message, that "Whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16.

Christ spent all his time while here on earth, doing good, preaching many wonderful sermons, teaching people how they should live, healing the sick, raising the dead, giving sight to the blind. When people only touched him, they were healed. And I am so thankful he has the same power today he had then. If we will only come to him believing, as we should, and get in touch with him through prayer, he can and will heal our afflictions. I am so thankful to God he can.

Christ always had enemies, even until he was crucified. When he was only a babe, King Herod sought to destroy him, but God cared for him and his parents, and they escaped. When he was doing good, his enemies would falsely accuse him because they were jealous of him. When he was brought before Pilate, innocent as he was, the wicked men cried out "Crucify him," and he was delivered over to them to be put to death. They placed a crown of thorns upon his dear head, carried him and nailed him to the cross. There he bled, suffered and died for the sins of us. Yet there are many going on in sin, careless, cold, indifferent, as if they thought they would spend eternity here on the earth.

I believe every community should have a revival meeting during the Christmas holidays. Instead of his, there are so many worldly amusements going on. There are so many worldly Christians when there is work for each one to do in the service of our dear Lord. Christ finished the work that was given him to do (John 14: 4), and ascended into heaven, but he sent the comforting Spirit down, just as he said he would do. How anxious we should be to finish the work that God has given us to do, that when we are weighed in the balances, we will not be found lacking. I can speak for myself. I do want to finish all of the work that God has given me to do. The happiest moments of my life are when I am nearest to Jesus, doing his will.

Christ says, in John 14: 12-16, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my father." "What doth it profit my brethren, though a man say he hath faith and have not works? Even so faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone."—Jas. 2: 14, 17. If we have an earthly home here we must expect to work for it. If we will work for Christ and do his will, he will give us a home that will last forever.

O what a precious thought to know that Christ is our Saviour. He has power to save, and will save. Those that come to him, he will in no wise cast out. If sinners would only stop and think what a Saviour means to their souls, and what eternity means after life is spent here on earth, they would turn from their sins, and Christ would save them, and the angels of heaven would rejoice. Christ went up into heaven to prepare a place for his children, so we should strive to be ready when he comes to receive us.

I am so thankful to our dear Heavenly Father for the gift of His blessed Son, our Saviour. It means so much to us.

O, dear friends, pray for me, that I may live nearer our heavenly home each day, and that I may do more in our school room, in our church, in our societies, to help someone else to Christ. And may we live to meet around the throne of God, where we can behold our Saviour's face forever, Amen.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

The pastor and family were pleasantly surprised at the December meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society, which was held at the parsonage, when members and friends came in loaded with good things to eat and led by Deacon J. W. Price, marched into the dining room and showered us with good things to eat for Christmas. We are deeply grateful for these acts of kindness and generosity on the part of our people and hope to prove ourselves more worthy of these favors.

The Sunday School Christmas Entertainment was held at the parsonage December the 21st. The attendance good and a most enjoyable program was rendered.

A Young People's Missionary Society was organized at the parsonage January the 5th, with fifteen members. Mr. Marvin Harton is President, Miss Arlene Adams, Vice President and Miss Viola English, Secretary and Treasurer. The society will pay double the dues required by the Woman's Mission Board and will give half to the piano fund for the church.

Our Sunday School held its third Anniversary service at our place of worship, January the 7th. The attendance was large, including 84 per cent of the membership. Dr. Gilbert Glass, who is at the head of the Sunday School work in the Southern Presbyterian Church, gave a most excellent address. There were other interesting features on the program among which was recognition for faithful attendance.

Two members of the school, Prof. P. J. Kernodle and Claiborne Kelly have not missed a Sunday since the school was organized January 4, 1920. Prof. Kernodle is teacher of a Bible class and in recognition of his faithful service, the class presented him with a beautiful umbrella as a Christmas Present.

The First Christian Church is participating in the Union Week of Prayer Service being conducted by the protestant churches of the city. This is the first united effort of all the churches in this service for many years and it is proving quite a success.

Our church has also voted to join the Council of Churches which is being formed in the city. Prof. P. J. Kernodle, Miss Lucy Eldredge and the pastor represent us in the organization.

We are revising our list of those interested in the Richmond Church, who live in the city, and would appreciate getting the names of any who have moved from other churches.

The pews, for our new church, were selected at our last business meeting. They will be purchased from the Theodore Kundst Company of Cleveland, Ohio.

We want our readers to make an investment in the new church in the capital of the Old Dominion and the former capital of the Confederacy.

TALKS OF DR. D. A. LONG AND DR. F. H. MARTIN FEATURE YESTERDAY'S LUNCHEON.

Rotarians at their regular weekly luncheon yesterday afternoon at the Atlantic Coast Line restaurant enjoyed the greatest treat they have had in months when they were addressed first by Dr. F. H. Martin, pastor of the First Baptist Church of this city, and then by Dr. D. A. Long, of Burlington, North Carolina, who is in the city for a short time on a visit to his son Joe C. Long. Both addresses were appropriate to the spirit which should obtain at the beginning of the New Year and encouraging indeed were the messages that the speakers brought to the Rotarians. The meeting was declared to be one of the best from several standpoints the club has held in a long time and the addresses of the visitors will stand out as shining marks in the history of Rotary in Florence. Dr. Martin is too well known in Florence to make comment necessary. It is true, however, that he made before the club yesterday one of the finest talks that he has ever made before a Florence audience and that is saying a great deal. Dr. Long, though eighty years old, impressed the Rotarians with his youthful spirit and his progressiveness. He gave the Rotarians out of the wealth of his rich experience many things it will do them good to think about. Meetings of the club will be held hereafter on Monday of each week at 1:15 instead of Thursday at 2 o'clock.—Local Paper.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Toronto Convention registered 1111 delegates from 66 nations. Geographically, it was the greatest meeting ever held in the world. The balcony of Massey Hall was draped with flags of more than 50 nations, all joined together, as if the nations were all at peace. It was suggestive, at least, of world-peace. This meeting was united in its purpose to rid the world of what Lord George said was "England's greatest enemy during the world-war." It was a league of nations against alcoholism. Scientists, statesmen, labor leaders, Catholic and Protestant churchmen, men and women from every continent, united their testimony in favor of a dry world. Each day tableaus were presented representing some phase of the temperance movement and its results.

At the Washington Convention, December 18, 1895, when the Constitution of the National Anti-Saloon League was formed, it was proposed to leave the church out of it; but delegates from the W. C. T. U. said they had a "C" in their name, and they did not propose to remove it. That settled the question, and the definition of the Anti-Saloon League is now, "The Church in action against the Saloon." It was woman, therefore that kept "C" in the League. In temperance reform, woman has held a leading place; and well she might, for she and her children have been the greatest sufferers from this subtile foe.

Facts, opinions, and purposes were the main features of the Convention. Ignorance and false propaganda are responsible for many of the violations of the Prohibition Law. Statistics from reliable sources prove the success of Prohibition in the United States, Gifford, Gordon and Melbourne, Australia, who came to this country in July, 1921, as an accredited delegate, to study the operation of Prohibition in the U. S., brought convincing statistics from many sources to show decrease in drunkenness, the closing of 68 Neal Institutes for the treatment of inebriates; the closing of 38 of the 50 Keely Institutes; the "Inebriate Home" in Knoxville, Iowa, with five great buildings, no longer contains alcoholic patients. The Inebriate Home has been sold to the U. S. Government, and is now used as home for disabled soldiers. Crime has decreased. A $100,000.00 jail in Birmingham, Ala., is now used as a Juvenile court and Receiving home. There are 840 cells in the County jail in Pittsburg, Penn., and before Prohibition 940 prisoners were crowded into these cells; now, 315 of the cells are empty. Judge Gummill of Chicago says: "The number of arrests in America for drunkenness has decreased 600,000 per year. Again, he says: "20 per cent of the jails in the U. S. have been without prisoners since Prohibition went into effect, and 80 per cent of them have been reduced from 15 per cent to 80 per cent.

Prohibition has increased business, Savings accounts, thrift in families, and, as R. B. Patterson, President of Spokane Dry Goods Company, says: "It is, in short, a great economic gain." Mr. Gordon says he asked a great Editor why newspapers said so much about violations of law, and the apparent failure of Prohibition, and so little or nothing about the beneficial results of Prohibition. His answer was: "Violation of law is news. Observance of law is not news. To illustrate: A prominent citizen may lead an exemplary life, and papers say nothing; let him break the law, and he becomes a subject for newspaper head-lines. "That may explain why the American Press has said nothing about the Toronto Convention; but it certainly is not to the credit of the American Press that it did not report the meeting in Toronto. The Literary Digest is supposed to give something of the world's news; but it did not even mention the Toronto meeting, though one of the greatest in the world. If the Press would support the law by united voice, violations would be decreased. The Press is, therefore, responsible, by its silence, for the difficulty of law enforcement.

ELON LETTER.

The college has recently come into possession of $4,355.28 from the estate of Jesse Winborne and his wife. Several years ago $500 came from the estate. It has been decided to let this latter sum accumulate until it equals $4,500 so that a permanent fund of $5,000 will be perpetually bearing interest here to further a cause near and dear to the hearts of these two sainted members of the Christian Church.

Jesse Winborne was born in Nash County, N. C., June 22, 1832, on the farm of his father, Jack Winborne, a sturdy and substantial citizen, ably seconded by his wife, a pious and faithful companion in the rearing of his children. The son was nurtured in the ways of honesty, sincerity, and fair dealing. In the family were four children, two boys and two girls.

In his 22nd year Jesse Winborne migrated to Wake County to engage in the turpentine business, then a very promising and lucrative industry. There he met and later married Miss Tranquilla Helen Jones (born Feb. 28, 1832), the daughter of a wealthy and influential planter. These two noble spirits founded a home near McCullers and became leaders in their community and church. Deacon Jesse Winborne and Aunt Helen will never be forgotton for their lives of love and devoted service. Their home was known as the preacher's home.

In 1861 Mr. Winborne volunteered for the service of his country. His record as a soldier, like that of his private life, was without a blemish. In war as in peace he was as has been truly said a soldier brave and fearless, a patriot true and tried.

Returning from the Civil War with fortune wrecked, but with spirit undaunted, he settled down to carve out for himself in his community a monument of character more enduring than bronze. He and his wife, tho childless, supported schools and educated young people of promise. No worthy community call sounded in vain its appeal for their support. Prosperity came to them, a deserved prosperity, a prosperity based on service rendered their community. Nobody was ever any poorer for any gain that came to Uncle Jesse Winborne and Aunt Helen nor did any one pay more than was fair for any service they rendered. How beautiful a story their neighbors relate of the life of these two devoted servants of God and of man.

Personally I never knew Uncle Jesse and Aunt Helen till they, rich in years, retired from active life to spend their sunset days in the college community to which their liberal support had already meant so much. They moved to Elon College about 1900. The College never had truer friends nor ones more thoroughly devoted to its work and more hopeful of its success than these devoted two. They were willing to prove their love by their deeds, and so made the college and orphanage the residuary legatees of their estate, the college receiving two thirds and the orphanage one third, payable five years after their death.

Uncle Jesse passed to his eternal reward on July 30, 1907 and Aunt Helen to hers on Nov. 5, 1917. Their mortal bodies lie buried side by side, marked by a noble marble shaft typical of their united life, in the cemetery of Wentworth Christian Church, the scene of their active Christian service and where their church membership was held.

But no marble shaft can outlive the record of gracious Christian living of these departed friends. And in their provision for the perpetuation of the principles their lives had so signally exemplified in the cause of Christian education and the help of orphaned childhood they have set an example worthy to be emulated on the part of all who love the Kingdom of God and really are anxious to provide for its coming.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

On February 5th a simultaneous canvass begins for funds for Bethlehem College. As we stand upon the threshold of this campaign, our hearts articulate with anticipation. Today we view it through the golden haze of a great idea. The present radiates with the joy of that anticipation that even the dullest hearts in the presence of a great challenge. The future of this institution beckons with hope.

How high our hopes run as we contemplate the learning in the far South. How our pulses bound as we think of its potentialities and possibilities. What a power it will be! It will be a force that will convert indolence into industry; failure, that arrant impostor, will be supplanted by success; inefficiency will have to make place for throughness; meaningless words will be clothed with power; homeliness of life and character will be translated through training, toil, vision, and virture into something passing beautiful; how sons and daughters will once more rejoice fathers' and mothers' hearts! how boys and girls will be taught to live the lives they should live; how they will be educated to think straight, act straight, and live straight; how truth, honesty, and integrity will be crowded in your manhood and womanhood, and how ignorance, once so flourishing, but now in utter decay, will go into bankruptcy in that court that has no appeal.

These are only a few of the blessings that will come to the people of the Christian Church in the far South, if Bethlehem College is made a reality. It holds out a promise wrapped in gorgeous splendor. It is coming to us that we may revel in its ministry. It is given by a faith that looks through the clouds into the bright sunlight beyond. It is promised through a hope that springs eternal in the human breast. It is anticipated through a courage that through the grace of God is humanity's. It is conceived by an imagination with which our Creator in one of His gracious moments endowed us. But it can mean nothing to the church, to the present or future generations, unless we have the financial backing of our people. I appeal to you to place this matter upon your hearts today and ask God what He would have you give to make this institution a reality. It may be that you can make a large contribution. If you can not give much, then give what you can. Ask God to help you decide the amount.

Our goal in this campaign is one hundred thousand dollars. I want five men to give five thousand dollars each to this one hundred thousand dollar building fund. I want twenty-five men to give a thousand dollars each to this fund. Will you be one of these men? Ask God if He wants you to be one of them. I do not fear the outcome if God is allowed to dictate the amount of our pledge. What will you do about it reader?

LETTER FROM J. W. WELLONS.

I spent my Christmas at the Masonic and Eastern Star Home, at Greensboro, where I am chaplain. It was so pleasant to me to be with all those dear old people at the Masonic Home. We all had a pleasant time here where such excellent arrangements had been made for the old Masons, their wives and daughters of North Carolina. They have a splendid home, comfortable rooms, heat, light and water, and splendid good board where they may all be happy and well cared for by good nurses.

On Saturday evening they had something on the order of a Christmas tree, and so many presents were sent up to the old people by their Masonic friends, and all got a nice portion, including myself.

We had plenty of turkey and other good things for Christmas. A. C. Butler presented me with a beautiful poem of his own, writing on my birthday, when I was ninety-seven years old. I will publish it and let you all read it. I was disappointed at not going to the Christian church while there, but heard a good sermon at a Presbyterian church, and we had a fine sermon at the home, preached on "Love," from an Episcopal minister, Rev. Mr. Nash, without robe or notes. While there I got a large number of letters, cards, presents, etc., in memory of Christmas day.

I left there on Monday, New Year's day and my birthday, for Elon College, where I received many letters, cards, etc., on my birthday, and I was so grateful to the many who sent them for Christmas and my birthday from so many individuals, families, churches, lodges, and other organizations. I am so grateful to them all for them. Here I got nice presents also. My health was good during the Christmas holidays and up to now. Our school has opened with fine prospects and is very encouraging.

J. W. WELLONS.

P. S.—I have for many years been praying for those who have chronic troubles that their physicians can't cope with. I will correspond with any, regardless of distance, creed, sex, color or age. God is everywhere at the same time. An earnest prayer and thought travel with the rapidity of electricity, and God is at the bedside of those who are chronically troubled, ready to administer to their wants and necessities. It is said in John 15: 7, "If you abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you." The charge will be a letter stating the great improvements made by the patients, as many others have written, with every letter distinct so that an old man in his ninety-eighth year can see to read what has been written.

PAGE VALLEY LETTER.

We held an evangelistic meeting with Bethel Church, December 4th to 17th. We had no ministerial assistance; but the Holy Spirit was there the entire two weeks, and His presence was manifest at practically every service.

There were no accessions to the church and no professions of religion—there being little raw material in the community to "work up;" but the church was greatly revived and gave ample evidence of the same. In fact, one of our chief plans for this year's work in the whole pastorate is, by God's help, to strengthen the walls of Zion. This, we feel, was surely done at Bethel. Before the revival began, the members of this little church had become very much discouraged, the fires of spirituality were, apparently, burning rather low, and the church had almost ceased to function. Before the revival closed, many were praying and testifying in public, and a weekly cottage prayer-meeting had been started in the neighborhood. Several who had grown cold, spiritually, renewed their allegiance to Christ, and practically every body was obviously aroused spiritually.

The majority of the members of this church have moved away from the immediate vicinity of the church building. Many have, long ago, moved into some one of the various towns of this and other sections. Some of these have transferred their membership to churches of other denominations in the towns in which they reside, there being no churches of our denomination in these towns. It seems to be one of the "missions" of the Christian Church, in this little valley, to serve as a sort of "incubator" and "brooder" for other denominations, anyway. We feel that it is very unfortunate for us that we could not establish churches of our faith in these growing towns befort they became over-churched.

Since writing my last letter to THE SUN, I have conducted one funeral and performed three marriages.

I should have written this letter sooner, but the serious illness of my oldest boy, R. P. Jr., for the past two weeks, prevented me from doing so. He is improving now, however.

My family and I were the recipients of many nice presents and other tokens of love and friendship from relatives, friends and members this Christmas—several of which are valuable, and all of which are highly appreciated. But by far the most valuable of our Christmas presents which we have received, is a Ford touring car which some of the members of Leaksville and New Port churches and some of our friends of other faiths have helped us to purchase—these friends paying nearly all of the purchase price. We have long felt the need of a car, as I have had to travel with horse and buggy almost altogether in getting to my appointments and in doing my pastoral work in this widely scattered field of churches and members. These loyal friends, too, saw the need and came to our assistance. The assitant pastor—my wife—and I are profoundly grateful, both to our friends and to our loving Heavenly Father, for this token of esteem, appreciation and love. We can never find words adequate to express our feeling of gratitude and sense of unworthiness for this most useful gift. May Heaven's richest blessings be upon every one who has contributed anything, however small the amount, towards the purchase of our car; and may our loving and merciful Heavenly Father enable us to use it much in His service and for His glory.

GOOD NEWS FROM DR. JAY.

At the Sunday morning service, December 17th, the four adult Sunday School classes of the Holy Neck church presented their pastor, the writer, with a beautiful, open-faced, gold South-Bend watch.

Mrs. B. D. Jones, the Mission Superintendent, was given the privilege of making an announcement, and after stating that the Missionary Aid Society had been successful in securing more than one hundred subscriptions (103) to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, thus winning a fifty dollar prize, for which the Society was very grateful, she then began to speak of some events which happened up in the Pennsylvania hills about forty years ago, which made possible the present happy fellowship between this church and its pastor, and as the four younger classes had planned their Christmas gifts to the children of the Mountain Work, she said the four adult classes wished to make a gift to their pastor in honor of his birthday, the 40th.

A package was then handed to the pastor, which he was told to open, and within the beautiful mahogany case was a gold watch. It is needless to say that it was appreciated, and no words were adequate to express the gratitude felt toward these kind friends.

Because of very muddy roads and inclement weather, the attendance has not been as good as during November, when the average attendance for the month was 148 at Sunday School and 160 at preaching services. Yet during December, no service has fallen below an attendance of 100 and the average will be above 125.

The first Sunday in December was "Men and Millions" Sunday, and a special program was rendered. Five laymen spoke to good effect on the various enterprises of the church and their relation to and dependence upon Men and Millions. Good results have come from this meeting, and many have paid their pledges. The church passed a resolution that it be the sense of the church that these pledges should all be paid and none repudiated.

The Willing Workers sent a bag of peanuts as a Christmas present to the children of our Mountain Work, and the four younger classes of the Sunday School sent a box of soap, towels, hose and handkerchiefs to the same place.

Christmas shopping and the giving of presents has certainly reached normalcy, if the writer is any judge of the things he has observed. But the only thing that would seem to mar the sacred memories of Christmas day was the constant reverberations of fire works. It was a relief to the writer to leave his fair little town behind and go to the country to avoid this unseemly way of celebrating the Saviour's birth.

Broadcasting Sermons.

Kingshighway Presbyterian Church of St. Louis is said so be the first church in St. Louis to install its own radio broadcasting station. Both morning and evening services are broadcast with excellent results. One man telephoned that he had not been to church for twenty-five years and that he was not able to attend church now but was going to listen to the sermon every Sabbath morning. The parts for the broadcasting apparatus were purchased and put together under the direction of one of the young men of the church who is a senior in the Engineering School of Washington University.

The Church of the Covenant, Cincinnati, Rev. Frank H. Stevenson, pastor, has also installed a powerful radio distributing service and is using it every week with excellent results.—Herald and Presbyter.

It is such institutions as the family altar and the observance of the Lord's Day and he simple saying of grace at our daily bounty that signalize our adherence to the traditional principles of our Christian land and our sincere desire for a continuance of the divine favor.—Rev. David James Burrell, D. D.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

Christian Orphanage

THE ORPHANAGE GOOD WORK GOES ON.

Dear Friends:—

I want to invite you to rejoice with me. I feel like I would like to set a big dinner and invite all of you to come and dine with me. You have been so good to me and so loyal to the Christian Orphanage during the year 1922 that I have reached the three goals set.

Our first goal set was to reach $25,000.00 for the year. We went over that goal by several hundred dollars. Our second goal was to raise ten thousand dollars from November first to end of the year. We reached and passed that goal. Our next goal was to raise for our Thanksgiving goal the sum of six thousand dollars. We reached it and passed it. So we are happy and rejoice in the loyalty of our friends. You have made it possible to reach all the goals set. I thank you and am grateful more than words can express.

I want to thank all those who sent in boxes and packages for Christmas. I have tried to report all in THE SUN and to acknowledge each one with a personal letter. If for any reason some have been omitted I assure you it has been an error of the head and not of the heart. If we have missed any we beg you to forgive us. When so many packages come in at a time as they do at Christmas and sometimes not marked so we can tell where they come from it is hard to give the proper credit.

Let us give God all the praise for what has been accomplished during the year 1922 and ask His blessings upon our work here for the year 1923 that our church may do greater things for His honor and glory in the year 1923.

The following has been sent in since our last report:

Richards and Pollard, Winchester. Va., one barrel apples.

Young Peoples Bible Class, Ivor Christian Church, one box dresses for little girls.

H. C. Griffin and L. L. Sandy two bags peanuts.

Burlington Christian Church, "White Gifts" Stockings, towels, soap, thread, tablets, pencils and many other useful articles.

Waverly Christian Church, "White Gifts," two quilts, dresses, aprons, hose, towels, underwear, soap and many other useful articles.

Bethlehem Sunday School, Broadway, Va., one box ginghams, dresses, towels, soap, pillow cases etc.

Mrs. Samuel Wright, Superintendent Primary Department, Franklin, Ohio, one box candy and pop corn.

The Sisterhood Class, New Palestine Church, Sidney, Ohio, one box clothing.

Portsmouth Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., one box Christmas gifts.

FAMILY ALTAR

MONDAY.

"There was no room for them in the inn" —Luke 2:7.

"No room!" The Lord was crowded out! And I suggest that this incident at the birth of the Saviour is symbolic of the tragedy of the whole of His life, and of the continued tragedy of our relationship to Him today. He has been excluded from the central place. He has been hustled into the outer courts. No room has been offered Him in the inn. He has been crowded out! And I further suggest that the only place in which He can make His home today is in the inn of the soul, the secret rooms of the personal life. We sometimes sing, in one of the most tender and gracious of our hymns; "O make our hearts Thy dwelling place;" and that is just what the Lord is willing and waiting to do. "O make our hearts Thine inn!" But when He moves toward us He finds the inn already thronged. There is no room for Him, and He is relegated to the cold grudging shelter outside of our lives. He is crowded out! O, let us afresh, open the door to the Saviour, and see what will happen if we allow Him all the room in the inn. What does He Himself say about His coming? Listen. "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." That cannot be said of every visitor who is allowed to enter our souls, and so we sing:

"O come to my heart, Lord Jesus come!
There is room in my heart for Thee."

TUESDAY.

"And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto Him gifts; gold, and frankincense and myrrh."—Mat. 2:11.

Those who know the habits of the Eastern mind will conclude, as a matter of course, that the gifts of the Magi were designed to be symbolic, and the symbolism is happily neither doubtful nor far to seek. Gold is undoubtedly the offering to a King. Gold is concentrated power over the material and visible world. Now to the material and visible world very much of our life is necessarily given. The real question, therefore is, how shall we use the gold of life? and what shall we do with it. Except as a means of some future good, it is in itself worthless and unsatisfying. This gift says plainly. "Offer the gold of thy life to God, and to the service of His Son Jesus Christ." But there is an inner as well as an outer life. The gift of frankincense signifies the adoration of the soul within.

Let us spend a little time this day in adoration. No wonder that in the olden days, when those words of the Nicene Creed were repeated, "And became man," the worshippers prostrated themselves to the very ground. Think of His humiliation till you cannot help adoring Him.

Myrrh is the symbol of suffering and of death. Many are called to tread the path of suffering. Instead of complaint learn to glorify God in the fires, and remember that without chastisement we are bastards and not sons.

"Our God contracted to a span;
Incomprehensively made man."

WEDNESDAY.

"Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16:18.

A minister had in his congregation an intelligent man who was a sceptic. He had long tried to convince him without success. At last he prepared a series of addresses on the evidences of Christianity, adapted, as he judged, to overcome the sceptic's difficulties. Subsequently the man was converted, and the minister was congratulating himself upon the success of his argument. But when he came to talk with the new convert, he found that he had been brought to Christ by quite diffierent means. One Sunday, as the then skeptic was leaving the house of God, a feeble old Christian woman dropped the stick with which she was walking. He stooped to pick it up, and kindly placed it in her hand again. Grateful for his consideration, she thanked him, and tenderly asked, "Do you know my blessed Saviour?" In those words he felt the reality of Christ in that godly woman's heart, and he believed. "Upon this rock will I build My church," and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Never shall the power of hell blot out the reality and the effect of the revealing of Jesus to human hearts by the blessed Spirit.

THURSDAY.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, self-control."—Gal. 5:22-23.

The first point for observation, an obvious one, but none the less to be definitely considered, is that the fruit of the Spirit consists in its essence not of doing but of being. There is nothing in this description which directly speaks of energetic enterprises, multiplied labours, severe sufferings, great material sacrifices. The activities of life are in fact almost absent from the immediate view; and the passive, the patient, aspect of the spiritual man's contact with life and men is alone very visibly present. What do we read in this? That the spiritual man is called, as his highest calling, to cut himself off from active, willing, practical service of others? That the celesial fruit will grow, and ripen, and be ready for the festival of God, most favourably in a life of contemplation, in a desert, or a cloister, or a jealously isolated study? A thousand times No!

The whole New Testament negatives such a thought. In it, the ideal Christian life is the life in which the Lord is glorified and manifested amidst the manifold relative duties and labors of the life of home, of citizenship, of public ministry, of active evangelization.—Bishop Moule.

FRIDAY.

"Because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth.—Rev. 3:16.

There are not many, but a few, to whom nothing on earth would be so great a crucifixion as for them to consent to be sweet and loving to their fellows. Their greatest cross would be in giving up their self-imposed cross. But while some fail to live a life of pure love through self-imposed burdens, the great majority who fail to get all the land in possession do so through love of ease. Testimony languishes, long and earnest pleading at the mercy seat neglected, heart-searching is overlooked. Soul-sluggishness is indulged, and the soul that erst was shouting over the falling walls of Jericho is now a feeble captive, paying tribute to the enemies of the land. Yes, more frail through spiritual sloath than anything else. O soul! the years are creeping over thy brow; thou wilt soon plunge into the fathomless ages of eternity; thou hast no time to lean on past experiences; be ever arousing thyself and ever arousing thy drowsy neighbor. Make it a study how thou canst be little, and lowly, and patient, and loving. If others who are greater and brighter than thou shalt loiter, be thou up, and on with Jesus; be industriously holy, as a celestial miser laying up treasures in heaven. We must neglect no item of holy living; economy in the pennies of holiness will make us millionaires in grace.

SATURDAY.

"Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now perfected in the flesh."—Gal. 3:3, R. V.

It is a sad fact that many who enter into the experience of heart-cleansing, after going on rejoicing for a season, get lukewarm and spiritually inert, and do not become established in the interior habits of holiness. A brother said he had years ago entered into the promised land of holiness, but he had been captured in the land. After the death of Joshua and his contemporaries, the people were led into bondage right in their own promised land. This is too often the case with those who enter full salvation. The deep peace and joyous liberty that ensue upon finding heart-purity are apt to superinduce a laxity of self-denial, and a love of spiritual ease, which are ruinous to deep and continued holiness. I have heard some professors of holiness speak lightly of fasting, of cross-bearing, of self-denial; as if perfect love was only a holiday song, and freedom from holy battle and earnest toil. Remember, O soul, that if you want to continue in holiness, you are to aim at following your Lord in all His mind and spirit.

SUNDAY.

As thy servant was busy here and there he was gone."—I. Kings 20:40.

Picture Ahab returning from the battlefield flushed with victory. He is accosted by a man who has been sitting wounded and dusty beside the road. He is a disguised prophet acting a parable. He says in effect: "I have come from the battle. In the hour of victory, the captain, whom I acknowledge I was bound to obey, gave me charge of a prisoner of note, saying that if he escaped, my life should answer for it. I admit I failed, for while thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone." Then the prophet, flinging off his disguise, set before the king a picture of his neglect of opportunity which is worth our study. "He was gone," what a sad story these words suggest; a charge neglected, a duty unfulfilled, a bitter loss sustained, a dire punishment incurred. True he was busy, but he was busy about the wrong thing. We are in danger of spending our lives on unimportant things, leaving no time or room for the highest and best things. It is the busy idleness of the restless child, not the busy industry of the thoughtful, sanctified, high-purposed man. What we need is a purpose that will bind all our multiplied actions into one; the single eye; the passion to please God and Him alone in all we do. Let us claim forgiveness and cleansing for our past unfaithfulness, our lost opportunities, our neglected duties.—J. G. M.

"The Past is gone, the Future is not ours,
The Present only is within our clasp;
Forget the Past, the Future trust with God,
The Present firmly hold within thy grasp.
And send it up to Him a chord of praise;
Whether in toil, in service, or in prayer.
Each moment, let us glorify our Lord,
As angels glorify Him 'over there,'"

"The Rich Man and Lazarus."—Luke 16.

Golden Text: "Charge them that are rich in this present world that they be not high-minded, nor have their hope set on the uncertainty of riches, but God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy."—I. Timothy 6:17.

Devotional Reading:—Ps. 37:1-9.

Reference Material:—Ps. 49:6-20; 73; II. Cor. 8:1-9; 15; I. Tim. 6:17-19.

Lessons for Today.

The great truths underlying stewardship are presented in the first story of Jesus in the lesson chapter. "He that is faithful in a very little, is faithful also in much" is true today. The steward is counted worthy according to whether he is faithful in fulfilling his duties. The steward is unworthy when he neglects his master's work. The secret of promotion and advancement is found in the careful performance of small duties. God entrusts His work to those who have proven themselves worthy through loyal, humble faithful service. Do you look forward to occupying a place of greater influence and larger opportunity? Be faithful where you are, and God will give to you the larger responsibility in the work of His Kingdom.

"Lord, for tomorrow and its needs, I do not pray;
Keep me, my God, from stain of sin,
Just for today;
Help me to labor earnestly, and duly pray;
Let me be kind in word and deed, Father, today."—E. R. Wilberforce.

"And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate." To the rich man, Lazarus was an opportunity unseen, and a responsibility disregarded. He lay at his very gate in need. The owner of this house revelled in luxury which had blinded his eyes and deadened his soul. Selfishness was his great sin. He did not acknowledge by word or deed that he was "his brother's keeper." Only the light of eternity revealed to him how he had thrown away his life and wasted his powers, and overlooked his privileges. He had not put first things first. Then his thought was for his own brothers who were following in his footsteps, whom he wished to be given a special warning, but they would not listen to the messengers whom God had already sent with the needful warning. All the blessings of life are generous gifts from the Heavenly Father. Wealth He has given to men, and with it places upon them the greater responsibility for using it aright. "Not money—but the love for money—is the root of all evil." What opportunities are lying at your gate? What responsibilities are yours? How are they being met? In a way which will mean eternal life with the Father, or everlasting regret?

"And lest thou say in thine heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotton me this wealth. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he sware unto thy fathers as it is this day."—Deut. 8:17-18.

"God knoweth your hearts." Our motives, our thoughts and our impulses are known by God, and understood by Him. He judges, not as men do the outward appearance, which may be deceiving, but by our hearts. Rich and poor alike are His children, known and loved by Him, and His loving heart yearns for those who are selfish and disobedient, disloyal and untrue.

Of the thirty-eight parables given to men by the Master, sixteen referred to money. Story after story, He told revealing unmistakeable his attitude toward wealth, as a responsibility calling for faithful stewardship; as a temptation, which might separate man from his God; as a test of Christian discipleship. Christians should delight to give to God His part, and more. The tithe is His, and deep love for Him, and concern for His work, makes the disciple desire to add his gift, even to the tithe. God's approval blesses such a spirit.

"For giving is living," the angel said,
"Go feed the hungry sweet charity's bread."
"And must I keep giving again and again?"
My selfish and querulous answer ran.
"Oh no!" said the angel piercing me through
"Just give till the Master stops giving to you."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

January 28, 1923.

"What Are The Rightful Claims of the Church Upon Us?"—Heb. 10:19-25.

(Beginning Christian Endeavor Week.)

Thoughts on the Topic.

Jesus Christ said: "If therefore the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." (John 8:36). The blood of Jesus has made us free and given a "new and living way" to follow. Our church presses the rightful claim that its young people believe in Jesus Christ as the Head of the church, and that they follow in the Master's footsteps.—Verse 19-20.

It was God's plan for His people to have an earthly leader. The ministry of the church is a vital force, essential for the spiritual growth of its members. Our church rightfully calls upon us to loyally support those who have given their very lives and all their powers to the work of the Kingdom.—Verse 21.

The church rightly claims sincerity. a "true heart" in our Christian lives. Faith assures of God's power, of His spirit of loving forgiveness, that our hearts may be made clean and our sins blotted out. Sincerity is a Christian virtue, expressed in the life of the Master, demanded from His disciples. —Verse 22.

The church has a right to claim our faithfulness, not to one man, not to our own ideas of what the church should be doing, not to a church building merely, but faithfulness to God, which will make our loyalty enduring to every work which aims to bring men and women, and boys and girls nearer to God. God needs workers who will be faithful to the end, working for Him, not for self; for others, not for praise.—Verse 23.

"Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only." God needs doers; doers whose motto is "Others." Thoughtfulness for others would sweeten many a life, avoid many a quarrel and heart-ache, strengthen many a weak friend. What a common excuse is "I didn't think!" The church has a right to demand that we think, that others may be blessed.—Verse 24.

The church may rightfully claim that we attend its services. This is one promise made when the Christian Endeavor pledge is signed. This is one feature which has always been insisted upon in the program of Christian Endeavor—loyalty to the church, by attending its Sunday and mid-week services. Church attendance strengthens the individual Christian life. Public worship deepens the devotional life. Church attendance sets a good example. Church attendance helps the pastor, the members, and encourages the work. Can any Christian afford to deny this claim of the church?—Verse 25.

Plans for the Meeting.

This meeting is the first of a week which young people are observing all over the world, "Christian Endeavor Week," January 28th to February 4th. Plan to celebrate this week in your church, beginning January 28th, by thinking what the rightful claims of the Christian Church are upon young people.

If your Sunday School has not used the Responsive Reading prepared for its use for "Men and Millions Sunday" send to the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., for enough copies for use in your Christian Endeavor Society. Perhaps you will want to use it anyhow! Suggestions for the use of songs with it will also be sent —all free of charge. This leaflet contains information about all of our work, which the church must call upon the young people to help support by their prayers, interest, work and money. Make this "Men and Millions Night" in your Society, with the idea that the church, your church is calling for men and women to work, at home and far away, anywhere where Jesus Christ needs them; that your church is calling for money, which it may be your privilege to give to accomplish some great work which you cannot do yourself any other way. Impress upon the members in the talk of the leader, the great joyful privilege of being a co-worker with God, through the church which was established to carry on the work of His Kingdom.

Have five members ready to give three-minute talks (not longer) on the following subjects:

My Church's Claim Upon My Time.

My Church's Claim Upon My Money.

The Place of the Church in My Life.
(Does your church come first, second or last?)

Why I am A Member of the Christian Church.
(Giving the principles of the church briefly).

The Work of the Christian Church—It's Claims upon my Life. (Missions, Religious Education, Colleges, Orphanage, Christian Sun, etc.)

Ask your Sunday School Superintendent to present briefly the claims which the Sunday School feels that it may rightfully make upon young Christians, or your pastor may do this.

Bible Verses for Young Members to Quote, or Express a Thought on: 1 Cor. 3:9; Rev. 2:26; 1 Peter 4:16; Ephesians 2:19; James 1:22-24; Galatians 6:4; Galatians 6:10; Ephesians 4:32; Matt. 16:16, 17.

Have a quartet sing the following special song: (Tune: Keep the Home Fires Burning):

"Now there comes a ringing summons,
Falling from the throne above;
'Tis a challenge to our people
From the Christ, our King of love.
O, my people hasten, rally
'Gainst the bannered hosts of sin;
Help to crush man's mightiest tyrant;
Bring my glorious kingdom in.

CHORUS:

"Men and Millions needed,
Men and Millions needed,
Shall we heed the call of Christ, our glorious King?
Shall our lives be offered,
And our gold be proffered,
Till with shouts of victory the heavens ring?

"We are heralds of the dawning
With the Bible as our creed;
With the blessed name of Christian,
This the only name we need,
We, with Christ our only Leader,
Stand for Christian liberty,
Praying with our loving Master
For the Church's unity.

CHORUS:

"Millions for His glory,
Men to tell This story;
You must bring, O Christian Church, your gifts so free;
Till the world is lighted
And the church united
In the Spirit's bonds of love and liberty."

RESPONSIVE READING: Psalm 84.

SUGGESTIVE HYMNS FOR THE MEETING: "Battle Hymn of the Republic;" "Come Thou Almighty King;" "Break Thou the Bread of Life;" "How Firm a Foundation;" "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name;" " Stand Up For Jesus;" "I am Thine, O, Lord.

"O Church of God, awake, awake,
Seize fast thy sword and gird with might!
The hosts of darkness mighty are,
And bold and strong they press the fight;
But see, thy Captain leads thee on,
He who hath conquered ev'ry foe;
Thou needst not fear, but follow fast
And so with Him where He shall go.

"Up then, resolve to valiant be,
And force the fight till it is won;
Stay not thy hand, and thou shalt win,
Since Christ, thy Captain, leads thee on;
What tho' the conflict long may be,
And when thy weapons are laid down,
Thou shalt be wounded, weak and worn?
Thy Lord in honor thee shalt crown."—
Wallace I. Coburn.

AN ALL-THE-YEAR CHRISTMAS GIFT.

Have you ever thought how much happier the world would be if the Christmas spirit of loving-kindness and good-will ruled throughout the whole year? This is the spirit that makes life sweet and folks happy. The "Other Spirit" it might be well called. And such a spirit would not stop with those we see, and those whom we know well. It goes "into all the world" to all of the Father's children, caring for their needs, loving them in their suffering, making them happy ever. Did you give any Christmas gift this year which will be doing this all during 1923? Even yet it can be done. This is how.

The following resolution was passed at the session of the American Christian Convention held in Burlington last October, after a great address had been delivered by Mr. John Voris, who knows so well the conditions and needs in the lands of the Near East:

"That this Convention appoint an International Relief Committee, consisting of representatives from our Five Regional Conventions, to co-operate with the Near East Relief organization, and that, as nearly as possible, the Near East Relief funds be raised on the Sunday before Christmas in the North, and on January 21st in the Southern Convention."

During the past four years the Sunday Schools of the Christian Church have given over ten thousand dollars to the Near East Relief work, or to what the Chairman, Mr. F. R. Beach, Irvington, New Jersey calls the most wonderful work in the interest of humanity." $5 a month will save a child. $60 a year means another life saved and trained to help his country. Where can a better investment be found?

The Near East Relief is building wisely and well in teaching the orphans trades so they can support themselves and take their places in the reconstruction of their country. 87,000 people are receiving training in trades at eighteen industrial centers under the Near East Relief direction. 118,000 acres of land are being used for agricultural training and for crops. These trained orphans will be the leaders of the next generation in the Near East. This is the work for which your gift on January 21st will go. Your Sunday School will be reaching not only the boys and girls of your community, but will extend its work to reach other boys and girls who are looking to you for their chance to live and grow and work.

If you want to know more of this work write to Mr. Beach, at Irvington, New Jersey, and then take your offering, mailing it to Rev. J. F. Burnett, Christian Publishing Association Building, Dayton, Ohio, marking it plainly for "Near East Relief."

And God will bless your gift. It may go to the boys' orphanage at Nazareth, the town where the boy Jesus lived. It may go to help the new orphanage to be opened at Bethlehem where the Christ child was born. But wherever it goes, it will be used by wise men, with the Christ-like spirit, to carry the spirit of love to the suffering poor of the Near East who "are of the one blood of which God made all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

TOMORROW.

There was a Wise Man in the East whose constant prayer was that he might see today with the eyes of tomorrow. This is what the wise Sunday School superintendent and teachers are trying to do. They must attempt to see the needs of tomorrow, and then prepare for the meeting of those needs by the lessons taught today. The wise, growing church is constantly praying to the Father that He may reveal a vision that will stimulate men to greater work, and encourage them to try larger things.

This was the prayer of those who gave the first impetus to the great Forward Movement in our church. Their eyes had been opened to see the place which the church must fill in the world, and they saw that many men and much money was going to be needed to win the world for Jesus Christ. In "Men and Millions Day" in all of the Sunday Schools during January, the vision of this tomorrow, and the calls of this today, will go to many more boys and girls, and men and women. The whole program of the church will be presented as a great effort of consecrated people who call themselves Christians and as a challenge to the greatest heroism and loyalty that has ever been called for.

With these thoughts in your mind, and with a prayer for God's blessing, observe your "Men and Millions Sunday" in your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society, hoping to see men dedicate their lives and all they possess to the greatest work in all the world—living and working through the church, with the Heavenly Father.

"For we are God's fellow- workers."—1 Cor. 3:9.

FIELD NOTES.

A successful week's Sunday School Institute closed at the Christian Temple last Friday evening. Two classes met every night to study the work of the various departments of the Sunday School, and the average attendance was about sixty each night during the course. Classes were taught by Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary of Religious Education of Richmond. The Sunday School of the Christian Temple, under the leadership of Mr. A. B. Jarvis as superintendent is doing good work, and planning for many forward steps in its work in the new church building.

The Sunday School at Lambert's Point has for its goal a Sunday School of 500. Last Sunday the attendance was 282, with an enrollment of 341. Five classes had every member present Sunday. All of the seventeen classes of the school had good attendance.

The Tidewater Sunday School Association, composed of the Sunday Schools in and near Norfolk, held its quarterly meeting in the Christian Temple. The attendance was good, and a growing interest in the work of the church school was manifest. Rev. Flory and the Field Secretary were the speakers at the meeting.

Many Sunday Schools are sending for the Responsive Reading for Men and Millions Sunday. It is to be hoped that our Schools will use this literature, which is free for the asking, to bring to all of our men and women, and boys and girls, more knowledge about the principles and work of the Christian Church.

All Sunday School superintendents have no doubt received the letter, sent out by the Christian Education Department of the Church, signed by Dr. W. A. Harper, President of the Board of Christian Education, and Hermon Eldredge, Secretary of the Sunday School Department, urging that our people remember the starving and dying children of the lands in the Near East, and reminding us that these children are left in our care because their parents and natural guardians chose death rather than to forswear their allegiance to Jesus Christ. With this thought in our minds, and Christian love in our hearts, may our Sunday Schools remember the need by a generous offering for their relief. January 21st, is the day set in the Southern Christian Convention for this offering. All contributions should be sent to Rev. J. F. Burnett, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio.

A little boy had been sent to the dairy to get some eggs, and on his way back he dropped the basket containing them.

"How many did you break?" asked his mother.

"Oh, I din't break any," he replied, "but the shells came off some of them!"—Epworth Herald.

Since 1912, the number of States having special divisions dealing with child health has increased from 1 to 46 and the number providing mothers' pensions has increased from 2 to 40.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE GRACE OF STEWARDSHIP.

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D.

There are three judgments in the matter of giving in which I hope we shall all be agreed. And the first judgment is this: we are apt to be gravely deceived about the extent of our beneficence, and we vastly exaggerate the amount of money we give away. The majority of people have no idea of the range of their beneficence. They do not know how much or how little they give in the course of a year. But the bias of their estimate is always on the side of generous judgment. The people who do not know how much they give always give less than they think they do.

The Paralyzing Power of Money

And the second judgment is this: there is a strangely paralyzing power about money, and it so restricts the heart that the more we get the less we are inclined to give. And this is surely what the Lord was meaning when He spoke of "the deceitfulness of riches." Riches can make a man think that he is growing bigger when all the time he is growing less. He estimates his size by the inlet of income, and not by the outlet of beneficence. While the inlet is expanding the outlet is contracting. But the deception in riches is often accomplished by a corresponding growth in fear. It is one of the pathetic ironies of life that men who are growing in wealth have an increasing fear of poverty. And the fear puts them into bonds and they are afraid to give of their treasure lest none should remain.

I went to see a very wealthy man in New York to ask him to help an exceedingly noble cause. His fear immediately answered my appeal, and he spoke as one who was on the verge of poverty. "I really cannot give any more." The word was apparently sincere, and it was accompanied by a sort of sigh which confirmed its reality. "I really cannot give any more. What with one thing and another I do not know what we are coming to." Fear seemed to haunt the man. It determined his thought and his speech and his services. A few weeks later he died, and his will was proved at over sixty millions. And I wonder. I wonder if at the end of the day he heard the messenger of the Lord saying unto him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee, then whose shall these things be?"

Deafness to Necessities of the Soul

And the third judgment is this: that conscience in the matter of giving is apt to become less sensitive as the appeals come from the necessities of the soul. Many a man will give generously in response to a cry of material hunger who is numb to the cry of spiritual hunger. Many men will give a large contribution to relieve the hungry children in Eastern Europe who feel no urgency in the cry of those who are spiritually hungry in Mongolia or Tibet. They would hasten to succor a fainting body, but they are careless to the needs of a fainting heart.

What course can we follow to make beneficence a spontaneous issue in our life? First of all we must cultivate a sense of stewardship. We must cultivate the sense as assiduously as we have cultivated the sense of ownership and possession. A sense of stewardship is the recognition of the ultimate fountain of our life and strength; it is homage paid where homage is due. The Lord puts his homage very early in the prayer which He taught His disciples. All that we have is ours in trust; and we are to bow in homage before the Lord and say: "Not my will but Thine be done."

The Strategy of Method

We cannot fight the enemies of magnanimity and beneficence by thoughtless and spasmodic warfare. We must have a scheme of action. There must be method in the enterprise. We must have a plan of campaign. There must be some designed strategy if we are to overcome the deadly attacks of the grim army of selfishness and meanness. And I am sure that part of this same method must be the assignment of a certain proportion of our income to ministries of beneficence. This must not be less than a tenth. Even the Pharisee could boast of that attainment. "I give tithes of all that I possess." It was no dull virture when compared with the general giving of the members of the Church of Christ. If we all followed the Pharisee's example, and gave a tenth of all that we possessed, the appeals which call to our beneficence would be met with overflowing wealth and sufficiency.

But I would advise young people who adopt the method of proportion not to dribble their tenths away in small and insignificant contributions Let them go in something for the giving of large sums. If you have ten pounds a year to give away, have the satisfaction now and again of giving a five-pound note to something. If you do it you will know the reason of the counsel. It seems a big sum, and it challenges your powers, and there is a bracing influence in the endeavor. The subsequent experience will give you the needful justification. It is like a fine drive at golf; it is a good send off and the lesser strokes will come in its train. And if you find, as the years goes by, the tenth is exhausted, you may take a dash past your tithe and break all your records. You will do it just to prove that you are not the victim of your own rule. It will be like a plunge into deep cold water, and you will emerge with a healthy glow, not the fever of silly pride, but the satisfaction of healthy manhood.

Shall the Fountain Go to Sleep?

I confess I am very much concerned about this grace and virtue of beneficence in the Christian life and character. The generosity of our people during the war was manifold and amazing. Every appeal was met with fervor, and our folk were strengthened by the energies of their own beneficence. But beneficence which flows freely in days of conflict may dry up again in the quieter days of peace. The necessity may seem to be over and the fountain goes to sleep. That is one of our dangers.

And the other equally imminent danger is this: we are surely living in a day of extravagance. There are signs of wasteful and even prodigal squandering on every side. Think of what is being spent in pleasure. Look at the crowded theaters and the movies with their long waiting queues. I do not object to these things, and I appreciate the reasonable reaction after all the strain and the fear and the terror of the last five years. But it is unhealthy when we spend a large proportion of our income on amusement and have no reserve to meet the demands of noble necessity. Professedly Christian people give more money to see performances in a cinema than they give to the cause of God's kingdom. I do not attribute this lack of beneficence to meanness, or to a stinginess which locks up its resources; it is explained by want of thoughtfulness, and by lack of method, and conscience, and piloted devotion.

The constraints which ought to move us are great and manifold. There are the needs themselves. Let us direct our thoughts and our imagination to play about the realms of necessity. And then let us walk with Jesus Christ. Let us talk with Him. Let us ask for His counsel. Let us hear what He has to say about things. Let us consult Him about this and that, and the other, and our hearts will burn within us as He talks with us by the way. His own example will be our abiding constraint. When we follow the young Prince of Glory from His Throne to His Cross the springs of sacrifice are unsealed in our own hearts, we have the fellowship of His sufferings, and in the realm of beneficence we become ready and cheerful givers.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.

The Mission Board in October secured the service of Rev. D. M. Helfenstein, D. D., for a series of evangelistic meetings in November, December and January in the districts of Delaware surrounding Dover. Dr. Helfenstein reports some most successful meetings. Under date of January 4th he writes: "The meeting closed at Willow Grove with thirty-one uniting in a movement to establish a Community Christian Church. When I make final report I will write more fully about this work. The meeting lasted nearly four weeks. I could not feel at liberty to close the meeting at the end of the two weeks appointed. It was about the hardest fight I ever had with the enemy of all good but God gave us victory. I am now in a meeting at Wyoming where I began last Sabbath night. The fight here is going to be hard but our God is able for any conditions. Pray that strength and wisdom may be given me.

One young man was converted in the Willow Grove meeting who feels called to the ministry. He is a fine looking man twenty-three years old. He had been in the navy seven years. What can Elon do for him in furnishing opportunity to work his way through college?

We had a great and good meeting at Epworth, and since our meeting closed there a young man from a Catholic family united with the church.

Brother Helfenstein will give SUN readers at an early date an extensive account of his meetings. The lamented and beloved Dr. A. W. Lightbourne opened up sereral preaching places and established some churches during the last years of his useful career, but his untimely going away left the work without leadership, and in sending Dr. Helfenstein to the field the Board is seeking to discover what steps should be taken relative to this field of labor.

Exiles for Christ

Cut made from photo of part of the 5,000 children of the Harpoot Orphanage trudging the 500 weary miles to Beirut for safety,

Lester James was killed and Enoch R. Applegate wounded in raids on this trip. Both were Americans.

ALL CHRISTIANS DRIVEN OUT.

Two and a half million Christians are involved in the catastrophe that drives them out of Asia Minor and Thrace in wholesale exodus. Great multitudes of Christians are fleeing in terror. Their misery is beyond words. They are women children, and aged people, the men of military age being missing.

If they are later allowed to return, our need for funds will be multiplied.

The children in orphanages in the interior are being moved to places of safety in the coast cities.

WHAT WILL YOU DO ABOUT IT?

You have the power of life and death.

The number of orphans and refugees saved, depends directly on the generosity of American givers; to no other source can they look for aid.

A large increase in gifts is necessary to move the orphans, to assist refugees, and pay the higher costs in the coast cities.

$5 a month saves a child.

Remember January 21st.

The ARMENIAN CHRISTMAS SUNDAY, January 21st, is recommended by the American Christian Convention as a Field Day on which this worthy cause be presented, and offerings received in the churches and Sunday Schools of the Southern Convention. This date is for those churches and Sunday Schools not co-operating on another date.

Send church offerings to J. F. Burnett, Secretary, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio. (This will be sent to the Near East Relief to be allocated to your State and community.)

WINCEY A. COX

Wincey A. Cox, wife of Azer Cox, died December 24, 1922, at the age 60 years, 7 months, 24 days.

She joined the M. P. church when about 15 years of age and was a consistent member of that church until she transferred her membership to Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, where she was faithful till death, and at which place she was buried.

She suffered a great deal, having been an invalid for several years. Before her death she called her loved ones to her bedside and admonished them to live the Christ life. She said she wanted to go and be with Maxie and Floyd, two of her children, who preceded her in death, and died trusting in the Lord.

SEELY-ANDERSON

On the afternoon of December 26, 1922, at the Wakefield Christian Church, Mr. Walter C. Seely led to the marriage altar Miss Pauline Gertrude Anderson. The altar of the church was beautifully decorated with holly and running cedar. The marriage was a quiet one, the ceremony being performed by the writer in the presence of the members of the families of the bride and groom together with a few friends. The bride has been engaged in teaching school and the groom has been engaged in farming. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for a northern trip. They will make their home near Wakefield, Va. They have the best wishes of their many friends.

IN MEMORIAM
Wm. H. Holland.

William Henry Holland was born in Nansemond County, Virginia, August 23, 1857; married Mary Ann Holland January 26, 1879; and died suddenly, in his car, December 26, 1922, at the age of 65 years, 4 months, and 3 days.

He leaves three brothers and four sisters: E. T. Holland, J. R. Holland, J. E. Holland, Mrs. J. W. Powell, Mrs. W. J. Baines, Mrs. John Eley, and Miss Lillie Holland.

He leaves his wife, 5 children, and 6 grandchildren: Fred C., married Georgia May King, 2 children; J. Dudley married O. D. King, 1 child; Mabel, married S. W. Johnson, 1 child; Erma, married Stafford Foshee.

He was a Deacon in Bethlehem Christian Church for 26 years, and Superintendent of the Nansemond County Almshouse for 27 years.

The oldest official in point of continuous service in Nansemond county, and none more faithful or successful in a position of trust. He possessed rare gifts of adaptation for the position. A good farmer, a good manager, greatly beloved by the inmates of the Home, and holding the confidence of the county officials throughout this long term of years. A model family grew up around a model fireside, a family that reflects honor upon his personal character and judgment. Nansemond county mourns with his bereaved family in this sudden and irreparable loss.

As a church member and Deacon in Bethlehem Christian Church he held the confidence and affection of the entire membership and congregation and was liberal toward all the plans and purposes of the church. In the Men and Millions campaign he said, "Come on boys and let us do our part. I have no home but the one in Heaven, and I want to lay up treasure there." That expresses his religious convictions and his willingness to serve his MASTER. If he could have lived to see the new church dedicated it would have been the happiest church day of his life, but we believe he is in the upper temple, "that house not made with hands, eternal, and in the heavens." Peace be to his ashes, comfort for his family, success to his church, and continued service for the destitute through this Institution which he loved, and to which he gave the best of his life.

Funeral services at residence, 2:30 P. M., December 28, conducted by Revs. W. W. Staley, H. H. Butler, I. W. Johnson, and W. M. Jay. County officials W. C. Moore, E. A. Brothers, L. F. Ames, Hugh Dudley, S. E. Everett, E. B. Rawles, G. E. Bunting, C. R. Fulgham acted as pallbearers. Quartet from Suffolk sang: Mrs. Clarence Harrell, Mrs. A. D. Brinkley, W. W. Ballard, Dr. I. W. Johnson. Mrs. I. W. Johnson accompanied on the organ.

Buried in Bethlehem Cemetery. Very large attendance.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Much Sleeping Sickness.—

Many cases of lethargic ercephalitis (sleeping sickness) said to be the result of numerous cases of influenza, have been reported near Bristol, Va. during the present epidemic of "flu." In Knoxville, Tenn., several puzzling cases have been presented to the physicians and there seems to be a sprinkling of the disease throughout this section, with no fatalities as yet. The "flu" epidemic here seems to be well under control.

A Law and Order Sunday.—

New York, Jan. 14th.—The Allied Patriotic Societies, Inc., representing more than fifty patriotic organizations with a membership of 7,000,000, announced today it had called on Governors of every State in the Union to designate January 28th as Law and Order Sunday. Governor Alfred E. Smith, of New York, already has agreed to issue a proclamation appropriate to the occasion, it was asserted.

As part of the suggested observance schools, courts and churches have been asked to co-operate by urging respect for the nation's laws.

Roman Catholic Aggressiveness in Mexico.—

President Obregon of Mexico seems determined to keep the Roman Catholic prelates in their place. Over a year ago an Apostolic Delegate by the name of Filippi was sent from Rome to Mexico to look after the interests of the Roman Catholic Church in that country. Only a few days ago he openly broke a law in that country against open air services, and forthwith the President of Mexico ordered Filippi's expulsion from that country, giving him but 72 hours to get out and get away. Filippi says he did not think he was violating any law of the State, but that he will get out as ordered. Filippi must be aware of some wrong in his conduct in some direction, or he would not surrender to political authority so readily. The Catholic theory, if we understand it, is that the Roman Catholic Church is superior to the State and therefore the State must yield to the church, but it does not seem to work in Mexico.

The French Healer.—

Healer Coue, a Frenchman, who believes in self-healing, is in this country seeking to teach the people how it is done. Of course, he is being criticised pretty freely, but he is taking it in a good spirit and seems to realize no disappointment because he is criticised. In answering his critics he says: "Auto suggestion as a system of healing, is not anti-religious. Unfortunately no clergyman has asked me for a clear statement before making attacks. In my twenty-two years of teaching, I think I have proved that the Creator has blessed all people with wonderful powers for self-healing. Therefore do not couple my work with any particular religion. Do not think I made light with religious faith.

"I believe on the contrary, that auto-suggestion, coupled with religious faith, would be more effective than without religion. Many clergymen in France, England and America have attended my meetings in Nancy and have found my teachings caused no offense."

France May have Made A Mistake.—

The French Government has decided on extreme action against Germany in the matter of the payment of reparation money. Germany has been delaying the payment of this money till France has become tired of waiting, and so she has sent an army over into Germany and taken charge of the section known as the Rhur and also Bochum. These sections are rich in coal and other valuable materials. By taking charge of the same France hopes to take from Germany a sufficient amount of these values to pay herself for what Germany claims she is not able to pay. France believes she is able and proposes to make her do it. Of course there are differences of opinion as to the wisdom of the course of France in this matter. The press dispatches of Jan. 13th, tell us that Hon. W. J. Bryan deplores the course France has taken. France may have made a mistake, but one thing seems certain—France does not propose to allow Germany to get out of paying what is due to France. Before our readers get this item, the situation may be entirely changed and some new aspect of the situation may arise.

Turkey Stands "Pat." —

You may like Turkey, but we confess we prefer lamb. Turkey is so defiant. She now refuses to pay any of the expenses of the Allies in the occupation of its territory for the protection of the interests of all concerned. Turkey knows how to roost high and swing low. It begins to look as if Turkey may out-general all the Allies and get things shaped up as she wishes to have them. Turkey has for many generations been a thorn in the flesh to the nations around her, notwithstanding she was whipped in the late world war, she refuses to believe it and is standing "pat" for her own ways, refusing to bear any of the expenses incurred by the occupation of her territory by the Allies and further she insists on freedom to fix her triff on a scientific basis in accordance with her own views for a five year period, during which she will negotiate individual commercial treaties with the powers, and declares that the "lost provinces" should proportionately bear the burden of the entire Ottoman debt.

No one has solved the riddle of capitulations. The French delegation is framing a formula providing legal guarantees for foreigners in Turkey, but the Turks say they will not dismiss the subject of special courts for foreigners any further. Everybody is worried about capitulations, because it is one of the chief issues of the conference.

Persia has protested that she was not invited to the conference despite her immediate interest in Near Eastern affairs. Russia has supported the righteousness of the Persian claim, declaring Persia has far more reason to be here than Japan, which is allowed to participate in all the discussions, or the Scandinavian countries and Holland and Spain, which have been permitted to take part in many of the meetings.

What of the War Debts of Europe?—

Must the war debts be paid? That is the question that is now puzzling the brains of the greatest financiers of the world. Some are holding that to require war debts to be paid would involve the world in another world catastrophe. Others hold that these debts must be paid. In a press dispatch from London under date of Jan. 14th, we read: A passionate appeal for the cancellation of war debts is made by Lord Buckmaster, ex-British Lord Chancellor and famous lawyer and social reformer.

"If the present policy is pursued," he says, "no man can say when the catastrophe will come, but sooner or later the catastrophe of the last four years will be repeated.

"There is no solid market left in Europe," he continues, "nor will there ever be until we have begun at the bottom and restored Europe in the same way in which we have attempted to build up the British Empire—by making Europe save itself

"What we ought to say at once is:

" 'This Treaty of Versailles, so far as it has attempted to impose on Germany the obligation to pay pensions to the women and children of killed and disabled men, went beyond the terms of the armistice, and that to induce any nation, however evil and abominable they might be, to lay down their arms on one set of terms and then, when they were defenceless, to impose another, is an act of dishonesty which can never be effaced!"

"Then Britain ought to be ready to renounce all other benefits in favor of France and Belgium.

"Britain should instantly forego, without bargaining, the debts owing to her from France and Italy, which, according to all the laws of economics, could never be paid.

"This should be done under the condition that France helped Britain, with the other nations, to stabilize the exchanges and currencies of Europe."

NOTES-PERSONALS

He who comes to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN regularly is more than likely to have his interest in the work and life of the church greatly enlarged, and that being true, we do not see how any pastor can afford to neglect the matter of making a good honest effort to induce his people to become readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Try it, brethren, and report results later, please.

Rev. T. E. White has another letter to Brother Abe. No doubt about it Bro. Abe has gotton quite a good bit of attention of late and the probability is that he will get more. He is in the hands of a competent thrasher and Bro. White is doing the work well. We hope Bro. Abe and all his kins people, who deserve it, will get Bro. White's attention, and so may all of them come to fill their place in the future in a more helpful way.

Bro. O. W. Mann, Apex, N. C., renews his subscription to THE SUN and sends with renewal a new subscriber. Thank you, Brother Mann. That is a fine example, for, if all of our subscribers would only do the same thing in renewing, then we should likely double our list in a year, and no one would be overtaxed. Brethren, try Bro. Mann's plan and see if it does not prove to be good missionary work.

We like the trend of The Biblical Recorder, as to using certain Sundays for preaching on certain lines of work, in some great undertaking. Referring to the great number of requests which come to the pastor to preach on a certain line of thought, the editor of The Recorder says if the pastor is impressed to preach on some other line, he should do so, and we agree, for the pastor ought to get his orders from Heaven, and if he does, no man on earth has a right to tell him to preach on something else. If we get men and women to be what they ought to be, then we may expect them to do what the Lord wants them to do, regardless of what their fellow may wish them to do.

Here is a grand Jury that is worth having, the like of which we doubt has ever been known in this country before. We quote from The Biblical Recorder as follows:

The grand jury of Tift county has recently made a recommendation to the good people of that county which is an eloquent new year's sermon. We quote only one paragraph from the report:

"It isn't the price of cotton and other farm products nor the ravaging effect of the boll weevil and other insects that should receive the first attention and consideration of our minds and hearts. Our greatest need is that we should enthrone God in our hearts—put Him first in everything. Establish your 'family altars' and hide the law of the Lord in your hearts that you may not sin against God nor man— this is the plea that we make to one and all in the county of Tift."—Clinton Index.

There is a sickly sentiment abroad in the land which lends its sympathy to the man who has made himself objectionable to the people who were employing him. He teaches what is not held by the institution which engaged him, and then because he is not allowed to teach ideas which are repulsive to the people he serves and they ask him to retire, then he declares his freedom is abridged and he thinks he has been badly treated, thinks he ought to be allowed to teach whatever he pleases while he is supported financially by those who do not believe what he teaches to be true. We might just as justly allow a man to occupy a Christian pupit while he should allow the devil to persuade him to preach the doctrines of some apostacy from the Christian Faith. If he must preach against the doctrines of the Christian Faith, let him do so to all who may wish to hear him, but not till he has vacated the Christian pulpit and gone to a place of his own to do the work he wishes to do. Certainly no man with self-respect ought to allow himself to occupy a position which is supported by people who do not believe with him at all.

How long is it from youth to old age? That depends on the ending of youth and the beginning of old age, but it really seems like a very short time. Only a little while ago we were in college with Rev. R. H. Pitt, D. D., and now he has been editor of The Religious Herald almost 32 years, and that is more than one third of the entire life of that paper which on January 11, 1923, completed its ninety-fifth year of publication. It seems to us as if it has been only a little while since Dr. Pitt was the poet of Richmond College. Then we were both in our youth and now we are both in our o—. Well, better not say it, as the reader can guess it, but the time has gone away so rapidly that we scarcely know when we slipped out from the curtains of youth, nor when we entered the latter period, but we know enough to be sure that the facts are correct. The Religious Herald is always interesting and so is its editor. Dr. Pitt was not only the poet of the college in those days, away back in the "seventies," but he was a genius as well. While in college his room mate was he who is now Rev. Hugh C. Smith, D. D. In those days young Pitt had the reputation not only of being a poet and a genius generally, but it was said that he was very fond of visiting young ladies down in the city of Richmond. It frequently happened that instead of spending the evening in study struggling with English, Philosophy History, Latin and Greek, he would spend the time in the company of the fair sex, and then when he came home to find Smith burning the midnight lamp, he would come in and say: "Smith, tell me what you have learned about the lesson," when young Smith, one of the finest characters we have known, would proceed to do as requested. Then Pitt would go to bed and to sleep and the next day he would go on recitation with Smith and recite the lesson better than Smith did. That was one evidence of Pitt's genius, and it may be that is why he has been able to edit the paper so well all of these many years, since the days we spent so pleasantly in Old Richmond College. Dr. Pitt is a Baptist and he edits a Baptist paper, but we like them both and we wish for them the best of the good things which come in their line. The paper is ninety-five years old, and now in its ninety-sixth, and almost one third of that time has been under the editorial management of our old college friend and the paper has prospered under his management, holding first rank among the Baptists of Old Virginia.

We told you so! We told you that the tide is rising against all this modern stuff which seeks to relegate the Bible and its truths to oblivion, while it rises on the foundation which had been planned in the interest of the gospel, and you are going to see a great deal more of this rising tide in the near future. A true Christian people cannot, and will not, stand it, if some man seeks to substitute the doctrines of evolution, the new theology and higher criticism for the plain and old fashioned doctrines of Christianity. William Jewell College in Missouri (a Baptist institution) has but recently felt constrained to dismiss one of its professors because he avowed that he did not believe in the pre-existence and deity of Jesus Christ, nor the infallibility of His teachings, nor in His Vicarious death, nor in His bodily resurrection, nor in His mediatorial and intercessory work. The Professor in question also stated before the Board of trustees that he does not worship Christ nor pray in His name. Then the Board said by reason of these views it was of the unanimous opinion that he (the said Professor) is disqualified to remain in his present position as head of the Bible Department of William Jewell College, and so he had to get up and betake himself elsewhere after January 1, 1923, and then they voted to pay him his salary to the end of the term for which he had been engaged. We dare to say that the best money they spent on the teaching force for that time was the money they spent in paying him to do nothing for the remainder of the term, as was far less harmful doing nothing than at work. Yes, the tide is rising against modern unbelief! We can spot them as far as we can see them—we mean these men who do not much against prohibition till some one else comes out and says something bad against it. Even then they say but little except what they quote from the other pastor. This is especially true of secular newspapers, not all of them of course, for some of the secular papers stand as truly for prohibition as any one. We can tell the newspaper man as far as we can see him who says but little himself, but mark it, he will publish about everything some one else says against it, with rarely if ever a word in its favor. Only recently when a great World Convention on Prohibition was held in Toronto, Canada, the secular papers had almost nothing (here in the United States) to say of the Convention and its work, but when some little cross roads place took action against the work of prohibition, lots of the papers told the world of the great opposition that is rising against prohibition, and they seemed especially glad to tell that the prohibition law is a failure, that it does not prohibit. Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel. If the prohibition law does not prohibit, why do you fight it so hard? The truth which is their biggest opposition to the law is based on the fact that it prohibits sufficiently to make the business unprofitable to them. Let every true Christian stand for the cause and do it boldly.

REV. AND MRS. BROWN ARE GIVEN A POUNDING.

Rev. T. S. Brown and family were taken greatly by surprise Wednesday night after the prayer service at the church. After returning home they were pounced upon by members of the congregation, and given a most generous pounding. This surprise was greatly appreciated by the pastor and his family.

The Rev. D. A. Long, of Burlington, N. C., an old friend of the family, happened to call at this time and make a short, informal address felicitating the pastor on this marked expression of the cordial relation between him and his people, offering also a fervent prayer. All were delighted to meet Dr. Long. Though of great age may his pleasing personality and genial presence still longer be spared among his friends.—Local Paper.

SEEING CHRIST IN HIS FOLLOWERS.

Many of the church standards are wrong, but they remain as standards in fact. The church seems to think that a man is a Christian when he keeps up with the forms of religion. He made a profession of faith, he joined the church, was baptized and attended services quite regularly, at least when he did not have something else to claim his attention. That is, so far as it goes, pretty good, but beloved reader, you can do all that then you have only a start in the divine life, and the pity of it all is that that shallow view is held and taught by many men in the pulpit. Perhaps they mean it all well, but when will men and women ever, under such teaching, get to be anything more than mere babes, living on sweetened water and a bit of diluted milk. And when will that kind of Christian teaching, no doubt good for the beginning of the Christian life, ever give the church men and women of matured Christian character, such as the church so much needs right now.

We are told that the man who watches by the crucible in action, knows when the work is done by the fact that the heat burns out the dross till he sees his own face reflected in the purified metal which had been in the flame for hours. It is well it is so, for the metal cannot reflect the fact of the attendant till the dross has been burnt out. The crcible is a servere test, but it brings the metal to its best and proves it by showing in its own bosom the face of the one who serves. It must be that way in the Christian life. We do not, and cannot, reach the place of the reflected face till we have suffered through the agonies of self-crucifixion. When that much has been accomplished, then the man begins to wear an aspect of his Master's life, and that is the proof at once that he has gone on in the divine life till he has imbibed the spirit of Jesus, and, having imbibed His Spirit, he is beginning to walk in white, that is in a pure life. That means that the believer having had such experiences is really making progress in the divine life, and then as he shall go on to the larger blessings of Christian living, he really begins to live for Christ and His Church.

And when a church gets its membership to making some such progress as this, it begins to expand and develop as a church, and then great things come to pass. The membership becomes a means of giving out the gospel, of winning men and women to the divine life. A church which has come to such a life begins to show Christ to a lost world. As Paul once said of them, they are epistles written in the hearts of the minister and known and read of all men, declaring Christ, not in letters of ink, but in letters that glow with the presence of divine fire, showing Christ in the heart and the life of the men and women who have gone through the crucible of dying to self and of giving themselves once and for all to the Christ. When you get such a person to enter the divine life and the church, you have got something that may be counted on for long and hard pulls in giving the gospel to the men and women in heathen darkness. But when you come to a man or a woman who has been in the church for ten years, and yet he or she is just where they were when either entered the church and were baptized not having moved forward in the divine life one inch in the ten years, then you may know that the church and its pastor may be making a big show in the forms of religion, but they have not and cannot show real spiritual power and life. They simply cannot do it, and if they continue to teach that it is admissable to have children who do not grow and do not learn, we see practically no hope for a church which is strong in the Lord. It may be strong in many other ways, but in the power of the Lord our God, they have but little, very little strength. And that being true, how can the church ever become mighty in the pulling down of the strongholds of sin, and mighty in the building up on the strongholds of righteousness? A church can become a strong institution for the promotion of the cause of Christ only as it is spiritually strong, it can be spiritually strong only as the Christ life is reflected in the lives of its members. Christ in us was not merely the hope of glory in the days of the Apostles, it is still our hope of large usefulness and fruitfulness. Any sort of a Christian can work in the church, but only a spiritually fruitful Christian can have power with God and over men, and they can come to have real power in these respects through really having the Christ life within their own hearts and lives. Christ in us is really the only power that can qualify us for this larger life and larger service. We can work the formal parts of our religion, but the man who does not truly know his Lord and Master in the forgiveness of sins and in the enduement of the Spirit for service and in the illumination of the truth, that we may grasp it and understand it, in some fruitful degree, well, we do not see how he can be used of God in the saving of the world through Christ.

We have in the church today an ugly heresy and it seems so fully and so deeply rooted in the minds and hearts of the people that it is most difficult to remove, and if not removed, it must remain an incubus on the life, not only of the individual, but on the church which is made up of such individuals. That heresy is the teaching that education is the great thing in life, in the Christian life, and that if a person is educated, he can do Christian work on that account. Let it be understood that we stand in the front ranks of the men and women who believe in a high standard of Christian education. True education cannot be estimated too highly, but to be effective, truly effective in fruitfulness, it must be real Christian education. The education of the intellect apart from the grace of God, has some advantages, we cheerfully admit, but as compared with true education, Christian education, it is not in the line at all.

Let me illustrate: Unfortunately, as many thought at the time, a certain man was appointed as a missionary to India. He had almost no education, and was really a weak man, intellectually, but he went. After a few years he became convinced that he was too weak to fill the place to which he had been appointed. He could not learn the language. So he petitioned the Board at home to recall him and send some one else to take his place. As soon as this was known among the missionaries, a dozen of them got together and sent a counter petition to the Board at home, asking that his request be not granted. They did not deny his plea. He was not educated, not strong intellectually, but they said to the Board at home, do not take him away, for his goodness as a Christian gave him a wider and stronger influence among the heathen than that of any other missionary on the field. It was said that a young convert from heathenism was asked what it is to be a Christian? His answer was: "It is to be like Mr.—," naming this good missionary who because he was not educated, had desired to be sent home. Christ in us, that is the hope of usefulness and fruitfulness.

ELON'S CALAMITY.

The news of the great loss of Elon College through a fire, which occurred on Thursday morning, between six and seven o'clock, Jan. 18, 1923, spread rapidly throughout the church in the South. As we understand it from reliable reports there was no fire used in the building at all, being heated from the power house about one hundred yards away. So far there is no plausible way of accounting for the fire. Everything was lost except a few typewriters, which being easily accessible were removed from the building. The loss is beyond calculation. The building itself is a great loss, but its contents, if possible, were a greater loss, for the building may be restored, but much of the equipment cannot be restored. The recitation rooms, the Society halls, the college chapel, the library, the President's office and the music halls with pianos were all destroyed. The safe in the President's office failed to stand the test of the fire in keeping safely its contents from harm. However, it is supposed that the fall of the safe from the third floor in the time of such extreme heat served to burst the safe and so expose the contents to ruin. The Treasurer's office was in the same building, therefore most of the financial records of the college have been destroyed. At this writing, Saturday, Jan. 20th full particulars of the disaster had not reached us.

There is but one thing to do, as we see it, and that is to get busy at once to rebuild and have it ready, if possible, by the opening of the college next September. That will be a big undertaking indeed, but big undertakings call for great effort, and great effort can do much more than we sometimes think. Now is the time for every friend of the college to stand by the work of rebuilding and supplying, as far as possible the things that were destroyed. Some cannot be replaced, but others may be made to take the places of some of the things which were destroyed. Later we may be able to give a more detailed account of the disaster. Meantime let every friend of the college rally to the support of the effort to rebuild at once.

The Administration Building was a monument to the untiring energy, courage and persistancy of Rev. William S. Long, D. D., LL. D., under whose faithful labors the building was erected in the beginning of Elon's career. The task was Herculean in that day, for there were not many to cooperate with him in this effort, besides money was very scarce and hard to get then. Many obstacles confronted him from time to time and he carried burdens which a less courageous man would have dropped. The monument is gone, but the memory of Dr. Long's loyalty, untiring zeal and heroic faithfulness to Christian Education remains to stimulate us all a like unselfish life and service in the Master's cause. The Administration Building must be rebuilt

THE MAN WHO THINKS HE CANNOT BE FOOLED.

There are such men, and usually they are about the worst fooled people in the community, and for the reason that they know so little along the very line on which they are so sure but none the less so truly fooled. They think they know a plenty, but thinking so does not make it so. We all need to be thoughful in taking strong stands on the things we are discussing or considering, and for the reason that there are so many men who know so much more than we do.

The Sunday School Times gives an amusing instance of this sort of a man—one who declared "you cannot fool me," and yet he was badly fooled and just where he was so sure that he was standing on safe ground, but his sureness was not enough to prove his wisdom—he came far short of what he thought he knew, came so far short that he was compelled to admit that he knew nothing of practical value on the question he was so sure that he could not be fooled. The sad part of the matter was found to be that he did not need another one to fool him—he fooled himself, till he was a fool big enough for any ordinary occasion, and yet he thought he was a wise man. The one lesson we all may learn from this incident may be this: Be not too sure of your own wisdom, especially when you have not studied the situation, nor the facts involved at all.

The Sunday School Times put the case this way:

"Can't Fool Me."

Men who know least usually pride themselves on knowing most. The more a man really knows, the more he realizes he has yet to know. The Public Ledger of Philadelphia recently reported the experience of an eighty-three-year-old inmate of a county infirmary who, having been sixty-one years in that institution, had just made a second visit of his life time to the county seat. He was given his first ride in a street car, and in automobile; and then he was shown a motion picture. "When assured that he was looking at merely a series of photographs projected on a screen, he waxed derisive. 'They do it all back there behind that screen somehow,' He chuckled' "You can't fool me," he said sagely. This self-assured, complacent ignorance seems both ludicrous and pathetic. How infinitely more pathetic must seem to God the blind, complacent ignorance of the man who says you "can't fool him" into supposing that the Word of God is true, and that Jesus Christ is God, and that He died for our sins, and rose, and is coming again. Many a brilliant university professor today, who smiles at the news report of the old man who knew better than to believe in motion pictures, is congratulating himself on not being "fooled" by the statements in the Bible about his own lost condition and Christ Jesus as the only Saviour. That same Book says. "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God"—Psa. 14:1. "For the word of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but to us who are saved it is the power of God. For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and the discernment of the discerning will I bring to nought.....hath not God made foolish the wisdom of the world?..... but we preach Christ crucified, unto Jews a stumbling-block, and unto Gentiles foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God."—1 Cor. 1:18-24.

The Lack of Education and Its Costs.—

Press dispatches of Jan. 13, 1923, set forth some startling facts as to education, and they are well worth a careful study. They follow:

Washington, Jan. 13th.—The United States is losing $825,000,000 a year through illiteracy.

This is the estimate made by John J. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education, in the course of the campaign of the Government for the abolition of the "little red schoolhouse," and the establishment of equal educational opportunities for children everywhere.

Officials and educators in the national capital agree that illiteracy represents a tremendous economic and social loss to the nation, and even President Harding took occasion in a recent message to Congress to comment upon the problem.

Commissioner Tigert declares the progress being made in removing illiteracy is not encouraging, pointing out that from 1910 to 1920 the drop in the percentage of illiterates was less than 2 per cent, while in twelve States illiteracy actually increased during that period.

Actually Worse.

"These figures are based on census returns," Mr. Tigert said, "but as a matter of fact, many authorities have long thought that a test of ability to use the language in a practical way would reveal a much larger percentage of illiterates: such, for example, as the Army test, which showed that 25 per cent of our young men could make no practical use of written English.

"Although illiteracy is a national problem, yet it is greater in rural districts, where there are four illiterates, aged 16 to 21, to one in our cities."

Discussing the economic loss due to illiteracy, Commissioner Tigert said:

"The fact is self-evident that an educated nation is a more productive one.

"It has been estimated that if the productive labor value of an illiterate is less by only 50 cents a day than that of the educated man or woman the country is losing $825,000,000 a year through illiteracy.

"Where intelligence reigns the land yields its grain and fruits in greater abundance.

Conditions Worse in Country.

"There is a striking inequality between the rural and city schools. More than two-thirds of the schools of this country are one-room rural schools. There are approximately 186,000 of these schools. Between ten and twelve million children are enrolled in these one-room schools. In nineteen Sates there are one-room schools in which teachers are receiving less than $300 a year. It seems ironic to call such a sum a salary. The average salary for the one-room school teacher falls between $300 and $400, while in cities of the same States the average salary for elementary teachers runs from $1,000 to $1,200.

"In some rural schools the term is only sixty days, whereas the cities of the same States have a school term of 180 days."

THE CALL TO THE CHURCH TO DEVELOP A MORE UNIFIED PROGRAM OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By Dr. Robert L. Kelly, Executive Secretary, Council of Church Boards of Education.

(Summary of an address delivered at the recent Annual Meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches at Indianapolis).

1. First of all the Churches Must Be Jarred From Their State of Self-Complacency with regard to Christian Education.

It is true that much has been accomplished within the last few years in this field, but the failures of the church in Christian Education are tragic enough to keep us all humble. The Churches need to repent for their educational sins of omission and commision. In the State of California the religious forces are now so repenting. The religious world was startled a few days ago with the announcement that the Superior Court had handed down decision making the King James version of the Bible a sectarian book, and therefore preventing its purchase by school libraries or by any other agency supported by public funds. It is a hopeful situation that the religious forces of California, now that it may be too late, are bringing forth fruits meet for repentance. With one accord they are all appealing to the Legislature—Protestants, Catholics, Christian Scientists, Jews—urging that a definition of the meaning of "sectarian" be enacted, before the case goes to the Supreme Court, which will prevent any standard version of the Bible from being considered as sectarian. How blessed it is for brethren to dwell together in unity; and under the threat of an adverse decision by a Supreme Court, they can so dwell.

2. In the Second Place, the Churches Must Recognize Their Educational Function

There is no denying the fact that in many cases the educational arm has been paralyzed through disuse. Certainly there must be no less emphasis on evangelism at home and abroad, national and international, but the churches must learn to think and speak the language of education. Our boys and girls are speaking that language and they understand it and approve it. If any subject is taught aright, every field of education must be permeated with the spirit of Christ. If this is done, it will have to be done by the churches. It will not be done officially by the State.

3. Churches Must See Their Educational Prolem Steadily And See It Whole.

There is no institution, no denomination, no international council that now sees the whole problem of Christian Education. Perhaps the Episcopal Church has advanced farthest among the Protestant communions in their effort to unify their forces of Christian Education. * With the Episcopalians, this has become organic union of their educational agencies. The Presbyterian Church, North, is in process of uniting its educational agencies as well and to the same end; but as we know full well, among the churches in general there are General Boards and College Boards and Sunday School Boards and Missionary Educational Boards and Publication Boards, and each is putting on programs and campaigns with little or no reference to the others. There is as yet no League of Christian Education, or organization, or council of the various agencies. We have not yet seen our problem whole.

4. The Churches Must Assume Larger Responsibilities for Christian Education in the Schools.

This means the Sunday Schools, the week-day church schools, the private schools, the public schools. By authority of recent official action by the great central standardizing agencies of the country, the North Central Association, the Southern Association, and the authorities of literally hundreds of colleges, the responsibility for adequate Bible study in American education is now placed upon the schools. These educational institutions and agencies are saying that when the schools teach the Bible as effectively as they teach other subjects, Bible literature will be accepted for admission to college. The College Examination Board in New York has declared that when the schools are teaching the Bible and presenting students for examination, examination questions will be issued by them. The eyes of the leaders of Christian education are now on the schools.

5. The Colleges Must Reconsecrate Themselves to the Task Of Christian Education.

For generations they have been doing much. They must do much more. The denominational college meets an unparalleled opportunity at this moment, and an unprecedented demand as well that it enlarge its work in the technical field of religious education. How can the schools teach the Bible unless they have trained teachers; and how can they have trained teachers unless colleges inaugurate adequate training? There is a growing demand for approved courses in religious education, and there is a growing disposition to meet this demand.

6. The Theological Seminaries Must Become Educational Institutions.

Speaking of them as a class, they are not now such. They are training schools in fact, if not in name. Many of them are poorly equipped in personal and material resources. Of 8,300 students in the theological seminaries in the United States and Canada last year, 4,500 at some time had attended college. Only 3,000 were college graduates; and of this number fully one-third were graduates of sub-standard colleges—colleges not having been approved by the agencies of educational standardization. In other words, only one-fourth of our ministers now in process of preparation in the seminaries are full-fledged college graduates. In this statement, no reckoning is made of the large number of students in the scores of training schools which do not call themselves seminaries. The Churches must equip the seminaries so that they may make a greater contribution to the work of Christian Education.

7. The Various Agencies of Christian Education Must Be Christianized to the Extent of Showing a Disposition to Yield.

Up to the present our psychology has been the psychology of the campaign, of the drive, of the program of extension. The time has come for adjustment, for distribution of functions, for apportionment of tasks. The time has come for yielding. In the field of Christian Education shall we not put to the test the declaration of Jesus? "It is more blessed to give than to receive?"

8. The Time Has Come for Active Unselfish Cooperation.

The friends of Christian Education must get together, and they must stay together, think and work and pray together. The college cannot say to the Sunday School, "I have no need of thee." The Sunday School cannot say to the Seminary, "I have no need of thee." The Seminary cannot say to the rest of the educational world "I have no need of you." Alas, they can say this and they have said it and are saying it in many instances now. But the time has come to arrest this policy of isolation, this spirit of sectarianism and partisanship, and to meet together our opportunity and our sacred duty.

* NOTE—The General Convention of the Christian Church has undertaken this work of unifying all of its educational agencies, with President W. A. Harper of Elon College, N. C., as Secretary of Christian Education—Editor.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE RESTORATION AND CONVERSION OF THE JEWS.

By A. C. Fellman.

Chapter IV.

The opponents to the restoration of the Jews, and their interpretations which they have advocated, that the predictions of the restoration can be fulfilled by simply incorporating the Jews into the existing Christian Church, is worse than rediculous. They have been asked the question, Will the Jews, after their convertion to Christianity, be restored to any of their former peculiar distinctions?" Some of the writers and theologians in their reasoning upon the subject, find imaginary difficulties in a literal fulfillment of the prophecies, by "putting the cart before the horse." Had they asked the question thus "Will the Jews be restored to any of their former peculiar distinctions, rebuild Jerusalem, and establish Judaism for a season, and after, be converted to Christianity?"—all would have been plain and easy. This has been the fatal mistake of all opponents to the literal restoration of the Jews, viz., putting the conversion of the Jews before their restoration, instead of after it.

Why do we believe that Jerusalem and the temple have been destroyed? Because it is written in Josephus and in history, or because it is written in the Word of God? Jesus said that the temple and Jerusalem would be destroyed, the prophets before, predicted it, and God fulfilled it. Just as we believe the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple because God foretold them, so do we believe the restoration and conversion of Israel simply because God has told us. Their restoration and conversion is based upon prayer, love and unchanging character of the promises of Jehovah, the everlasting God.

The Beneficial Results of Their Restoration and Conversion.

Let me briefly state the beneficial effects of the restoration and conversion of the Jews will have both upon themselves and upon the whole human race. "The Jews have proven a blessing even in their present dispersed state. Their unparalleled sufferings in exact fulfillment of the predictions of the prophets in the Word of God, have silenced the infidels and convinced many skeptics, of the truth of the divine revelation. Now, if in their present dispersed condition they are still a light to shine in darkness, how much clearer will that light be, how much stronger those evidences arising from the fulfillment of those many predictions relating to the restoration and conversion of the Jews?

That the Jews will prove a greater blessing to the world at large, than they have ever been before, is clearly and positively declared in the Word of God. The Apostle not only assures us that their restoration will prove a more extensive means of the conversion of the Gentiles. For he thus reasons; "Now, if the fall of them be the riches of the world, how much more their fulness? For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?" "For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land, AND THE STRANGERS SHALL BE JOINED WITH THEM, and they shall cleave to the HOUSE OF JACOB."—Isa. 14:1.

Those Jews who were converted by our Lord's ministry and commissioned by Him to go preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, were the grand instruments in planting the Christian Church in the world, and of founding the Kingdom of the Redeemer, among the nations. So in these latter days, the Jews, when converted through the aid of Gentile believers, will be active, zealous and successful preachers of the Gospel, and in a large degree, contribute their aid in bringing all the Pagan nations into subjection to Jesus Christ. Every friend of missions must be deeply convinced that in seeking the salvation of the Jews, we are promoting the conversion of the heathen. It is not difficult to conceive that the restoration and conversion of the Jews, must exert a mighty, an overpowering influence on the Kingdoms of the world. The conversion of the world will not take place till after the conversion of the Jewish nation. When the Lord shall arise upon them and favor them, then "the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."—Isa. 60:3.

It is very evident, from the general course of the prophets' descriptions, that God has given the Jewish people a prominence in spreading the knowledge of salvation throughout the world, and that this is true in every era of their history. It was so first, as they were the depositories of the truth. "To them were committed the oracles of God"—Rom. 3:2. Their very stumbling at a crucified Messiah was for the same purpose. Their diminishing has been the riches of the Gentiles. The whirlwind that threw down the cedar of Lebanon, scattered also its seed to take root in every land. Their restoration will wonderfully secure the same object. It will prove "life from the dead" to countless millions of Gentiles. Archbishop Leighton was right when he stated "they forget a main part of the church's glory, who pray not daily for the conversion of the Jews." It seems an incontrovertible fact that since the Jewish champions of the cross were wholly withdrawn from the Christian host, comparatively insignificant have been the conquest of the church. Does not history appear to give her testimony in support of that interpretation of prophesy? Directly, as well as indirectly, are the Jews to be instrumental to promote the conversion of the world. It is strongly intimated by the voice of Revelation that they are to be the seed sown in the earth and the joy of the whole earth. Why have not the eyes of the church been turned with more expectancy to that people who supplied the glorious band that bore the cross triumphant round the globe? Here they exist, pre-eminently qualified for the missionary enterprise, only needing the life giving touch of heavenly grace to make them stand up a mighty army, trained for the conflict. Scattered among all people, inured to all climates and customs, disciplined to all hardships, they would require no long process of preparation.

Our Duty and Privilege.

In conclusion, what is our duty and privilege in order to hasten that day of blesing? When "ISRAEL shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation." Our duty as Christians is to preach the Gospel "to the Jew first, and also to the Greek," to complete the church composed of saved Jews and Gentiles,—in other words, to gather out from the Jews the "remnant according to the election of grace" and from the Gentiles "the fullness of the Gentiles." Much of our missionary work is to prepare the Jews to recognize in Christ, their COMING MESSIAH, making "ready a people prepared for the Lord." —Luke 1:17. We must point the Jewish people to their once crucified and now glorified Messiah, who will soon "appear the second time without sin unto salvation." "Who as their King will establish the throne of David and "reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem before His ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24; 23

In that day, Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit."—Isa. 27;6.

For the Salvation of the Jews.

"The church in her militant state
Is weary and cannot forbear;
The saints in an agony wait
To see Him again in the air;

The news of His coming I hear,
And join in the universal cry—
O Jesus, in triumph appear, Appear in the clouds in the sky."

—Charles Wesley.

(The End.)

SON OF SLAVE-HOLDER AND SON OF HIS SLAVE NOW FELLOW-MEMBERS OF COUNCIL.

By Rev. S. M. Cavert, D. D.

A unique incident occurred at the recent Annual Meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the churches at Indianapolis which excited deep interest and was a striking symbol of the growing cooperation between the white and the Negro races. Dean W. F. Tillett of Vanderbilt University, who has been a member of the Council and a regular attendance upon the annual meetings of the Executive Committee almost from the beginning of the Council, arose under a request for personal privilege, and addressed the chair in substantially the following words:

"Before passing from the consideration of the subject of Christian Education to the next subject on your program, I ask that I may be permitted to make a few remarks that are personal to myself and one other member of this Executive Committee who is present here this afternoon, and whose work in life, like my own, has long been that of Christian Education. I am quite sure that the relationship that exists between me and this fellow-member of the Council to whom I refer is one that does not exist between any other two members of this Executive Committee; and I am equally sure that this peculiar relationship will not likely ever again be duplicated in all the future history of the Federal Council. I allude to the fact that the son of a former Southern slave-holder and the son of one who was formerly owned by him in the days of slavery are together here in this room this afternoon as fellow-members of this Federal Council and of this Executive Committee. The member of the Council to whom I refer is Professor S. G. Atkins, the founder and the president of Slater State Normal College of Winston-Salem, N. C., one of the most useful and successful of the institutions for the education of Negroes in North Carolina.

In Slavery Days.

"My father, a Methodist preacher, and my mother were slave-holders, as most other people of their class in the South were. Servants found necessary for work about the house were owned as slaves. But my father was everywhere recognized as a deeply conscientious and truly Christian master—a thing which I suppose some people would regard as an absolute impossibility, so incompatible do they regard being a Christian and the ownership of slaves. I remember distinctly how daily at the hour of family prayer, the slaves that we owned were brought into our family room, and how they sat, listening with us children to the reading of the Bible, and how they knelt with us at the family altar, and our father prayed for them just as he did for his own children. He looked after their needs and treated them always considerately and kindly. He believed that the time would come, and should come, when they would all be free; and he prayed for the coming of that day. Indeed most Southern slave-holders, as I knew them in my childhood, were far from being such odious characters as the slave-holders described in Uncle Tom's Cabin and those cruelties stirred the righteous soul of Whittier, and inspired those pathetic and passionate poems which in turn stirred the souls of others. And never did the sermons of my Methodist preacher father flame out in denunciation of wrong more than when he preached against cruelties and outrages perpetrated by heartless slave-owners on their helpless slaves.

Born in Slavery: Now an Educator.

"Among the small number of slaves owned by my father and mother in my early childhood, the one we thought most of and trusted most and loved best was named Allen Atkins. It is that man's son born in the midst of the Civil War in the village of Haywood, N. C., who is here today as a member with me and you of this Executive Committee and as the honored representative of one of the church constituting this Council. He was educated at St. Augustine Normal and Collegiate Institute, at Raleigh, which is recognized as perhaps the best institution of its kind for the education of Colored people that is conducted by the Episcopal Church in the South. Soon after graduating at this Institute, Mr. Atkins founded the institution at Winston-Salem, now some thirty years ago, of which he has always been the head and which is now the property of the State of North Carolina. The fact that the State should be willing to take over the property and retain Professor Atkins so long at the head of it, is the highest possible compliment to the character of the school and to the executive ability and moral worth of its president. With this bit of information concerning his father and his own achievements, I am now going to ask President Atkins to come forward and let me present him to the Council."

As he came forward Dean Tillett extended his hand and said: "If thy heart is as my heart give me thy hand." Having shaken hands, as the two stood before the audience, Dean Tillett said further:

"President Atkins, I honor the memory of my father and am proud of my descent from him; but I want to say that I also honor and revere the memory of your father, Allen Atkins. He was a good and true man; and I congratulate you both on account of your descent from so good a man and also on account of your ascent in that you have risen from the conditions of poverty and obscurity in which you were born to a large and high place of influence in your race—and this you have done not by self seeking but by merit and by service to your race, your church and your native State. And when I think of these conditions that you have overcome, and what you have accomplished, I feel that your achievement in life is greater than anything that I can claim to have done. If all the members of your race and mine could understand each other and feel towards each other as you and I do, there would, I think, be no race troubles between the black man and the white. It was one of my own former students, Dr. W. W. Alexander, who on yesterday spoke to the Council and showed us how much he and other leaders of both races are trying to do to promote and maintain right relations between the two races. I rejoice in the fact that you and I are both now free; for the emancipation of the Negro race in this country meant also the emancipation of the white race; for as long as the incubus of slavery lasts, the slave-holder and the slave are both in boundage and both are inevitably kept back from their highest and best racial development."

Co-Workers in Christian Education.

"The worth and the greatness alike of individuals and of race depend not upon the color of the skin but upon their culture, character and service to mankind; and it is your lot and mine as educators of the young men and young women of our respective races so to develop them in intelligence and moral character and capacity for efficient service that the white race and the black race shall each respect and serve the other, and both together work, in a Christian spirit and in a Christian way, to make our country and our nation great not only commercially but morally and spiritually. Your father and mine were both alike willing bond-servants of Jesus Christ while here in the flesh. They are together now in a land where both are free; and I can but think, if they look down upon us from the glory land, they rejoice to see their sons associated together in the freedom and fellowship of this Council and in the work of Christian Education. Thanking the Chairman for giving me time to say those words about my father and yours, and to express to you in this presence my high regard for you and the work you are doing, I pray God's blessing upon you and your people."

Prolonged applause followed these remarkes as Dr. Tillett and President Atkins returned to their seats; and the applause did not cease until President Atkins was called back to the platform by the Chairman and requested to say something. His remarks, which were brief and delivered with modesty, were listened to with deep interest by the audience. He spoke as follows:

"This is a gracious moment for me, and one of hopeful suggestiveness for my race. The name of Rev. John Tillett was greatly honored and reveared in the humble home of my childhood; and this gracious consideration of me and of my race by his son, Dean Tillett, is in line with my feeling that it is desirable to bring out the bright spots in this matter of race relations. There are of course many dark spots, many things to discourage, but I believe in stressing the bright spots.

Progress in Race Relations.

"As a colored man and citizen of North Carolina, I recall that the first appropriation made by the State legislature for a school for the special training of Negro teachers in our State was the small sum of two thousand dollars. Our General Assembly, two years ago, appropriated nearly one million dollars for this same purpose, and we are hoping that our Legislature which is soon to assemble, will be actuated by a like spirit and make a like appropriation to carry forward the wise and liberal program now under way for the education of Negroes in North Carolina. This spirit of liberality and good feeling is naturally the fruit of the fine and gracious sentiments expressed by Dean Tillett, and such a spirit is characteristic of the noble type of Southerner which he represents. It is this phase of this whole subject which I think should be most of all stressed at this time. To think of and bring out continually more and more the bright spots rather than the dark ones will tend to make the dark spots less dark and the bright spots in our race relationship more bright and more lasting.

"I want to say in conclusion that I appreciate very much the consideration of Dean Tillett which he has manifested this day in this presence toward the son of the man who was once owned by his father."

Mississippi is the only state in the Union which, by constitutional provision, prohibits the bequeathing of property to charitable objects. An amendment to remove this restriction is to be submitted to the voters.

PHILOSOPHY AND CHRISTIANITY.

By Daniel Albright Long.

Philosophy is distinguished from the remaining sciences by the specific differences that it is not occupied, like each of them, with any special, limited province of things, nor yet with the sum of these provinces taken in their full extent, but with the nature, laws, and connection of whatever actually is, or as Uberweg says,—"Philosophy is the science of principles."

The so called philosophy of the orientals is so blended with religious notions that a separate exposition is impossible. The doctrine of Confucius (551-479 B. C.) and his disciples is mainly a practical philosophy of utilitarian tendency. The oldest gods of whom the Vedas treat (1300 B. C.) were grouped about Indra, Varuni, and Agni. To Brahma the Hindoos ascribed the source of the world. Vischnu was preserver and governor, Siva was destroyer and producer. About 550 B. C. Buddhism arose in opposition to Brahma. This was an attempt at a moral reformation, hostile to castes, but the source of a new hierarchy. Its disciples were to "rise above the checkered world of pain and pleasure by entrance into Nirvana, whereby the soul was saved from the torments of transmigration and the individual was brought into unconscious unity with the All."

The Persian religion, reformed by Zoroaster, regarded the Hindu gods as evil demons. With them there were two kingdoms: Light and Darkness, in opposition. After a long contest Light was to triumph.

The Egyptians are credited with the doctrines of the judgment of departed souls and of their transmigration, which doctrines Herodotus supposes to have passed them to the orphists and the Pythogoreans.

The Jewish monotheism became an important factor in the evolution of Greek philosophy from the time of Neo-Pythagoreanism. The Philosophy of the Greeks. Modern criticism has enabled us to have a more exact historical account, and a purer and more profound comprehension of their philosophy.

With all his poetic freedom, Plato sketches with fidelity pictures of the various philosophies, which had preceded his own. Aristotle only departs occasionally from complete historic rigor in his reduction of earlier points of view to the fundamental conceptions of his own system. You remember that Plato characterizes in various dialogues and doctrines of Heraclitus and Parmenides, of Empedocles, Anaxagoras and the Pythagoreans, of Protagoras, Gorgias and other sophists, and especially those of Socrates and of individual disciples of Socrates. Next to Plato, Xenophon is the most important authority for Socrates and his teaching. You cannot fail to remember how Aristotle makes it his principle to consider, first of all, what results obtained by his predecessors, are tenable. Hence you will always be benefitted by reading his critical review of the principles of all earlier philsophers from Thales to Plato. Then, too, we must look to Aristotle to give us reliable information concerning Plato's unwritten doctrines.

In the evolution of Greek and Roman Philosophy we may note three periods: First Period: Philosophical inquiry toward the universe of nature; Second Period:Philosophical inquiry toward man, as a thinking being; Third Period: Direction of philosophical inquiry about the divine nature of the relation of the world and man to it. In the second period, after Athens became the center of philosophical activity, race distinctions began to disappear and the home of philosophy was co-extensive with the Hellenic world, including, of course, those nations in which the Hellenic type of culture remained predominent. When we reach the third period, we observe the Hellenic mode of thought blended with the oriental and the representatives of philosophy (now become theosophy) were either Jews under Hellenic influence, Egyptians and other orientals, or men Hellenic in race who were deeply impregnated with orientalism.

Notice the manifestation of the divine guidance without books and the tyrany of the State when the many could not philosophize.

First The divine guidance. The demoniac sign, which was accepted by Socrates as the voice of God, was a conviction, with reference to the suitableness or unsuitableness of given causes of action. He wrote no books. Yet, he believed that the world was governed by a supreme, divine intelligence.

Second. Observe the tyrany of the State. The accusation of Socrates, which took place in the year 399, B. C., not long after the expulsion of the Thirty Tyrants, and which was brought forward by Meletus, and sfupported by Anytus, the democratic politician, and Lycon, the orator, contained substantially the same charges which Aristophanes had made in the clouds. It ran thus: "Socrates is a public offender in that he does not recognize the gods which the State recognizes, but introduces new demoniacical beings; he has also offended by corrupting the young." He submitted his conduct, not his conviction, to the dicision of the judges.

Plato taught that God was the supreme idea or essence of the universe. He strangly condemned the views, then prevalent, which represented the gods as having human passions.

One of the most remarkable features of Plato's philosophy is his theory of ideas. With him, an idea is not simply an image or conception formed by the human mind; it is rather an eternal thought of the divine mind. He held that the human soul is not only immortal, but that it has always existed. In his pre-existent state it has had a perception of the eternal ideas (i. e. the perfect forms or patterns of things) as they exist in the mind of God. A dim shadowy remembrance of those celestial patterns is what sometimes enables us to form a conception of loveliness, virtue, etc., far more perfect, more divine, than anything our mortal eyes have ever beheld. It is thus that the gifted painter is enabled to give us forms of beauty more exquisite than any that can be found in this world. It is thus, also, that on hearing of a generous action we are enabled to form an idea of generosity; for it is obvious that such an action could have no signification to one who had never known the feeling of generosity in his soul. "He was." says Cicero, "occupied in writing at the very moment of his death."

Probaly no other philosopher, of whatever age or nation, has contributed so much as Plato towards the moral and intellectual culture of the human race.

Macaulay, alluding to Plato's wonderful power as a writer, speaks of him as the finest of human intellects, exercising boundless dominion over the finest of human languages.

"It is a fine saying" of Mr. Emerson, "that Socrates and Plato are the double star which the most powerful instruments will not entirely separate." Again says Emerson, in his book on Representative men, "The way to know him (Plato) is to compare him, not with nature, but with other men. How many ages have gone by, and he remains unapproached."

In his "School of Athens," Raphael represents Plato as pointing towards heaven, while Aristotle turns his regards upon the earth." In the spirit of this representation, Goethe characterizes Plato as follows: "Plato's relation to the world is that of a superior spirit, whose good pleasure it is to dwell in it for a time."

We will not dwell upon Aristotle's Logic and Natural Philosophy, the ethics of the Stoics and Epicureans. As minds differ like faces, the results of the great philosophical system were not only reproduced or appropriated and developed in the schools which followed, but were subjected to a critical revision and re-examination, which led either to their being remodeled and blended to gether in new systems, or to doubt in regard to all of them and in regard to the cognascibility of anything—hence arose

Electicism and Skepticism.

There appeared, in succession, three skeptical schools or groups of philsophers. 1. Pyrro of Elis. 2. The Middle Academy. 3. The Later Skeptics, beginning with Aenesdimus. The earlier school of skeptics asserted that of every two mutually contradictory propositions one was not more true than the other. They sought, by withholding their judgment in all cases, to secure peace of mind, and esteemed everything except virture indifferent. As the Greek philosophy was propogated in the Roman world, the tendency was toward Eclecticism. The most important and influential representative of this tendency is Cicero, who, in what pertains to the theory of cognition, confessed his adhesion to the skepticism of the Middle Academy, took no interest in physics, and in Ethis wavered between the Stoic and the Peripatetic doctrines.

So far my remarks refer principally to those who lived before the coming of Christ. The religious facts, ideas, and doctrines of Christianity gave a new impulse to philosophical investigation. At the time when Greek culture had destroyed the intellectual exclusiveness, and the Roman empire had annihilated the political independence of the nations there arose in Christianity, in opposition to the reality of the Kingdom of the world, the idea of a kingdom of God, founded on purity of heart. The expectation of the Messiah among the Jewish peopde was spiritualized, repentance and moral improvement were recognized as the condition of the salvation of the soul, and the principle of all commandments was in the law of love, whence the ceremonial law, and with it all national, political, and social distinctions lost their earlier positive significance; to the poor the gospel was preached ; participation in the kingdom of heaven was promised to the oppressed, and the consciousness of God as the Almighty Creator, the holy law-giver, and just Judge was completed by the consciousness of redemption and divine sonship through the working and in dwelling of God in Christ and in the community of believers.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Sympathy may express a fellow-feeling, as when one who has lost a friend enters into the feeling of another who has lost a friend. As they stand at the grave together, they have a fellow-feeling, or sympathy with each other. Sympathy may take the form of compassion for another in great pain or suffering. "A certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and when he saw him, he had compassion on him." The Samaritan had not had the same experience, but the man's wounded and helpless condition touched his heart, aroused his sympathy. When Jesus "saw the multitude, He was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd." The real source of sympathy is in Jesus Christ. Suffering craves sympathy. Poverty craves sympathy. Ignorance craves sympathy. Disappointment craves sympathy. Burdened souls crave sympathy. Sympathy is a heart interest. Sympathy is warm and tender. It is spontaneous. It is not by resolution. The objects of sympathy are many. Misfortune produces the demand for it. Sickness deserves it. Criminals need it. It is more than words, more than money, even more than help.

The usual current of sympathy runs toward the sick bed. The shrunken limbs, the sunken eyes, the pale face, the trembling voice, the short breath, all appeal to the feelings of those who visit the sick. It may be the wife, the husband, the child, that is sick. People say: "I am so sorry for the sick wife, she has been bedridden so long. It touches my heart to look at her." Is not the emphasis of such sympathy misplaced? Think, for a moment, of the father who waits on that wife, cooks the breakfast, dresses the children, and then goes to his work to make the support for those he loves. Sickness has weakened the wife and she lies upon the bed, giving way to the conditions, but the husband's care and anxiety are increased and intensified by his wife's condition. We think too much of the patient and too little of the patience and service rendered by the devoted husband.

It is often the case that the mother is as helpless as the sick babe, her heart is burdened, her nights are sleepless, her strength is consumed in service, her anxiety is an agony, and she suffers more than the child. She needs sympathy and deserves it. Again, people pity the destitute, and do not sympathize with the good women who deny themselves and expose themselves to all weathers to relieve their destitution. Sometimes good men and good women go through rain and snow to carry fuel and food to the poor who hug the fire in their cabins and do not shiver in the wind. "Charity suffereth long, and is kind * * * charity never faileth." Love suffers. It was the Love of Jesus Christ that made Him suffer for others. Suffering for others is the severest suffering. " Jesus carried our sorrows." That was His heaviest load. When sympathizing with the afflicted, do not forget those who have the care of the afflicted. When you sympathize with the wayward son or daughter, do not forget the mother who bears a heavier load. When you sympathize with the sick man, do not forget the Doctor who carries the patient in his heart, and spends the night in anxious study for his relief. Who extends sympathy to the trained nurse who waits at the bedside of the suffering the whole night long? Those who have the care of the sick and suffering deserves as much, if not more sympathy, than the patient in his pains. Divide your sympathy, at least equally, between the suffering and the serving.

ELON LETTER.

The Administration Building lies in ruins and our hearts are bowed in sorrow. Every record is gone. The president's office had to begin from the bottom up. We are down, but we are not out.

It was about six thirty in the morning of January 18th that servants coming to the College Dining Hall, discovered the Administration Building in flames. At four thirty the night watchman inspected the building and there was no sign of fire. The origin of the catastrophe which has stricken the hearts of our people is shrouded in profound mystery and will likely ever be.

It was a terrific fire. The building was constructed of heart pine and with a stiff breeze blowing, nothing could be done to save it. Only a few typewriters were rescued from the Commercial Department. There were four safes in the building, but the intensity of the heat to which they were subjected charred their contents to a dismal black, where it did not actually reduce them to ashes. The steel letter files containing the correspondence were as wax before the lashing onslaught of the flames.

The sacred shrine of many a heart is gone, but the spirit of devotion that clusters around Elon is more alive than ever. So far as I know not a student has left the hill except for sickness at home. The whole community has flamed forth in a rare outburst of loyal enthusiasm. Burlington citizens have had a meeting to consider how Alamance County can assist us in our hour of need and disaster. Telegrams, 'phone calls, letters have come from every section of the country extending sympathy and prophesying that out of the glowing embers of our most sacred shrine there shall arise a nobler Elon.

The spirit of our student body is beautiful. One of the buildings has no heat and another is only partially heated. Recitation rooms are scattered all over the town. We run by the power house whistle, yet there are only smiles. The College is blest in such a spirit.

Like heroes the students fought to save the Alumni Building when it seemed that it must go up, having caught in the top floor under the tin roof. Their heroic efforts and the Burlington Fire Company's chemical engine saved that structure for us.

At eleven A. M., immediately following the fire, a mass meeting was held in the gymnasium. It began with the singing of "Here's to Dear Old Elon" and ended with the singing of "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow." In between these songs were prayers and speeches of loyalty and inspiration by the students, Faculty, Alumni, citizens, and visiting ministers and friends that will live while memory lasts. I said then and I say now that " I would rather have the spirit manifested here today than to have the Administration Building back." When asked to vote on the question of standing by the college in her crisis every student arose to his or her feet and pledged unflagging devotion, following the vote with the Doxology and a prayer of consecration, when we had not a single definite item to suggest for the resumption of the work. It was a great moment and presages great things for the future.

The Executive Board of Trustees met after surveying the situation issued the call for a full Board meeting on Wednesday January 24th. At this meeting full steps will be taken toward repairing the breaches in our walls. With a net loss of 125,000 above the $23,500 of insurance carried, the college faces the future confident in its reliance on the Brotherhood and assured that God will overrule this fell disaster to Elon's growth and progress.

In the words of Dr. L. E. Smith, wired on the day of the fire, "many times misfortunes are turned into blessings. The Christian Church will arise and build bigger and better." In this hope and with this spirit let us face the future on our knees that the cause of Christian Education in our Brotherhood may not only not suffer, but be actually promoted by this stroke of God's Providence.

MUNICE (IND.) LETTER.

The up-town churches of this city have been observing the week of prayer, this week, in union services conducted in the various churches. The pastor of the church where the service was held presided and a pastor of another church did the speaking. There is a fine spirit of cooperation among the churches here, and in our Ministerial Association almost every Christian belief of the community is represented. Several of the churches are to follow the week of prayer with a series of evangelistic services. We have just completed our improvements on church building, and are expecting Dr. Omer S. Thomas, Secretary of the Mission Board, to be with us on Sunday, the 28th, for a re-opening service and that occasion will be followed by a series of evangelistic services for ten days, the pastor doing the preaching. During the past six months we have had the cooperation of several new families in our work, and among them some very fine people. The United Gospel Quartet of Muncie, gave a musical program at our church Tuesday evening under the auspices of our married peoples Bible Class, and the offering finely replenished the class treasury. On Thursday evening the class held a business meeting and class social at the home of Dr. O. M. Deardorff, with about forty present, and not only had a fine business session but a most enjoyable social evening. Through the activities of this class a number of new people and families have been found and brought into touch with the church. A teacher training class has been recently formed and they meet next week for their first work. Here, as almost everywhere, the teacher-problem is one of the great problems in the work. But in that matter improvement is being made in almost every school, both in the city and country. I have just found a book, in my collection, written in 1838, "For the use of Sunday Schools" as a text book. It is a catachism on the leading fundamentals of Christianity, and much space is given to Old Testament characters, and leading historical incidents. There are some respects in which after all we have not advanced very rapidly. One of the most interesting departments, as well as one of the most promising in our work here is our Junior Society of Christian Endeavor. There are thirty-two of the dear little workers, and they meet every Sunday during the hour of our morning worship, in a seperate room. They have their own little worship, under the guidance of Miss Strong, their Supt., and are thus not only being led into Christian life and experience but taught and trained to remain after the regular Sunday School hour for real worship. Our Intermediate Society of Christian Endeavor, under the guidance of Miss Colson, also meets during that period in still another room, and two of them have recently come into church membership. There should be some plan by which to change the tide in the future which takes the young people, after the Sunday School hour, away from the morning worship. There is but little, if any, worship in the average Sunday School; besides its work belongs to a different department, that of teaching and training.

BROTHER ABE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PASTOR.

Dear Brother:

I hope you enjoyed Christmas to the same degree that I did. My Christmas joys were almost complete. In fact there was just only one thing lacking: I thought I would receive some little token of appreciation from you. But when I remembered that you never give presents to any one, or even write a card, I excused you. I wish to reassure you that I continue to remember you and shall always do so. In fact, if ever I am so foolish as to attempt to write a book the title of it will be "The Biography of Simon Abe."

But I thought I would tell you something about my Christmas joys. It may be a preacher has more of them at such times than laymen do. You remember Sunday, Dec. 24th, was a beautiful, cloudless day. I spent the day, talking about Men and Millions. In the morning at Windsor, in the afternoon at Bethlehem. Then at night I slipped into our church at Suffolk to see and to hear Dr. Staley. I thought I could do it without being recognized. I succeeded in carrying out my plan with Dr. Staley, but I failed in the Christian Endeavor Meeting, which was conducted by a lady. The reason, I suppose, is that women are keener observers than men.

The Suffolk Church is great in most every respect, and it was a great service. After the Christian Endeavor meeting was over, we went up into the auditorium to hear the sermon. I slipped in and somewhat hid myself behind a big fat brother. While the music was being rendered, a bigger and fatter brother still, walked down to the pulpit and whispered something to the preacher which, of course, I did not understand. Just before his sermon, he stated that the ladies of some society or organization in the church wished to make an announcement, and that they might make it before the sermon. Then I saw the same "bigger and fatter brother," walking toward the pulpit a second time, carrying a large new travelling bag which looked like it might have been made from the hide of a big Texas steer. This he presented to Dr. Staley in a very appropriate speech, saying among many other things, that as Dr. Staley had become the pastor of the Southern Christian Convention it would be necessary for him to do much travelling, and that the bag was presented to him as a token of their appreciation of his faithful services, and to be a constant reminder of the givers. To appreciate that speech, the response, and the sermon and service, it was necessary to be present. I shall always believe that big present helped to make the great sermon that followed. It all certainly reminded me of you, Brother Abe, not that you ever had a part in anything like it, but because you have had just as good opportunities and never used them.

After the services were all concluded, I went with the happy pastor and his daughter to the parsonage; and, for a few minutes, tried to help them enjoy Christmas. You see when a preacher receives a present all the family equally enjoy it together. So I joined them in rejoicing over that splendid Christmas gift. It was interesting to hear Dr. Staley talk about it—its quality, cost, usefulness, etc., and it was funny to see him when he opened it. It had all sorts of pockets and apartments inside; and he felt and fumbled in all of them just like he expected some great surprise was somewhere hidden within. I believe I would have envied him that present, had I not already received a greater one myself.

It was about my presents that I started out to tell you. At the conclusion of the Sunday School services in Windsor, Dec. 24th, Prof. J. W. Roberts arose and made a great speech. He quoted a sentence from my first remarks to the church at Windsor. I had said that "I had come to stay;" and he added, "We are going to send you back to your home." He then presented me with a neatly wrapped package, and informed me that I would find a sufficient amount within to purchase my ticket. As I had already secured the cash to purchase the ticket, what was given me to get me away, I used in getting back. I took the package, said a little something put it in my pocket, and I believe preached a little better that day. Then I took it out, put it in my grip, and decided that I would not open it until I reached home so that my wife and girls might share with me the joy of opening and counting it. This was a hard thing to do, but I did it. You, Brother Abe, I know, would have soon bursted it open. You can hardly imagine the joy we had, after more than a month's separation, on that cold Christmas morning when we hurried up the fire, huddled up together, exchanged presents, and finally counted out the coins and bills from the good folks of Windsor.

But the biggest present was from the Publishing Agent of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It was a long green check for $50 60. This, however, was not a surprise, but came as a reward for securing one hundred, or more, yearly subscriptions to our paper. It first made me glad and thankful, but after much reflection I felt sad. My joy was turned into heaviness. It pointed out my sin, rather than any merit. If I had secured them in my new field, it would have been different, but the most of them came from my former pastorate. And it told the story of my great neglect in properly presenting our publication to my people. For five years, more than half a hundred homes in my field were without THE SUN; and I could have placed it in them then, just as easily as now! I certainly repented, and hope to do better in my future fields.

But I thank every one who gave me their subscription. First of all, I thank my wife, for she greatly helped me. Then my friends, for they wonderfully encouraged me. And, last of all, I thank you, Brother Abe, for your six month's subscription. I learned many valuable lessons in that campaign that will help me. One is that when we set a goal, within reason, we can reach it. Another, that it takes two halves of anything to make the whole of anything. It takes two hundred half subscriptions to equal one hundred whole ones. The half is harder to get sometimes than the whole. I used to hear you say that "Things done by halves are never done right." Yet, when it comes to the church, everything you do is done by halves. You are a 1-2 Christian. You go to church 1-2 the time. You compelled me to be a 1-2 pastor, because you 1-2 supported me. Dr. C. H. Rowland used to talk about one horse preachers; but they are 1-2 preachers, serving 1-2 Christians. I once asked you for a small contribution for one of our very worthy enterprises, and I received just 1-2 of the amount I asked. You said, and seemed to boast about it, that you never tried to do but 1-2 of what the preachers said do. You see you are a 1-2 subscriber to THE SUN. 1-2 Christians make 1-2 pastors, preaching 1-2 or 1-4 times per month; and the usefulness of the church is almost always reduced to 0. Why not be a whole Christian, have a whole church, a whole preacher, and do a wholesale business for God? This is your privilege; and you and your church can do it. So, I shall continue to hope that you may soon be a whole subscriber, a whole Christian and a blessing to the whole church.

Very sincerely,

T. E. WHITE.

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH THE CHURCH AND OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS?

On Christmas Day I went out to Pleasant Cross Christian Church and Sunday School and heard a very able sermon preached by Rev. John Allred on The Wise Men of the East. In his discourse he brought out the true meaning of the Star of Bethlehem to all that love His appearing. The congregation was just like it was when the Wise Men of the East saw the Star—only a few then investigated to see what the star meant, and as it was then, so it is today, only a few are gathered together to worship the Heavenly Father in remembrance of His love for His people in sending His only begotton Son into the world as our personal Saviour. Thinking of our Lord's love for us in submitting Himself to His Father's will to die on the Cross for our sins, and seeing how few go to church and Sunday School, I began to ask myself this question:

What is the Matter with the Church and our Sunday Schools?

The more I thought in an effort to answer my own question, the more light I got on the subject. After meditating on this thought for some time, I received this impression as to the meaning: Absent for the sake of others. At first I could not see how that could have anything to do with the churches and our Sunday Schools. Later the thought came upon me with much force, so much so that I could not pass it off, as it seemed to me to have a deep meaning. As I continued to think on that meaning, this is the thought that came to me:

We who claim to be Christians do not stay away from ball games, moving picture shows, theaters, social parties, better known as dancing frolics, and numberless other places of worldly amusement, as we should, for the sake of others. We may go to these places (remember I say we may) and not get hurt personally, but our influence will be hurt. In this connection, too, remember that Paul said: "If eating meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no more meat as long as the world stands." So I feel if going to these places puts a dark spot on my Christian influence and character, causing my brethren to stumble, we had better stay away. I am forced to believe that we can make no real progress in the building up of the church and Sunday School till the followers of Christ do stay away from such places of doubtful amusements, as tends to weaken our personal influence, for when the believer's personal influence is weakened, whether we believe it or not, our church influence is hurt and badly hurt.

We must let our light shine clearly if we are to do our part in building up the Church of Christ in our day and generation.

Christ says we will know the tree by the fruit it bears. A good tree will not bring forth faulth fruit; neither will a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. At the same time He declares that we shall be known by our fruit. So let us show the fruit of the Christian life in us by absenting ourselves from these worldly gatherings and places, for the sake of others!

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

Christian Orphanage

OUR ORPHANAGE WORK.

Dear Friends:—

I am glad to say to you that all our sick children in the "Baby Home" are very much improved. All are able to be up in their rooms except one little girl and she is very much improved. We have had quite a number of cases of "Flu" and have had four cases of pneumonia but so far none have proved fatal.

We now have ninety three children in our care. It is a constant care to look after that many as so many of them are little tots. When the weather is cold and rough it is hard to get a little fellow to realize that it is more comfortable in the house than it is on the outside, and it takes constant care to keep them from exposing themselves to the cold. I believe most children are alike at the same age. I remember when I was a little boy I would go hunting when it was so cold that the trees would be covered with frost and the ground covered with frozen snow and I really enjoyed it. Nothing gave me more pleasure than to find a rabbit in his bed or a covey of birds all huddled together. I was a boy then and those things appealed to me just as they appeal to the boys of today. They appeal to our boys at the orphanage, they are just like other boys and our girls are just like other girls. In work here we have the same problems to meet that fathers and mothers have in their own home only we have more as we have a greater number of children, but it is a work of love and charity and we enjoy it.

We want to thank our entire brotherhood for their loyal support during the year 1922 and assure you we are grateful.

We now have the largest number of children we have ever had and it takes much more to run the institution. We want to ask your hearty cooperation during the year 1923. Help us to do greater things for the little helpless children, and do it in the Master's name.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Sunperintendent.

SAYING " THANK YOU."

By Ethel Merrill Beale

"That was a lovely story. Will you tell it to me all over again?"

Mother smiled. "Tomorrow night, dear. I'm so glad you liked it, but that will have to be all for tonight."

Carl slipped to the floor and stood waiting while mother fluffed out his pillow, turned down the blankets and made his bed all soft and comfortable for the night. Then she sat down on the edge of the bed and held her arms out to Carl.

"Now are we ready for prayers?" she asked. But Carl stood as still as a little statue.

"I think I don't want to say my prayers tonight," he answered slowly.

"Very well." She spoke quite as if nothing had happened. "Hop into bed and I'll tuck you in cozy and comfy for the night."

Carl looked up at her in astonishment. What could she mean? Every night for a week he had said, "I think I don't want to say my prayers tonight," and every night for a week she had answered, "Why, Carl! After all God has been doing for you today you don't want to say 'thank you?' " But tonight she only said, "Very well. Hop into bed." What could it mean?

All the time his mother was tucking him in and long after she had given him his good-night kiss Carl lay wondering. What could mother mean? Didn't she care after all? Still wondering, Carl fell asleep.

When he wakened in the morning there was a strange choky feeling in his throat. What was it that had happened? Oh, now he remembered! Last night he had done wrong and mother had not seemed to care. Would she think any more about it this morning, or was it true that she did not care? He dressed hurriedly that he might find out as quickly as possible.

When he went into the dining-room he found father making a fire in the fireplace.

"Good morning, Sonny," came the usual cherry greeting. That proved that father knew nothing of what had happened last night, for if he had been displeased, he would have said, "Good morning, Carl," not "Good morning, Sonny."

Carl went out to the kitchen to find his mother. Her greeting, too, was quite as usual. It was clear that they had decided he was right, and prayers were not important after all. Yet the strange, choky feeling did not leave his throat.

A quick step sounded on the piazza. Carl ran to the front door. He was always glad of a chance to get the morning paper before his father had time to ask for it. Laying it on a chair beside the fireplace Carl stood waiting, but father did not look up. He waited another minute, then, "Here's your paper, daddy," he said.

"Oh, yes!" answered father, without looking up. Not, "Thank-you, Sonny"; not, "What a helper I have!" only, "Oh yes!"

Carl looked at him in surprise. Surely he would say something more when he stood up from making the fire; but he did not. He took up the paper with never a word, never a look at Carl. The boy turned away in disappointment.

"All ready for breakfast?" His mother's cherry call brought Carl and his father hurrying into the dining-room. As they sat down mother exclaimed, "I forgot to fill the glasses. Will you both excuse me?" She started to rise from her chair, but Carl was ahead of her.

"I'll fill them, mother," he said.

Very carefully he poured the water into her glass, then into his father's, then into his own. Not a drop did he spill. "Mother will be proud of this," he thought, and father kept right on talking, never heeding the fine work he was doing. What had come over them! Silently he slipped into his chair, too much disappointed to ask them if he had not done well.

After breakfast it was the same way. Carl helped mother clear off the table, he helped father brush up the fireplace, he ran to get his hat for him as he left the house. But neither father nor mother said a word about any of the things he did to help. It was very, very strange!

Carl stood thinking. Surely there must be some way to really please mother. Suddenly a happy idea came to him. Very quietly he tiptoed up-stairs. Very quickly but softly he worked. It was a hard task for so small a boy.

A pat here, a pull there, one more tug, and Carl gave a little sigh of relief. Then he went running down-stairs.

"Mother," he called, "come up-stairs and look at your bed."

Mother smiled down into the shining eyes and left her work. Hand in hand they climbed the stairs. When they came to the door of mother's room Carl drew a quick little breath of excitement. What would mother say?

For a moment they stood in the doorway together. Surely the bed was beautifully made. Not a wrinkle in the wide, white spread, not a hump nor a hollow to be seen. Mother looked at the bed, then she looked down at Carl. But she did not speak. Only her eyes spoke. Carl could stand it no longer.

"Aren't you pleased at all, mother?" he asked wistfully.

Instantly mother was down on her knees beside him, holding him so close that he could hardly breathe.

Pleased, little son?" she said. "Pleased?" I was never so pleased before. Why do you ask me that?"

Carl's arms tightened around mother's neck.

"Because you never said, 'thank you.' " he said.

"Darling boy, I wanted with all my heart to say 'thank you,' but don't you see, you don't think it worth while to say that!"

Carl's eyes grew wide with wonder.

"Why, mother?" he asked.

"Because God does a great deal more for us than ever you can do for me or I for you, and you never want to thank him."

"Oh," said Carl slowly, "I didn't suppose he would care."

"But he does care. I know he does, even more than you and I do."

Carl was silent for a long time. Then he looked deep into mother's eyes.

"If God cares," he said, "shouldn't we thank him lots of times, instead of just waiting for bedtime each night?"

Mother's eyes were shining with a wonderful light now.

"I think we should, dear," she said. Suppose we stop right now and thank him for daddy and for each other."

And so they thanked God for dady and each other, and Carl knew that it was worth while.

NEWS FROM THE MOUNTAINS OF VIRGINIA.

I see that Bro. White keeps up his appeals to his Bro. Abe who gave him so much trouble in his former field. I hope Bro Abe will heed and profit by them, that Bro. White will find none of his class in his present field, and that his former Bro. Abe will be so converted by his appeals, that he will in no way give Bro. Williamson, as much trouble as he gave Bro. White.

I also see that Bro. Harward is opening up down at good old Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., telling us about the departure from his old field at Elm Avenue. So, I guess you people back home, as well as in other sections, think it is time to hear from The Mountain Work. But I find that some have visited the work here for only a few days, and some of them sometimes have written too hastily, and before they had learned the real condition. We must remember that these people are no longer entirely cut off from the world, and that few of them take The Christian Sun, and that they know all that is said through The Sun. I have been here most of the time since October 12th, and have visited what I could from Sandy Ridge to Elk Spur, and even above and below. I can not yet give a full report of the general conditions and needs, for I learn many things every day, so shall write slowly.

I preached my last sermon to the people at Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, the fourth Sunday night in October. I took for my text: "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord,"—1 Cor. 1: 21. After the sermon we had a covenant to pray for each other and the advancement of God's Kingdom every where. Two came forward and joined the church, after which Bro. Robinson pastor of the Baptist Church made a few very appropriate remarks. Then Bro. Felton one of the deacons, and a leading member of the church, requested that we sing, "God be with you till we meet again." During the singing of this good old song, every body came forward to say good by. Among these were Baptist, Methodist, Friends, and many of other denominations, both saints and sinners. This brought forth many tears, mingled with joy, and sadness from pastor, and people. So we parted in body but not altogether in spirit.

Not wishing to make this letter too long will stop for this time, but will follow with more soon. Praying God's richest blessings on His servants every where, and asking your prayers for the work here, I remain,

Your brother in Christ
Elisha Bradshaw.

"MEN AND MILLIONS SUNDAY" AT RICHMOND.

The Sunday School of the First Christian Church in Richmond observed "Men and Millions Sunday" with a special program last Sunday. John T. Kernodle presided, and D. W. Darden, the Assistant Superintendent led the Responsive Reading, furnished by the Board of Religious Education. Emily Mae Gardner sang a solo, and appropriate hymns were used in connection with the Reading. The attendance was splendid and the interest good. Seven new members joined the Sunday School on this day.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Richmond Church is growing, until now the membership is about thirty. The Woman's Missionary Society was organized January 16th, with Mrs. H. E. Rountree as president, and Mrs. W. F. Holmes, Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

FEBRUARY 4, 1923.

SUBJECT: The Grace of Gratitude.—Luke 17.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise: give thanks unto him, and bless his name. —Psalm 100:4.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 103:13-22.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: 1 Chron. 29:10-16; Ps. 116:12-14; Matt. 19:21-35; Phil. 4:6-7.

"Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

The lesson chapter teaches many vital lessons with the one of the lesson theme, the grace of gratitude. In but a few verses, he teaches His disciples to avoid occasions of offence, impresses the lesson of forgiveness to be given generously and readily to all who repent, regardless of the number of transgressions; tells of the very great power of faith in the life of the Christian, and illustrates the relation of the disciple to God, by telling of the servant and his master. "We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do." Never can we do enough to repay God for His love and goodness to us. Should our obedience not be willing and cheerful? Can "duty" be discharged at all in any other fashion? God loves "cheerful workers" as well as "cheerful givers."

The nine verses printed for the lesson text bring the story of the ten men who were suffering with the loathsome disease of leprosy. And the nine went their way, but the one returned to thank the Healer! And he received the greater blessing. Gratitude is indeed a "grace," and one often disregarded as much by Christians today as by the nine of old. We see in the 15th verse that he expressed his thanks with a loud voice. He was not ashamed to let everyone know how much he owed to the Christ. Then when he met Jesus he fell down at his feet and gave Him thanks. Christians should delight to render this two fold thanks, personal worship of the Father and Jesus Christ, and public expression of gratitude for blessings beyond number. Thanks in words should come in response to any gift, material or spiritual. Thanks in deeds go even farther in expressing the gratitude that is in the heart.

"Now thank we all our God
With heart and hands and voices,
Who wonderous things hath done,
In whom His world rejoices;
Who, from our mother's arms,
Hath blessed us on our way
With countless gifts of love,
And still is ours today.

"O may this bounteous God
Through all our life be near us,
With ever joyful hearts
And blessed peace to cheer us;
And keep us in His grace,
And guide us when perplexed,
And free us from all ills
In this world and the next."—Martin Rinkart (1586-1649).

Verses 20 through 37 give the words of Jesus regarding the kingdom of God, and the coming of the Son of Man. "Lo. . . .the kingdom of God is within you." The kingdom of God is first of all a kingdom of the spirit. "Whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it," was the warning given to the disciples when Christ spoke of his second coming, and urged them to be ready for that great day. "Watch therefore. . . . . .be ye also ready" was his insistent counsel, for "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing," that is, the wise, faithful servant, who is loyal ever and trustworthy at all times.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

FEBRUARY 4, 1923.
(Christian Endeavor Day-Decision Day.)

"What is the Chief Value of a Christian Endeavor Society."—1 Timothy 6:11-16.

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

The Christian Endeavor Society is first of all Christian, and stands for Christian principles and virtues. Paul's advice to the young man Timothy to follow the path of "righteousness, faith, love, patience, meekness" is the counsel given to youth by the Christian Endeavor Society everywhere.—Verse 11.

The Christian Endeavorer, "Trusting in Jesus Christ for strength" promises to strive to do certain things which will make him able to fight the good fight, and come out victorious. Prayer, Bible reading, church attendance, confession of Christ, are his avenues of strength.—Verse 12.

The Christian Endeavor pledge has helped many young Christians to grow in the Christian life. The pledge is an expression of what Christian Endeavor stands for, a covenant between the member and God; a promise to be kept, with God's help. One of the chief values of the Society is found in its pledge.

The power of God is invincible. A Society is valuable when it tries to do His work. In His name only, can progress be made, and real good done. His power has made Christian Endeavor work develop and grow and accomplish much good

The fundamental and essential principles of Christian Endeavor, according to "Father Endeavor" Clarke, its founder, are four: "Confession of Christ, service for Christ, fellowship with Christ's people, and loyalty to Christ's Church." All four are promoted, and furnish excellent reasons for the value of a Christian Endeavor Society in any church or community.

Christian Endeavor is world-wide in its fellowship. It is valuable in bringing to young people of all nations ideals of world-wide peace and brotherhood.

Christian Endeavor is found in all-denominations, making possible a delightful interdenominational fellowship, a "fellowship which, as the experience of two score years has proved is inimical to no creed, no ritual, and no church government but promotes loyalty on the part of every young person to his own."

Christian Endeavor believes "with the mouth confession is made unto salvation," and that with sincere testimony Christians grow in grace and spiritual power. Those who confess Christ before men will not only be confessed by him before the Heavenly Father, but they will continually grow in ability and power to do His will, if "their lives express the glory they profess."

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

This is the closing meeting of "Christian Endeavor Week" which comes every year at the time of the birthday of Christian Endeavor, February 2nd. Are you celebrating in a fitting way the forty-second birthday of Christian Endeavor? Write for plans and material to The Dixie Endeavorer, 5 Ferger Building, Chattanooga Tenn.

Invite every member of the Sunday School to attend this meeting, and every young person in your community. Make your program show that Christian Endeavor is so valuable that no young Christian can afford to neglect the opportunity for training which it offers.

Ask for members to speak briefly on the four essentials principles of Christian Endeavor:—Confession of Christ, service for Christ, fellowship with Christ's people and loyalty to Christ's church.

Ask others to answer the following questions, (questions given out previous to the meeting): What has Christian Endeavor done for me? (this one may be given to several); Has Christian Endeavor helped you to live better? How may we get the most good out of the Christian Endeavor Society? How can I do more for the Society? How does Christian Endeavor help the church? How can the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor best work together? How can Christian Endeavor best win the young people of the community?

Appropriate Hymns: "Something for Jesus"; "My Lord and I"; "Have Thine Own Way, Lord;" "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart;" "Jesus I Come;" "Since I Found My Saviour"; "I've Found a Friend." Ask your pastor or some other church leader to close the meeting with a five minute talk on the motto of Christian Endeavor "For Christ and the Church."

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Executive Committee is the brains of a Christian Endeavor Society. When it throbs with life and vigor, it is reflected in the work of the society. A good Executive Committee can take the worst run-down Society imaginable and make it into a hustling, working, accomplishing society.

The object of this committee is to prevent waste of time and energy and to insure a workable, worthwhile program of activities which will use every member of the society, and to keep all records of the society up-to-date.

A good Executive Committee will give as much attention to its meetings, hold them with the same degree of regularity, plan for them just as carefully, look after them just as faithfully and boost them as wholeheartedly as the Prayer Meeting Committee should the Sunday evening meetings of the Christian Education.

The Executive Committee is composed of the President, Vice-President, Recording Secretary, Treasurer, Corresponding Secretary, Committee

Chairmen, Department Heads and the Pastor and should meet monthly, at the same place each time, if possible.

As a rule an Executive Committee should not last longer than sixty minutes and if the President has his program properly prepared, allows only one person to talk at a time, and only one subject to be discussed at a time, each subject to be handled in some way before another is taken up, a great deal of business can be handled in this time. There are seven important steps, vital to every Executive Committee, which should be carefully observed to insure a successful meeting as folows:

1. Starting on Time, with Prayer,
2. Minutes of Preceding Meeting.
3. Written Reports from each member.
4. Unfinished Business.
5. New Business.
6. Plans for Coming Month.
7. Closing on Time, with Prayer.

Real business methods in a society largely insures its success, when these methods are backed by much consecrated prayer. A society functions in accordance with its Executive Committee, and it is in the hands of this committee to make the society an unlimited success.

"THE CALL TO THE CHURCH TO DEVELOP CHRISTIAN INTERNATIONAL LIFE."

By Rt. Rev. Chas. H. Brent.

If we take a common interpretation of the church today, that it is a little company of like-minded people formed chiefly for their own spiritual prosperity, with no serious obligation for or genuine interest in the nation's welfare, much less the world's, we negative the Christian motive and hinder Christian progress. There never was, there never can be, a narrower work for the Christian Church than the world. Whatever sails on a lesser sea is not the ark of salvation, nor does it even belong to the Christian fleet.

This is our first and most deep-seated duty—to recognize, as the Church of Christ, that our business is with "all nations," and that we must secure what has been termed "the return of Christendom," that is to say, a society dominated by the Christian motive. The acceptance of such a commission, unreservedly and honestly, as their only justification for existence, would do more to unify and vitalize the churches than any other one activity. The difficulty of the task is proportionate to its importance, but it represents a goal which, let obstacles be what they may, must never be abandoned. Unless the Christian begins with and adheres to it, all else will be futile.

Assuming our acceptance of God's great purpose, we face the puzzle of cooperating with Him in working it out. It is a puzzle. But like all divinely constructed puzzles there is a key to it. That key is fellowship—fellowship with God and in God with one another. Fellowship is not merely a unifying force but also unity itself. It is the only end which is its own means. Under its influence all interests can be reconciled with mutual goodwill born of mutual understanding and mutual forbearance. It is the foremost business of the churches to promote goodwill among their own members and with one another. Just now we are considering the larger groupings of the human family. The same key, however, applies corporately as well as personally. The fellowship between nations must be controlled by love, joy, peace, good temper, kindness, generosity, fidelity, gentleness, self-control. It is the responsibility of the Christian Church to bring about this end. Conferences of representatives of the nations, in view of the impossibility of conferences of the nations, themselves, are the greatest instrument at our disposal for the promotion of goodwill. Herein consists the chief and sufficient cure for war.

Let us remember what war is. It is the fruit of sectional goodwill without regard to the total commonwealth, a preversion of the Christian motive and method. By its organized confusion it degrades the saving principle of fellowship into a means of injury and destruction. The world does not need any further exhibition of war's museum of horrors to entice men away from its pseudo-glory. We all hate it. But we must not forget the commanding position it has held from the beginning of human society till now—it is the final arbiter in international disputes. It is just as irrational as trial by fire. But throwing stones at it does no good. Declaring it outlawed is futile, for the outlaw is a particularly dangerous enemy. If we dethrone it, we must have a superior monarch to occupy its place.

Again we are confronted by a puzzle. Our theories are good but human nature is not good, hence practical application is the perplexity of the moment. So far as the churches are concerned there remain still some elementary measures to be taken. Now is the time to establish a league of peace among the whole assortment of Christian denominations which clutter up the human landscape. During the late war Christian fought against Christian, and worse still, members of the same Christian body fought against one another.

I recognize that it would be inadequate for us to agree that we would not fight. But why could we not set ourselves as Christians to discover the substitute for war, and then pledge ourselves to demand of our respective governments use of the substitute to the exclusion of war? Veterans of many countries, tens of millions strong, are already banded together in La Federation Interalliee des Anciens Combattants—popuarly known at the Fidac—as the sworn enemies of war and with a clearly defined policy how to replace it with a rational arbiter between nation and nation. Even the Buddhists in the Orient, it is reported, have massed their strength similarly. We, too, are making some progress in the same direction by existing organizations of the churches, but our latent and unexploited forces are greater than those which have been called into activity. What is specially needed at this hour is constructive and "preventive statesmanship" in the churches. There has been a lot of loose talk of late among churchmen, and equally loose criticism of the churches by non-churchmen, on the subject of war. But I am speaking for unnumbered multitudes when I affirm that there are no more deadly foes of war on earth than the great mass of churchmen.

What is the duty of organized Christianity in America in relation to shaping the international mind and policy of our nation? We accept the conclusions of our distinguished fellow citizen and statesman, Elihu Root, that the demand of the people of a democracy for control of foreign affairs is "a step in the direct line of development of democratic government, which, according to the nature of democracies, will not be retraced.—The usefulness of this departure is subject to one inevitable condition. That is, that the democracy which is undertaking to direct the business of diplomacy shall learn the business." No one will dispute the function of representative government to interpret and apply the mind of the people, but in order that it may do this the voice of the people must be heard. Organizations of commerce, of agriculture, of literature, of health must be unfailing in registering the popular mind on these matters in Washington. Organized Christianity must be alert equally in pressing on the attention of the Government the mind of its constituency in all matters that pertain to the moral responsibility of the nation and the sanctity of human life. Of course our representatives in Washington are our leaders. We look to them as experts for distinctness of policy. Where this is lacking we have a duty, rather than a right, to use our prerogative of offering definite plans for their consideration. A democratic government that merely awaits the mandate of the people without instituting a progressive course of education among its citizenry, is abdicating leadership. With the desire not to embarrass but to help the Government, representatives of American Christianity recently approched the Secretary of State with well-weighed proposals which were received with courteous attention. We have no reason to abate our insistence of these proposals in the light of subsequent events.

It is the duty of the church to aid the government in giving practical expression to the accepted fact of the community of nations. Should the churches agree on a way of reaching this end, the formulation and presentation of their thought is normal feature of democracy, liable to no resentment, capable of great usefulness. I am voicing the thought of multitude of American Christians when I express the opinion that our government should without further delay give the country a clear idea of its mind on the community of nations.

Permit me again to quote words of Mr. Root, words with which, this time, I cannot agree:

"This great fact of the community of nations is not involved at all in any question about the 'League of Nations' or any other association of nations founded upon contract. The 'League of Nations' is merely a contract between the signers of the instrument by which they agree to super-add to the existing usages, customs, laws, rights and obligations of the existing community of nations, certain other rights and obligations which shall bind the signers as matter of contract. Whether a country enters into that contract or not, its membership of the community of nations continues with all the rights and obligations incident to that membership."

Mr. Root's conclusion is illogical and contrary to human experience. Had the founders of our Republic acted on this theory, there could never have been a United States of America. For what is our country but an association of nations found upon contract?" Ideals demand embodiment. The alternative is their death. President Wilson presented an embodiment which was rejected by our nation. But it will rebound to his undying credit that he had courage to experiment. In rejecting the embodiment, the nation did not reject the ideal. As I view it we are in honor bound either to ally ourselves to the League of Nations in some organic way in which we shall accept responsibility as well as give advice, or else produce a superior substitute. The President's latest message to Congress leads us to suppose that a substitute is about to be born, but it should not be delayed in its birth. The crisis of the moment, in a period of emergencies, calls for instant aid which nobody but America can give. Whatever happens, the church may not relax its vigilance, or relinquish its duty. The church is guardian for all time of the family character of mankind.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND COMMON SENSE.

Many people think of Stewardship as a vague ideal, in which men of sense are not much interested. Others think of it as an exacting and mechanical scheme of church finance. It is neither. It is a wise plan for discharging our obligations to God.

1. It is built on common sense. The Good Father who made us, who gives us our loved ones, provides our food, clothing, homes and comforts, and blesses us with all spiritual joys, asks us to acknewledge his gifts, our obligation, and the trust he reposes in us, by returning to him an adequate proportion of our income for the extension of His Kingdom. Since he provides all, and promises never to let us want, this request is reasonable and right.

2. God likes this plan. That is reason enough why we should like it. For centuries the men he most approved practiced it. Beginning with the "first fruits" of field and flock, men soon came to offer the tenth of their increase. Later, it was incorporated into the Law of God, and faithful kings and prophets enforced its observance. Jesus approved it. Indeed, it is the only proportion sanctioned by the Bible and the consciences of holy men.

3. The great Christian leaders of today approve it. Most ministers, and practically all missionaries, practice it. Every bishop of our church commends it. Such conspicuous lay leaders as John R. Mott, S. Earl Taylor, Sherwood Eddy and J. Campbell White pronounce it the only method for speedily winning the world of God; while our own General Conference has adopted it as the official plan of our church.

4. It is practiced by the keenest business men of the modern world. William E. Gladstone, who for years administered the finances of the British Empire, all his life paid his tenth. John S. Kennedy, and John S. Huyler, New York millionaires, did the same. So did Jacob H. Schiff, one of the world's most successful bankers. The head of a chain of stores which flourish in every big city in America, the maker of a health beverage famous over the continent, and a publisher of the most widely read periodicals in the world, have just confessed this the plan of their own lives. If such men adopt this as the wisest known plan, it must at least have the merit of "common sense."

5. The world needs this plan. The church is not able to fulfill her mission, for lack of money. Vast regions in America are unsupplied with churches and Sunday Schools. Many churches are not suitably equipped to serve the community. Great city populations are unevangelized. Millions in foreign lands have no hospitals, no school, no Christian home, no Bible, no Saviour. Multitudes hunger for Christ. If all Christians paid their tenth, the needs of the world could speedily be supplied. Yet we average a quarter of our tenth.

6. We are well able to pay. The richest country on earth, the great creditor nation, while the world is bankrupt, our wealth grows apace. We enjoy all the comforts of life. Our luxury list is astounding—$350,000,000 for soft drinks, a billion for candies, two billions for tobacco. Yet last year we Methodists averaged $5 apiece for world evangelization.

Since God so greatly blessed us, while others suffer so great need, both gratitude and common sense should spur us to offer Him, in loving loyalty, the tenth of all he gives to us.

HOW STEWARDSHIP HELPS THE LOCAL CHURCH.

One of the points at which tithing stewardship displays its value is in helpfulness to the local church.

1. To begin with, it provides increased financial resources. Generally this increase is welcome. If we take the government estimate, that the average American income is at least $500 for every man, woman and child, the income of the members of a church of 500 would be $250,000. One-tenth of this would be 25,000. So that, if all members tithed, a budget of $25,000, for local expenses and benevolences could be supported. Yet the average church of 500 members has a budget of about $8,000, showing that only one-third of the tithe is paid.

A few weeks ago a church in Minneapolis tried the experiment of tithing for one week. With less than half the membership actually tithing, the offerings jumped from the usual $600 to an amount that promises a weekly offering of $1,500. Think what a program of community helpfulness a church could put on with its receipts increased 150 per cent! And think what a lift it could give to our church's program for world evangelization! No wonder most of these members are signing up as permanent tithers.

2. This plan gives to the church a sense of self-respect and independence. It is straightforward and business-like. It begs from nobody. It looks to every man to do his duty, as God has prospered him.

It is dignified. No appeal is made to outsiders to invest in suppers, fancy work or other merchandise. All contributions go directly to the church, for religious purposes No one gives to rid himself of church beggars, for there are none.—R. J. Wade.

MEN AND MILLION PLEDGES.

It is a joy to find in some of our churches Captains and Women Leaders who are bringing things to pass in their churches for this our greatest Missionary and Church Movement. There are workers who are getting real joy out of this service, and their churches are being benefitted and build up accordingly. If all the Captains could realize their responsibility in this Movement, as some do, what an awakening there would be in all our Zion! It is not a question only of collecting pledges; it is more than that. It is meeting moral obligations, and it is more than that. It is rising to the demands of Kingdom needs and service and doing a work for the church that will count for time and enternity. Let me say it till all of us hear and heed, that the work for Men and Milions is not a work for one enterprise but for all the enterprises of our dear Christian Church, and he who contributes aught of time, talent or means to Men and Millions contributes to all that the Christian Church is and is trying to do in the world. Loyalty to Men and Millions means nothing more nor less than loyalty to the Christian Church. And disloyalty to Men and Millions means disloyalty to the Christian Church, because Men and Millions are identical with the church in every enterprise that the church has founded and seeks to further and to foster.

Rev. J. F. Johnson is now assisting the Captains in the North Carolina Conference and is giving all his time to this work. Rev. R. A. Whitten is assisting in our Georgia and Alabama Conference Rev. E. M. Carter has recently covered all the churches of the Alabama Conference. Brother Roy Larrick of Winchester, Va., is Conference leader for Men and Millions in the Valley, Va., Conference and is ready to assist Captains in any of our churches there. It is hoped within the next three or four months to render personal assistance to every Captain in all the Southern Convention in getting their pledges paid up to date and their accounts in good shape for future activity. Executive Secretary Johnston looks for a good report from the Captains with the end of January, which closes the quarter, and is anxious for all Captains to send in promptly to him that due credit may be given for all collections of the quarter.

MARRIED

MARRIED

A very pretty marriage was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents in Waverly, Virginia, on December 27, 1922, at 5 o'clock P. M.

Standing under an improvised arch of evergreen and to the strains of sweet music, Miss Annie Laura Grizzard daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Grizzard, of Waverly, became the bride of Mr. Edward Carl White, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. White, also of Waverly; Rev. J. L. Foster, Pastor of the Christian Church, officiating.

Just before the ceremony Mrs. M. D. Grizzard, sister-in-law of the bride, sang "O Promise Me," and Mrs. J. L. Foster played Lohengrin's wedding march. Preceding the couple came little Miss Annie Bell Grizzard bearing the ring on a satin pillow.

The bride is a very attractive young woman, and the groom a promising young senior of Elon College, N. C., at which place, they will make their home for the remainder of the school session. Their hosts of friends wish them a prosperous and happy life.

JAS. L. FOSTER.

A POEM.

To Rev. J. W. Wellons, on his ninety-seventh birthday, January First, 1923.

Old Father Time keeps moving on,
Nineteen, twenty-two, has gone.
And with the birth of each New Year,
Your birthday also doth appear.

Thru' joys and ills, thru' smiles and tears,
Full ninety-seven useful years,
God has brought you on your way,
With countless blessings day by day.

And it must be, by all confessed,
By blessing you, we all are blessed.
By precepts, and example giving,
Makes the world better for your living.

God still has work for you to do,
And so vouchsafes these years to you.
So still improve, your short'ning span,
Keep doing all the good you can.

And when at last your course is run,
With life well spent, with work well done.
What a glorious meeting that will be,
When you, your Savior's face shall see.

Woman's Missionary Work in Alabama Conference.

Our aim this year is to have a live society in each church. Let each pastor take up the matter with his church and if there is any way I can help, please let me know. God is ready to help us if we only ask in faith. May God's richest blessings be upon every one.

WISDOM UTTERETH HER VOICE.

(Some of Charles Scanlon's answers to the liquor men, under the head of "Fact and Fiction.")

Fiction—Prohibition was hastily enacted.

Fact—No question ever decided in America was agitated over a longer period or better understood.

Fiction—Prohibition was the work of a minority.

Fact—Before national prohibition became effective thirty-four States had gone "dry," three-fifths of all the people were living under prohibitory laws, and four-fifths of the United States, territorily, was "dry." Moreover, Congress submitted the amendment by a two-thirds vote, and only two States, with less than one-thirty-fifth of the population, failed to ratify it. Fiction—Prohibition was decreed while the American soldiers were away. Fact—The Congress which submitted the amendment for ratification, was elected five months before the war. Kentucky, Ohio, Michigan, and other States enormously increase their vote in favor of prohibition after the soldiers had returned from the army.

Fiction—More liquor is consumed than before prohibition.

Fact—Before prohibition 600 distilleries produced annually one hundred and sixty-eight million gallons of spirits, and 1,300 breweries manufactured 1,885,000,000 gallons of beer. Today a mere fraction of this enormous flood of intoxicating liquor is being produced, while importations equal less than one-half of one per cent. of former years.

Fiction—Prohibition interferes with personal liberty.

Fact—So do the Ten Commandments.

Fiction—Prohibition makes hypocrites.

Fact—Treason and anarchy preached by the liquor advocates will not make men more patriotic, candid, and honest.

Fiction—Prohibition can not be enforced.

Fact—It is being enforced, or the hue and cry would not be so great.

A reader of the New York Times, which caters to the nullification element, was asked the other day by a reader the following questions, which it has not undertaken so far to answer:

"Do you give preference to drinking men when employing them on your staff or in your workshop? Do you believe any percentage of alcohol tends to promote efficiency? Would you be in favor of the engineer on your train takes a generous drink before starting, and how about the train dispatch? When should he take his drink? When should the doctor do his drinking?"

Henry Ford knows the answer, if The Times doesn't.

THE ROAD OF LIFE.

BY J. E. LAUGHLIN.

1 'Tis weary the road and hard the way
That leads us onward day by day
Into the eternal realms above
Into the greatness of His love.

2 Although the path is thorny
Although the road be steep
Yet God in all His glory
Will watch and guard His sheep.

3 But the road is not so weary
To one who known His love
For near our path is flying
God's symbolic bird—the Dove.

4 Remember fellow-traveller
In life's bright swirling sway
That an eternity of tortue
Is a dreadful price to pay.

5 All is not gold that glitters
Is the warning loud and long
We must shout from off our housetops
We must tell amongst the throng.

6 So onward to the battle
There's a great work to be done
E're the world is all for Jesus
E're the guerdon has been won.

Sister Reeves was a faithful member of Berea Christian Church, Norfolk County.

Funeral services were conducted from the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Eason, of Great Bridge, Va.

The flowers were beautiful; many were in attendance. Sister Reeves now rests beneath the soil, in the family plot, in Berea Cemetry; by her side, sleeping, too is the little babe borne upon earth but to bloom in heaven. Someday, dear one, we will understand. Services by the pastor.

B. F. BLACK.

MRS. JOHN A. MURCHISON.

Departed this life, January 3, at a hospital ni Greensboro, N. C., where she had been taken for treatment, Mrs. John A. Murchison, aged 51 years, 5 months and 17 days. Her husband and two children survive her. In early life she united with Pleasant Hill Christian Church and was an earnest worker for the good of the church and the Sunray School. Sister Murchison was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother and a good neighbor. She will be sorely missed in home, Church and community.

The funeral services were conducted from Pleasant Hill Church by the writer assisted by Rev. W. F. Ashburn. Her body was laid to rest in the church cemetery where it awaits the resurrection morn. May the healer of broken hearts comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

MRS. VIRGINIA MORRIS.

Mrs Virginia Morris, wife of the late Alexander Morris, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fred Fleming, at Hagerstown, Md., January 6, 1923, at the age of 70 years, 3 months and 3 days. Her body was brought to Winchester, Va., and funeral services were held in the First Christian Church on January 10, 1923, at 11.00 A. M., by the Revs. J. F. Morgan, and A. W. Andes. She was burried by the side of her husband in Mount Hebron Cemetery.

Mrs. Morris was a faithful member of the First Christian Church, Winchester, she having moved her membership here a few months ago from Timber Ridge Church. She was a lovely woman, a good mother, and a beautiful Christian. She will be missed, not only by her children, and relatives, but also by a host of friends who knew and loved her. May the Lord bless the sorrowing relatives and friends.

J. F. MORGAN.

MRS. MARGARET ANN VAUGHN.

Mrs. Margaret Ann Vaughn, relict of Thomas J. Vaughn, was born in Nansemond County, Va., March 10, 1839; married in 1855; died at residence of her son-in-law, H. F. Plummer, Portsmouth, Va., January 14, 1923, at the age of 83 years, 10 months, 4 days. She was the mother of 8 children, 4 deceased, and 4 living. The living are: Alice, Mrs. H. F. Plummer; Ellen, Mrs. J. P. Cowper; Thomas E.; Maggie, Mrs. W. H. Martin. Two sisters survive her: Mrs. Susie Rountree, of Suffolk, and Mrs. Joseph Jenkins, of Portsmouth. She is survived by 4 children, 4 grand-children, and 1 great grand-child.

She united with Bethlehem Christian Church when a girl, but transferred her membership to First Christian Church, Portsmouth, after she went to spend her last days with her duaghter, Mrs. Plummer.

The funeral services were held at the Plummer residence in Portsmouth, January 16th, conducted by Revs. W. W. Staley, L. E. Smith and W. L. Wells, and a duet by ladies from First Christian Church. The interment was in the cemetery at Bethlehem Church, near Suffolk. The floral tribute was beautiful and abundant.

FOUSHEE.

Parks' Cross Roads Church and community were shocked and saddened by the death of William Thomas Foushee, which occurred on the evening of January 4, after a week's suffering. He was almost 64 years old. He married Sarah Margaret Parks, and they had one child, Charles Grady. These, with three grand children and a host of relatives and friends, feel keenly an irreparable loss.

Brother Foushee never attended High School and College, but he was well educated. e devoted much time to reading and was one of the best informed men in his community. He was naturally a leader of men and had a keen insight in business. His ability was recognized by his friends and county. Once he represented his county in the Legislature, for a number of terms he was elected county commissioner, and for one term was a member of the school board for Randolph County. He served his county ably and faithfully and never betrayed his trust.

He loved his county, his community, his friends. His home was hospitable, and his friends. His home was hospitable hidden by his lovable disposition. He will continue to live in the hearts of those left behind.

For a long time he had been a member of Parks' Cross Roads Christian Church. And he loved it. Here, as elsewhere, he will be missed.

His end was peace. It was a Christian's death. He faintly, but audibly and consciously said: "I am resigned to the will of God. I wish everybody well."

For sometime there had been an agreement between him and the writer about his funeral. And this was carried out as faithfully as circumstances would permit. We buried him at Parks' Cross Roads, the place he loved so well. In the church, crowded to its utmost capacity, we placed his casket and spoke an honest but imperfect tribute to a noble soul.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Which Way Are We Going?—

The Telescope in surveying the present financial condition of church work puts the matter this way:

Other churches are having the same difficulty with finances that our own is meeting. We should take no consolation in this, for fellowship in financial shortage doesn't pay bills in any church. The Methodist Episcopal Church mission receipts for the fiscal year just closed are about two million dollars short last year. The industrial depression is given the discredit for the drop. However, the month of May, 1922, was more than a half million ahead of the same month in 1921. This is indicative of a change in the tide. The Methodist had a trial week of stewardship, just as our own church did which helped to enlarge the income for this one month. Leaders of the church are hoping that the swell will not be followed by a recession. As our own church is nearing the every-member canvass, it should come nearer to the Lord in completeness of consecration.

Can You Give a Good Reason as to Why you Do Not Go To Church?—

The New York Christian Advocate gives the following interesting account of Mr. Roger Babson's reason for going to church. What are your reasons for staying at home when you ought to be worshipping God instead of giving comfort to the devil by neglecting the worship of Almighty God. The Advocate says:

"Why I Go to Church" was the title of a "sermonette' by Roger W. Babson, which was conspicuously printed in the Milwaukee daily papers when the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World was held in that city recently. It was provided by the department of church advertising, of which Dr. Christian F. Reisner, of this city, is the head. This is Mr. Babson's way of preaching the need of the age to the careless men of today:

"The need of the hour is not more factories or materials, not more railroads or steamships, not more armies or more navies, but rather more education based on the teachings of Jesus. The prosperity of our country depends on the motives and purposes of the people. These motives and purposes are directed only in the right course through religion. In spite of their imperfections, this is why I believe in our churches, and why I am a great optimist on their future.

"We stand at the cross roads. We must choose between God and Mammon. Materialism is undermining our civilization as it has undermined other civilizations. Unless we heed the warning in time and get back to the real fundamentals, we must fall even as the civilizations of Egypt, Greece and Rome fell—and for the same reason.

"Statistics of every nation indicate that true religion is the power necessary for the development of its resources, and for its successful continuation. The challenge goes out to every man to support his church, to take an active part in the religious life of his community, to live according to the simple principles upon which this, the greatest country in the world, was founded three hundred years ago."

Is Germany Drink-Mad?—

All we need to do to bring the worst of results to some people is to give them a chance to do what they want. It looks like Germany has had enough to sober her for a hundred years to come, and yet she seems to be drink-mad, as she seems to plunge deeper into the ways of death and ruin. The American Issue tells of her plunging into the ways of death of late, notwithstanding her awful experience in the late world war. We are sorry for the German people, but if nothing but destruction will satisfy them, then we suppose we must satisfy them by leaving them to plan their own ruin. But one thing should be done and that is to see that every thing that one people can do to save another people from utter destruction should be done in her case, just as in any other. Already America has been doing what she could to get the prohibition of the liquor traffic into Germany, but Germany does not seem to see the awful maelstorm into which she is throwing herself, as she marches to ruin under the tune of her own madness. The American Issue puts the case pretty plainly when it says:

A copyright special to the New York Herald carrying a Berlin date line of July 1st says that following an enormous growth of the liquor traffic in Germany during the past year, that country is thinking seriously of Prohibition.

According to The Herald dispatch, 50 liquor "stubes" for the sale of strong drinks only, have been established in Berlin within the last three months and that there are double the number of students in distillery courses as in normal times.

Such a cable must be most annoying to the leaders of the "beer and wine movement" in the United States. Here is Berlin, long held up by them as the ideal for America in the settlement of the liquor problem; Berlin with its beer and wine gardens, where father takes the entire family and sips the amber fluid or drinks the "light wines" and where "nobody gets drunk"; Berlin where beer is as plentiful as water—and now this same Berlin is going on a whiskey spree! What becomes of the argument of these leaders for the beer and wine movement in America that to let down the barriers to brewers will mean the death of whiskey drinking in this country? That New York Herald Berlin dispach is most unfor the beer pleaders in America.

Beer-drunk Berlin now going on a whiskey spree! Wow!

The War Cloud Darkens.—

Has the human race gone mad and lost all its sense of the need of Peace? It looks much that way. Think of it—now when the world is practically bankrupt as the result of the late world war, we are actually in danger of another plunge into war. The thing seems unthinkable to sensible people, and yet the world seems to be rushing that way just now. The Western Christian Advocate says:

The war cloud over Europe darkens. It has been threatening ever since the peace treaty. Now again the movement of troops is announced and France heads directly into Germany. As we go to press the morning papers give headlines to the news. The people of this country stand in amazement. The two nations are already on the verge of bankruptcy. Indeed, they have been suspended over the chasm for many months. Nevertheless one bankrupt goes to war to make another bankrupt pay his debt. It seems that nations can go to war even when they are financially disrupted. We do not know what will be the outcome of this move on the part of France. What will Germany do? Will she arise and defend herself? Will she declare war? If she does, then what will happen?

There is also that darkness hanging over the Balkans and the Near East. That ugly sore spot that has been leaking into the arteries of international life the poison and infection of war, famine, plague, and death for over a hundred years. The Turk has a record of criminality that should drive him from the face of civilization. No mercy should be shown him. He is now in eruption again after having massacred millions of innocent people. He has come back to some kind of power that makes the nations sit up and take notice of him. And yet he is without a navy, a stable government, and economic reliability. He stands and seeks to dictate what he wants and demands it. The great powers listen and seek to treat amicably with him. We cannot understand why he should be shown the least mercy or consideration. He has been directly or indirectly the cause of at least three wars in the last hundred years. He has been used as a pawn in the international game and humanity has suffered and the nations have laid up indictments against a day of judgment which other generations of men will have to pay. The British empire is having to solve this problem, and any day may bring the word that war is on between those two forces. May God save the world from the impending debacle.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The last news we had from Rev. A. M. Kerr, D. D., was to the effect that he is doing well and there is promise of his early return to the editorial tripod of The Herald of Gospel Liberty. Let the brotherhood remember him in prayers daily.

We need to stand together as one man would stand against a foe. Let us heal our divisions, consolidate our ranks and present to the world a solid front for truth and righteousness. Whatever is best for the Redeemer's kingdom, that should be our watchword and our highest ideal.

The Judges of the best sermon prepared for Christmas on the theme of The Virgin Birth are at work, examining the papers presented, and as soon as they announce their decision, the same will be announced in these columns. Not one of the judges knows the name of a single writer of the papers sent to them, so we think their verdict will rest squarely on the merits of the papers.

What are you doing for the great enterprise which we call Men and Millions? It is the greatest single enterprise of the Christian Church so far. To its promotion Dr. Atkinson is giving his life and his best energies. Surely every loyal member of the church ought to lend him a helping hand and see that every advantage is given him in his effort to crown that enterprise with success.

If God has given us a mission to men in the interest of the Kingdom of His Dear Son, then we need to be awake and up early, giving ourselves to the cause of Christ. The task may be a great one, even an onerous one, involving great responsibility and great sacrifice, but it is nonethe less, the work to which we ought to give ourselves untiringly, faithfully and conscientiously, for it is not only a great honor and privilege to serve God, but it is a great thing in the matter of our own Christian development and nurture.

Bro. T. E. White is after "Brother Abe" and incidentally after some others. Read what he says and see if you can stand with him. No matter what he has to say to some of us, he knows how to give Brother Abe a real dressing down about every time he writes. Bro. White has done his work well, but is it quite the fair thing to have it all one sided? If Brother Abe will make answer to some of the things which have been alleged against him, he might do a bit of justice to himself, or it may be that he does not wish to have anything to say in his own behalf, especially may this be true, if what has been said is not over-colored. Brother White has told quite a strange tale, and it may be that Brother Abe says nothing because the bill against him is a true one. Well, we will wait and see what is the outcome.

The lamented J. B. Jeter, D. D., many years ago made an appeal to the Baptists (he was a Baptist). He said: "Let us have no squeamishness about proselyting." It is our vocation. To proselyte sinners to Christ, and believers to the whole system of divine truth, is our solemn mission. We should seek to convert the whole world to Baptist principles, not by any sophistry, or any motives to vanity or selfishness, but by a kind, honest and earnest exhibition of God's truth." That is the most clear cut case and confession we have seen as to the true position of the Baptist people. They, in so far as Dr. Jeter correctly represents them, surely not only believe in proselyting the sinner to Christ, but they also believe in proselyting the members of other churches to become Baptists. We knew Dr. Jeter and honored him as a worthy preacher of the gospel, but we regret that he ever committed himself to "proselyting" from other denominations. While he was a great and good man, we do believe that he committed himself to an unworthy cause, although no doubt he thought he was right, being so influenced by the thought of his time, but we do not think it was in keeping with the thought of the early church. Let us win men from the world with all zeal possible, but let us not try to win people from other denominations to our own, for that is as another has characterized it, a sort of "ecclesiastical sheep-stealing." Let us have nothing of it!

They say that there is a lively but friendly rivalry between Revs. H. H. Butler and I. W. Johnson, D. D., both of Suffolk, Va., as to who shall marry the largest number of couples. They are running "neck and neck," as we some times say. They keep so near each other in point of the number of couples they marry that most of the time it would require a careful count to see which is ahead. We believe for the last conference year, ending last Nov. 1, Bro. Butler was in the lead for that year, if we make no mistake. Now that they entered a new conference year, they are down to business again. We wish them both well and desire the happiness of all those who have the knot tied by Brother Butler or Brother Johnson.

And now what shall we do about rebuilding the Administration Building for Elon College. It seems to us that it is a great necessity thrust upon us here in mid-winter, but that is no reason why the college should have to do without a new building. Our people we believe will undertake the task which is thus thrust upon them. Dr. Harper seems quite hopeful and determined, and the spirit of hopefulness in the community seems fine. So far we have heard of not one who registers his or her vote against rebuilding—all seem to see the necessity for the work to be undertaken right away, so if possible to be ready by next September. Let us all pull together to this end, for if we do, the work will be done in good time.

And What is Facism?

No doubt it is the outgrowth of some of the world's madness, for that is a common thing today. Everybody wishes to do something extraordinary, and so now we are threatened with Facism. Read the following from an exchange and it may give you an idea of what Facism is:

Pray, what is facism? Well, this is what the world is asking. You must go to Italy if you want to know. As we learn of it here it is the name of a political party or movement that has come to dominate the national government of that nation. It is being led by one called Signor Benito Mussolini. He now seems to hold the affairs of state as a dictator. He is shifting the gear to nationalism and is seeking to accentuate Italian sovereignity as it has not been for ten generations. He has come out of the camp of the radicals. It is not known whether he is a middle-of-the-road conservative or a reactionary. The thinking men who study world conditions are asking, what if he is the latter? Sometimes it looks as though he were. At least he is extending a friendly hand toward the Roman Catholic Church. He has through the secretary of education ordered the crucifix placed back in every schoolroom. He has appointed to office men representing the clerical party. He is a child of the church in education and training. If he does not favor it to the limit of reason and even beyond we shall be surprised. What if he does? Then there will be hard times for Italian Protestants. If Mussolini is a reactionary and seeks to undo the work that has been done in the name of democracy and liberty by such men as Garibaldi, Cavour, Mazzini, and other eminent patriots, then there will surely come days of persecution and the leader will find himself and his program being opposed even unto his downfall. For the forces of liberty are too strong and determined to surrender without a struggle all they have gained through the years. Let us hope and pray that he will stand for religious liberty and free speech and the fredom of the press; for if he fails to see the necessity of this the reaction against him will be so great that it will bring on such opposition that the nation will be torn by threatened rebellion and other ills that will startle the interest of the world. Protestant Christians are getting together and their movements may result in the establishment of a new Italian church.

Discriminate Closely and Do Right.

The Presbyterian believes in using present day language for present day purposes, and that is right. Who would thing of using the language of three hundred years ago even to serve present day purposes? We doubt that any sane man will do such a thing. The plea is, as we see it, usually meant to cover some tracks which are going in another direction. The plea for the use of present day language to present day ideas in religion is somewhat uncertain. Hence we say, when a man makes that plea you may watch him closely, as he is most likely getting ready to present some idea which is not in keeping with old and long established teaching. The Presbyterian puts it this way:

Many voices are telling us today that Christianity must be adjusted to modern thought. In as far as it is merely meant that Christianity should be expressed in modern terms, this merits attention. If this were all that is meant, however, there would be comparatively little occasion for the exhortation. No one, as far as we know, maintains that we ought to address our age in obsolete terms. Every one admits that we should state our Christian beliefs in terms of present-day language. In fact, it is difficult, if not impossible to do anything else. Every man's language is largely the language of the age in which he lives; and it is only by a conscious effort that it is possible for him to use the language of a former age. It will be found, we think, that when any one is charged with objecting to stating Christianity in terms of modern thought, that what he is really objecting to is not so much the statement of Christianity in terms of modern thought, as it is the statement of modern thought in terms of Christianity. Christians are fully warranted in objecting to this, in as much as it enables not a few to express non-Christian ideas in Christian terms. As a result, many readers of books and many hearers of sermons do not realize the real nature of the thoughts expressed. We do well in seeking to avoid offending our readers or hearers, but at all costs we should be truthful; and we are scarely truthful unless men in general are expected to grasp the true nature of the thoughts we express. A man may be truthful, however unorthodox he may be; but he is not truthful if he expresses unorthodox thoughts in orthodox language.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Henderson, N. C.

A VISIT TO ELON COLLEGE.

Through a message from Rev. C. B. Riddle of Burlington, N. C., published in THE SUN of Jan. 18th, our readers were informed of the complete destruction of the Administration Building of Elon College on the morning of that day. This news plunged our people into deep grief because this calamity to our college. On Monday following we received the notice of a call for the Board of Trustees to meet at Elon on Jan. 24th. In answer to this call we journeyed to Elon, leaving Henderson, N. C., between midnight and day of that date. A heavy rain was falling and the ground was covered with sleet, making it difficult to be sure-footed. Not many calls would have led us our in the darkness, rain and sleet on that occasion, but Elon's calamity must have attention, and so we pushed on, going by the Seaboard to Raleigh and thence by the Southern to Elon. We reached the scene of disaster at ten o'clock and went immediately to the temporary offiice of President Harper in the Men's Dormitory, where was held the largest meting of the Board of Trustees which it has ever been our privilege to attend, and we have attended most of the meetings of this board since the beginning of the institution, now more than thirty years ago.

As a proof of the place Elon holds in the hearts of our people, the expressions of sympathy have been general and the large attendance of the Trustees on this occasion is evidence that Elon's calamity has mightily strained its friends. In going from the railroad station to the president's office, we passed by the wreck of the Administration Building—the scene touched us all deeply. The destruction of the Building was complete. Of course, there was a pile of bricks —not much else, for every thing that would burn was in ashes. We have rarely seen a building more completely destroyed by fire.

The meeting of the Board was called to order by President Harper. After prayer by Dr. W. S. Long, who was Elon's first president, the Trustees gave themselves at once to the business which had called them together. We first gave oursevles to what the situation calls for, and after some discussion, it was decided that the mere replacing of the building which had been destroyed would not answer the present needs at all. It was therefore decided that we must now undertake to provide a building plan for the institution for the next hundred years. To do this the Board decided to plan for the erection of at least four new buildings, which with the college church which had already been planned, will make really five new buildings, viz.: The Administration Building, a Science Hall, Library Building and an Art Building. Of course to do all this will require a great effort, but the Trustees were in the right mood for undertaking great things for the college. The first effort will be to build again the Administration Building, and then as fast as funds are available the other buildings will follow. The Trustees decided that we must not only undertake this building program, but at the same time we must greatly increase the endowment fund of the institution, for Elon's usefulness had already out grown the capacity of its present plant. It was therefore determined to undertake at once to raise $600,000 for the present and early future needs of the college—$300,000 of this amount should be used in the erection and equipment of new buildings, and $300,000 should be for enlarging the endownment. It is a great undertaking, but the Trustees seem confident that it can be done.

One thing which has greatly encouraged such an undertaking was the spontaneous inflow of offered help. The citizens of Burlington and Alamance county will undertake to raise one hundred thousand dollars of this sum. Then two of the Duke Brothers of New York City, hearing of the calamity, telegraphed an offer of $5,000 each to the Elon rebuilding fund. Elon College Faculty and community undertakes to raise $20,000. The Chamber of Commerce of Greensboro has tendered their assistance. While we were in session Dr. W. W. Staley offered another thousand and Mrs Horace Phillips of South Carolina (a daughter of the late W. H. Jones, who for many years Cashier of the Farmers' Band of Nansemond) offered $1,000 it was also understood that the Board of Trustees of Elon College make a liberal contribution to this fund, besides quite a number of others offered from various sources, but as we are writing from memory we cannot recall them all. It is for present purposes quite sufficient to say that there is now arising a tidal wave of liberality in Elon's behalf, so that it may be that the calamity of the burning of the Administration Building will at length appear as a blessing in disguise, for the carrying out of this larger building and endowment program, which the destruction of the Administration Building made a necessity, the college will be greatly enlarged and its capacity for usefulness will, if we judge correctly, be more than doubled. So in some real sense we may say that Elon's loss will become the gain of the Christian Church, however, paradoxical this may seem. Whoever may be living even ten years from today will see this prediction fulfilled, we believe.

One thing was especially encouraging, viz.: Every one about the college seems so full of hope and so determined to do his or her part to make it all mean a bigger and greater Elon. We did not hear one discouraging thought expressed. Out of the ashes of the building and the depression naturally arising from such a loss, we heard not one desparing thought expressed—every one seemed to be straining his vision to see what he could discover in the way of the best things for Elon College and her future usefulness. President Harper himself, upon whose shoulders will fall the heaviest burden of all, as the president of the college, seemed to have his energies invigorated by the prospect before him —the prospect of a long spell of real hard work.

We see that we have omitted one of the most signifIcant gifts or promises of gifts to the college. These were overlooked when we were naming the gifts that had already come in, as recorded above. It was from Dean Brown of Yale University, a man who had never seen Elon and only knows of it by the students which have gone from Elon to Yale. He sent his check for $50 and said if he were a millionaire he would do something large for us in our need, but the check for $50 must be regarded as a fine expression of sympathy, coming as it does from a man who appreciates education and loves to encourage it even among a people with whom he has but little acquaintance. All in all, the dark day, but that much was thought a lack of vision in the moment of disaster to see far into the future, as later it will be seen not as a dark day in the history of Elon College, but as the dawning of a bigger, brighter day for that noble institution. God bless her and bring her into the fulness of her largest faithfulness in doing good.

ARE MINISTERS' SONS "WORTHLESS"?

What a question! It is common talk that Ministers have the worst children of any people, but common talk is often wrong, very wrong, for often the ministers' children are not only not the worst children in the community, but it often turns out that ministers' children are proven to have been among the best, judged by the fruits of their lives and services. Because now and then a minister is the father of a very rude and bad boy is no reason at all that all ministers' children are of that class. On the contrary many of the sons of ministers are among the best men in State or Church, and we think it is about time that all such talk were muzzled, not by law, but by the good common sense of the people.

Mr. R. H. Edmonds, the editor of The Manufacturer's Record of Baltimore, himself the son of a minister, has written for The Baltimore News a very interesting and instructive article in which he shows the facts in the case, and the facts are decidedly in favor of the ministers' sons. Mr. Edmonds is the son of a Baltimore minister, the grandson of a Methodist minister, and the great grand-grandson of an Episcopal minister. Here is Mr. Edmonds' reply to the charge that ministers sons do not make good. He writes to The Baltimore News as follows:

"I know it has often been charged that in comparison with the sons of other men the sons of ministers as a whole are not successful, but I think that a more egregious blunder has never become accepted by the public. As a matter of fact, in this country, in Canada and in Europe, ministers' sons have to a very large extent been among the outstanding men of the world. The truth of this statement is illustrated merely by calling the roll of a few of the thousands of great leaders whose fathers were ministers.

OUR PRESIDENTS.

Former President Woodrow Wilson was the son of a minister, as were Grover Cleveland and Chester A. Arthur. Mr. Chas. E. Hughes, probably one of the ablest lawyers who has ever held the position of Secretary of State, is the son of a minister. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior under President Wilson, who was so beloved and honored throughout this country that during his life-time it was often said that if he had not been born in Canada he would have been President of the United States, was the son of a minister who removed from Canada to California when young Lane was but four years of age. Dr. W. S. Baer, of Baltimore, known not only locally but throughout the world for his preeminent medical and surgical skill, is the son of a minister. Samuel F. B. Morse, who gave the telegraph to the world and has advanced the interests of humanity and all civilization to an extent that can hardly be appreciated, was the son of a minister. Bancroft, the historian; Ralph Waldo Emerson, James Russell Lowell and Oliver Wendell Holmes were all the sons of ministers, and no one has ever presumed to suggest that they were not among the world's leaders. And speaking of Morse and the telegraph, I am reminded of Cyrus W. Field, to whose ability and untiring energy the world is indebted for the first Atlantic cable. What Morse did for the land telegraph service, Cyrus Field did for world communication. Among other members of the Field family, sons of ministers, noted for pre-eminent attainment I recall David Dudley Field, Stephen J. Field, Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and Dr. Henry M. Field, all of whom were men of ability and great leaders whose work makes them stand out conspicuously in American history.

BEECHER FAMILY.

Henry Ward Beecher and all of the Beecher family were children of a minister. There have been a hundred or more descendants of Rev. Jonathan Edwards who have been among the foremost leaders in the life of this country. Ambassador David Jayne Hill and Henry Clay were the sons of ministers. Rev. Austin K. de Bois, D. D., LL.D., the brilliant pastor of the First Baptist Church of Boston, was the only child of the pastor of the Baptist Church in Wolfville, Nova Scotia; the Rev. Mr. Aitken, a Presbyterian minister in New Brunswick, Canada, was the father of Lord Beaverbrook, one of the great leaders of England. G. H. Shakespear, recently elected to the British Parliament, is the son of the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, one of the foremost Baptist ministers of England. Professor Reavely Glover, LL.D., professor of history at Cambridge, England, one of the outstanding preachers and writers of today, is the son of the late Rev. Dr. Richard Glover.

Sir William Robertson Nicol, editor of the British Weekly, regarded everywhere as one of the greatest of living editors, is the son of a Presbyterian minister. The father of Sir William Osler, whose connection with Johns Hopkins Hospital made his name familiar to every Baltimorean as well as throughout all the world, was a Canadian Episcopalian minister. Sir William had two or three brothers who were also eminent. Dr. Lewellys Barker, who succeeded Dr. Osler at Hopkins when the latter left for Oxford, is the son of an honored Baptist minister of Ontario, Canada.

HOLMES A SON AND GRANDSON.

I might have mentioned that Oliver Wendell Holmes was not only the son of a minister, but the grandson of one, Edward Everett, statesman and author, had a minister as his father, and John Hancock, the first signer of the Declaration of Independence, was the son and grandson of clergymen. Louis A. Agassiz, the naturalist, known and honored throughout the world, was the son of a clergyman. General John B. Gordon, the great Confederate general, who after the close of the Civil War became widely known and honored in every part of this country for his marvelous eloquence, was the son of a minister. Edward H. Harriman, probably the greatest railroad genius which this country ever produced, a man who could take bankrupt railroads and pour unnumbered millions into their improvements, was the son of a preacher.

When Harriman bought the Southern Pacific Railroad it was claimed to be in good physical condition, but no sooner had he come into possession of it than he began to rebuild it at a cost of $100,000,000, and by that expenditure proved he knew how to develop railroads along the most scientific lines to enable them to handle business most profitably. He carried out the same broad work in the reconstruction of the Union Pacific and in other lines over which he secured control. Probably no other man in this or any other country ever had such a command of capital for railroad building or such a daring genius in the building of railroads in such a way as to make them profitable under the most adverse business conditions. When Harriman bought a Georgia railroad he told the legislature of that State that if they would not obstruct him by adverse legislation he would rebuild the line from Atlanta to Savannah in such a way as to show the people of Georgia what a real railroad could be.

Probably the most widely circulated weekly newspaper in America is the Saturday Evening Post, one of the world's outstanding publications. Its editor, George H. Lorimer, is the son of a preacher. Levi P. Morton, the noted financier, formerly Vice-President of the United States; Lyman J. Abbott, the great preacher and editor who recently passed to his final reward, were the sons of clergymen, as was Henry James, the novelist, while Richard Watson Gilder, editor and poet, was the son and grandson of ministers. The list of great leaders in science and art and literature and in business who were the sons of ministers could be almost indefinitely extended. I have only mentioned a few here and there as typical of men who have ranked among the greatest known to mankind who were the sons of ministers of the gospel.

Collier's Weekly recently said: "Of 12,000 prominent men in the United States, 1,000 are the sons of preachers; of 2,145 notable men of England, 1,270 are sons of preachers. Five of our Presidents were sons of preachers."

A few years ago Mr. John Brereton, of Lincoln, Cal., made a complete analysis of the names then recorded in "Who's Who in America," supposed to be a record of the men of outstanding preeminence in this country. Of the 26,885 names recorded at that time in "Who's Who," 3,413 were clergymen and 1,185 were the sons of clergymen. Of the 415 colleges in the United State, including all State universities and technical schools then in operation, 222 had clergymen for presidents and forty-six had ministers' sons as presidents, or a total of sixty-four per cent. Of the fifty-one names at that time in the American Hall of Fame, twelve of them, according to Mr. Brereton, or 23 1-2 per cent, were sons of clergymen.

In the Christian Intelligencer of New York of several years ago attention was called to an article in the New York Times which stated that on the basis of the researches of the Rev. Dr. Reisner of the list of men reported in "Who's Who in America," one name in every twelve was that of a minister's son, and there were at that time eighteen times as many sons of ministers as sons of other professional men. Of the ninety-nine foreign members of the French Academy of Science, one in every eight was a minister's son, and in the forty-eight foreign members of the English Academy of Science, one in every six came from a minister's year! Existence unbroken by the green hills of recurring that article as saying: "The sons of clerical families have actually surpassed during 200 years in their contributions to the roll of eminent scientists the contributions of any other class of families."

I have barely touched on the men eminent in every walk of life who were sons of ministers of the gospel. Their names are legion. They have ranked among the greatest scientists, the greatest poets, the greatest writers, the greatest lawyers, the greatest statesmen, the greatest inventors and developers, the greatest constructive geniuses in railroad and other work recorded in the history of the world. Away then, forever, with the thought that minister's sons are not a success. They have been and are in proportion to men in other professions or in other lines of business far and away the greatest leaders whose work has made possible the progress of the world in medicine and surgery, in science, in literature, in law and legislation and in business.

BRETHREN, CAN THIS BE TRUE IN YOUR CHURCH?

Is the Church of Christ a sympathetic church? If it is not, it needs to be awakened and brought to a sense of high duty toward the unfortunate and the unlovely. There are hundreds of men and women who have gone astray, but many of them are longing for just the sympathy which the church professes for the unfortunate. Even the prisoner just out of prison has a perfect right to expect sympathy and a helping hand when he is in prison, and even more so when he comes out of prison. If ever a man needs a helping hand to do best, to rise above his past record, when he gets out of prison, it is then. It is the one moment above all the rest when he may make a successful effort to raise himself in the scale of an honorable life, and of all times in his life, it is then that he needs sympathy and a helping hand. This fact is taught by Jesus in Matthew 25, when he refers to prisoners and the treatment good people should give them. Brother, if your church has done nothing for the prisoner, do talk to the members about the matter and show them how a high sense of Christian duty should impel every man and woman and child to lend a helping hand to the man who is in prison, or who has just come out of prison, that he may stir the best qualities of his mind and heart to try to come to his best and be a man, that he may be saved. Every such man needs to have this sort of treatment from those who have never been in prison as an incentive to try once more to be a man. And do not forget the one other fact that every Christian man and woman and child needs to give this sort of sympathy and help to the man who has been so unfortunate as to spend a term in prison, for it will do the man who gives the treatment perhaps as much good as it does the man who is, or has been, in prison. Beloved, Jesus wants His church to help the fallen and seek to win them back that He may have a chance to save them. We can do it—let us lay aside any notion of pride that would keep us from helping this needy class, and let us help them for Christ's sake, and if it does not help the poor fellows, you will at least have done your part for him, so that in the judgment he cannot lay the blame of his failure to try to live right in Christ on you. An exchange says:

No class of our own people probably is more generally neglected than is the prison class. Prisoners are too largely ignored while they are in prison and when their terms have been served there are many people who have a tendency to place the ex-convict outside the pale of genuine human sympathy. A letter written by one such ex-convict to The Continent has provoked much comment. We certainly trust that such an experience as this brother outlines is an exception in the church, but the letter has in it a message that the church needs to read and heed: "To the Continent: Today I read your editorial on 'Save the Convict from His Gang.' I am one of those 'ex-convicts.' Sounds queer that I should be reading a paper like the Continent, doesn't it? I am glad I did.

"But, brother, what's the use of preaching a doctrine of a helping hand for the convict when we all know that no church is willing to practice it? When I was in prison I got so thoroughly disgusted with bad men that I swore before God that I'd live the rest of my days 'in solitary' if good people would not permit me to associate with them rather than to have for companions the evil-minded. I'm not a member of a church, don't profess to be angelic, just got 'sick' and tired to my very soul of the sort of crowd you can find in a prison. Seven months ago I came home, and in that time I have done my dead level best to 'break' into some church and to line up with decent, godly people, and—I have failed. They don't want my sort. I've walked a chalk line of good conduct since I came back, send my children to Sunday School, and go to church as often as I can walk there. I hear them sing, 'Sinners, Jesus will receive, sound this word of grace to all,' and I hunger to find it true; but day by day I am reluctantly driven to the conclusion that the song should be revised by adding the words: 'To all except ex-convicts.' Of course when I go to church I'm nervous and sensitive and 'suspicious,' but how can the church folk expect anything else of me after two years in prison? And, besides, isn't the love of the Lord Jesus in their hearts supposed to be put there for that very purpose—to love me when I may be unloved and to show patience toward me when I try and stumble and try again."

SOME EXPERIENCES WITH FAITH WRECKERS.

By Prof. B. R. Pogue, in The Way of Faith.

It is not uncommon in construction circles to find builders and wreckers combining for mutual interest and advancement. The one razes that the other may build, but never vice versa. The greatest paradox of the age is the present system of religious training for Christian leadership, that is being supported by many of our leading denominations.

When I was a student in an eastern university, I stood one day talking with a seminary group, when the conversation led one young man to exclaim: "Why, no one believes the first five chapters of Genesis anymore! Anyone here believes them?" Mine was the only affirmative voice.

In class I learned many new things: Conversion has been supplanted by Christian nurture; Christ was limited by the scientific knowledge of His time; Isaiah did not prophesy a Messiah; Christ's miracle of calming the storm-tossed waves is pictorial language; and the ethics of Jesus would not permit Him to cast devils out of man into swine, proving the fallacy of the narrative.

Why did Jesus go to the Temple, and there remain till found by His parents? Our professor explained it as follows: "Some friends of mine were one day visiting the Bronx. In the midst of sightseeing, little six-year-old William wandered away. After a long search, he was found before the monkey cage, and when asked why he was there, the lad responded, 'Where did you expect to find me?" So Christ's 'wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?' portened nothing. He was as any other boy and knew nothing at that age of His divine mission on earth."

I called at a student's room one evening and found there four young men discussing the efficacy of prayer. I learned that the New Testament teacher that day had questioned the power to reach distances and effect salvation, healing etc. Prayer, he explained, is nothing but a reflex; it can affect but the one who prays, and it can effect nothing but that which may be altered in the seeker's life.

Many a young man I have heard question, "what shall we believe? What do we believe?" Yes, what do we believe! The beautiful teachery of the critics has done its work. The denominations are beginning to advertise. The Church of Christ, building and wreckers of faith.

Out in the field faithful laymen and true hearted pastors labor to build the faith of our fathers into the lives of young and old, while that faith is being wrecked in the minister of tomorrow. The Church needs Sin Wreckers, but not Faith Wreckers, and by God's grace no student shall go out from Taylor University denying the efficiency of prayer and the validity of the Divine communication.

We believe the world has its Sin and its Saviour; we believe the word of God; we pray and are heard: we believe in the infinite knowledge and wisdom of Christ; we believe in the pardon of Calvary; we believe all that has been most sacred to the sweeping cause of Christ in centuries past, and shall continue to believe in spite of dungeon, fire and sword. We will be Builders, but not Wreckers of Faith.

Patience and Promise.

The writer to the Hebrews said: "Ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." Two questions arise: Patience in what, and the promise of whom? The Bible contains more than one exceeding great and precious promise, with a view to our becoming Godlike; but there is one preeminent promise, called "the offering. Thirdly, he killed Abel. We shall not undertake to explain the relative gravity of these three sins; but we would call attention to the fact that the underlying evil which brought on all the trouble was Cain's refusal to believe God. It was not the better offering that brought God's approval upon Abel. It was the faith by which he made the better offering. God had taught him and his brother something of the mystery of iniquity and the profound, thought unfathomed doctrine of salvation through the blood. Abel simply believed it and acted upon it. Cain was brilliant and doubtless undertook to analyze, he simply discarded it and devised his own plan of worship, a worship not so much with reference to God as with reference to himself. He only cared to satisfy the impulse of worship. He must not have cared anything about satisfying the demands of God.

Unbelief is back of every sin and every refusal to obey God's order. It is the sin of the age. God has spoken. Every man in his best moments has realized that God has spoken. Only unbelief and rebellion have served to blur this recognition and cause men to drift in their thinking to where they will quibble and dispute and explain away the fact that God has spoken. It does not require much of the exercise of unbelief to mutilate our faculties for perceiving truth. Then unbelief which at first was simple and deliberate becomes a disease that foists itself upon us and impels us on whether or no to our spiritual ruin. The sweetest experience in all the world is a habit of perpetual assent to everything that God says. "Man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP.

Governments Are Trying to Make Peace Without Submission to the Ruler.

We are told by some of the advocates of a materialistic and social evolution that Christian government among the nations is as bad as any other kind of government; that the great war and many of the wars which preceded it were incited by Christian rulers and Christian nations against other Christian rulers and Christian nations; and that both sides assumed to be serving God and both sides invoked His blessing upon their purpose of bloodshed, either of offense or defense.

The flaw in the argument is at the biginning.

It is in the assumption that we have had Christian government of Christian nations. There is no such thing. No government of any nation upon earth submits itself absolutely to the Divine Ruler. Why then the absurd argument? It is because men have an utter misconception. A Christian may go into the rulership of a nation, he may be president or king, and in his personal life he may make his submission to the gospel of Jesus Christ, the saving gospel for the individual. But as a ruler he does not submit the government of his nation to Jesus Christ.

And so the argument falls to the ground.

And we have had un-Christian governments devoting their Christian people to un-Christian war.

It has been said by one of our National Reform speakers that war is the sin which governments compel their unwilling people to commit.

That is a correct proposition in my judgment; and it is just as unfair to charge against Christianity the sins of government which are perpetrated in violation of the Christianity, assumed or real, of their rulers, as it would be unjust to charge against Christianity the individual transgression of a man who had professed his belief in the Christian religion.

The sin is against, and not because of, the Christian religion and the rulership of Christ.

Just as the world weltered in blood because the un-Christian governments over Christian people went into sin, so a man whose family are all church members, can lead his family into sin by Sabbath desecration, by neglect of family prayer, by the encouragement of dangerous pleasure seeking. The sin of the man and to say that the head of a family was committing, and leading his family to enough to say that the head of a family was committing, and leading his family to commit, these sins because of his Christianity. And certainly no one ought to be so lacking in logic as to charge that government leads its people into the big international sins because of the Christianity of the government. The fact is that in both cases the sin is because of a lack of Christianity and not because of its possession.

If the man submit his family to the gospel and himself live its teachings and its principles in all his relations, that family is likely to be Christian in its life and its relations. And the same rule applies completely to government.

The world is now in just as perilous a state as when the nations were all in an armed camp. The more one studies the complications, the doubts and difficulties of governments, the more one is assured that they are continuing in the error which plunged the world into war. They made their onslaught in defiance of the Divine Ruler. And now they are attempting to make their agreements of peace without His counsel.

The opposition which condemned Christianity because of the great war is the kind of opposition which prevents Christianity now from entering into the measures for peace. Christianity was not a part of the governments before the war, and we had the cataclysm. And as Christianity is not a part of the negotiations between the various governments today, the peace plans are likely to be both fragile and brief.

Before the opposition condemns Christianity as the cause of strife, Christianity ought to be treated as a peace-maker by the governments of the earth.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A man said to me the other day, "Competition is the life of trade." I replied, but "Competition is often the death of the trade." Two competors cannot be elected to the same office; one of them goes down in defeat. "Cooperation is the life of trade;" trade is not for one man, nor one set of men; but for all men. In God's plan all things work together. The sunshine and rain, the chemical elements and the soil do not "compete," but "cooperate" in producing grasses, flowers, grain, and fruits. The world is not fed by competition, but by cooperation. The world is not to be served by competition. "We are laborers together with God." A divided church can never save a lost race. The hand cannot say to our foot, I have no need of thee. All the members of the body work together; and all the members of the body of Christ should work together. It is a waste and a sin for denominations to compete in the Lord's work.

The country and the city can never reach the best by competition; they will attain to the highest efficiency and prosperity by cooperation. The country is more important in business, in character and in religion than some wise people imagine. There would be no city without the country; but the country can exist without the city. Even city life passes out in five generations. The water supply, the fuel supply, the food supply and the purchasing supply come from the country. The city would starve or freeze without the country, when crops are poor, or prices are low, that is the time you see, "This store for rent," and collections are poor; but when crops are good and prices high, then business in the town flourishes. Since this is so, there should be the finest spirit of fairness, of justice, of sympathy, and cooperation between the city and the country. Nobody who understands the processes of production in the field will complain at a fair price for the common necessities of daily life. All live on the farm. The milk, the bread, the meat, the butter, the sugar, the fruits, the berries, all come from the farm. The man that follows the plow, the man in the woods with axe and saw, the man in the mine digging the coal, the hand with the milk pail, are all making an honest prayer to nature to feed and warm a hungry world. God is behind it all. Labor is man's honest prayer to God through nature for what the body needs. The country is entitled to good roads as much as the city is to good streets. She is entitled to good schools, good churches and good homes. Most of the money paid by cities for country products comes back to the city through country trade. Laws and trade should keep in the foreground the interest of the country as the roots of prosperity grow in the earth and not in the factory and store. The country produces; the city markets; the country supplies; the city consumes. There should be harmony between the producer and the consumer, and the middle man should serve both with the justice of a pledge. The spirit of Jesus should permeate and control all life and all business. The golden rule fits into all human relations, and all selfish methods are suicidal in the end. Labor and capital are simple agents of human science and cooperation is the only solution of differences that disturb the balance of trade. Whenever either becomes selfish and disregards public interest it is an enemy to the best interest of man kind. All streams pour their waters into the sea; and all interests pour their tides into society which turns all back again to those who toil.

ELON LETTER.

Seated in an improvised office in the East Dormitory, in full view of the still smouldering ruins of what had been for more than thirty years the mecca of the educational interests and sacrifices of the Brotherhood, with snow and sleet without, sixteen of Elon's twenty-four trustees made history for her on Wednesday January 24, 1923. There was every reason for discouragement save faith in God and the immeasurable possibilities of the human heart when spurred to action by a beloved cause.

And so there was no discouragement. Dr. W. S. Long, founder and first president, had been invited to be present. He led the opening prayer. From that moment till the Board adjourned at 6:00 P. M. with prayer and the benediction by Uncle Wellons, a spirit of enthusiastic optimism prompted every utterance and gave content to every motion.

The conviction was almost immediately expressed that the time had come in the providence of God for a great forward movement. It would never do to house under the same roof recitation rooms, library, office and scientific lecture room. It would require too massive a building to provide amply for these varied and special interests so vital and necessary for the modern college. It would require at least three buildings and this was the building program outlined, the Administration Building to be the first to be erected and work on it to commence immediately. The cost of this building was estimated to be $150,000. It was the U shape type architecturally with auditorium on the first floor occupying the U and seating 800 people on the main floor with 200 in the gallery. The auditorium part is to be only one story or a story and a half high.

With their eyes toward the future and thinking in terms of the centuries yet to be, these trustees with the spirit of Caleb and Joshua planned for the permanent development of the plant. An architect and landscape gardener is to be employed to make a lay out of the campus and to locate on it various buildings that will be necessary as the college grows and a generous people provide funds. This is to be done antecedent to the rebuilding and that means it is to be done at once. Brother John King of Suffolk several years ago presented the college a campus plan, but this did not locate future buildings and went up in smoke in the general conflagration.

Why did sensible men plan so hopeful amid ashes and ruins? Like the apostles on Pentecost, they had tarried in prayer and had seen a vision of duty and privilege. Their hearts were stoutened too by certain specific occurances.

The citizens of Burlington and Alamance County sent them their proposal to raise one hundred thousand dollars to aid in rebuilding provided the college would raise $200,000 additional. The Faculty of Elon College sent them the following communication with a subscription totalling $13,250.00.

"The Faculty of Elon College have always appreciated the splendid service you have rendered the Christian Church and the cause of Christian Education. We have dedicated our lives to these causes and we have sacrificed to promote them.

"Our hearts bleed with yours in the catastrophe that has overtaken our College and we herewith subscribe the amounts written after our names to aid you in rebuilding. It is a poor expression of the sentiment that prompts our action, but it is from the heart.

"Believe us to be ever your devoted supporters in every movement for the growth and development of the cause the church has committed to your hands."

Telegrams and letters were read from various friends pledging gifts of many thousands of dollars and the newspapers of the State had been so insistent from the first that the only thing to do was to rebuild on a large scale and go forward that the trustees smiled amid their sorrows and resolved to go forward. This decision was strengthened in their minds by a letter from Mr. W. F. Convith urging such action and a long distance call from Mr. J. M. Darden counselling the same. The advice of these laymen was highly appreciated.

I want to insert here three editorials from North Carolina papers, typical of the general sentiment

The Cry for Help.

(Burlington Daily News)

The people of Burlington and Alamance county propose to show that their sympathy for Elon College is real. We propose to raise $100,000 to be given to this institution, and as a stimulus to the college in raising $200,000 additional so that this institution may at once become one of the really big educational institutions of the State.

We believe the crowd of interested citizens who gathered in the Municipal theatre last night have started bigger than they realize. When "Bob" Holt threw down the gauntlet with his $5,000 donation as a starter, he created an electric wire of enthusiasm that enthused those who were present and sent the wave singing out through the county and set a goal that if realized, will mean more to our county than any one thing that has been started in a long time. Besides this, he heads the committee, and they will put this thing over. We predict that the $100,000 will be reached.

We know that the hearts of the friends of Elon College that were saddened by the sudden calamity will be stirred by the determination of our people and they will work with us in making this goal successful.

For about 30 years Elon College has been sending forth young men and young women into the world equipped for service. Today she stands wounded and bleeding and mutely appeals for help. Her cry will be answered. We believe that the news will go forth to the world that she will arise forth, out of her ashes, equipped for greater opportunities and work and with a plant that will stand as a monument to what love and confidence can do when the cry for help comes.

Should be Replaced Without Delay.

(Greensboro Daily News)

The destruction by fire of the Administration building at Elon College further cripples the already serious handicapped system of higher education in North Carolina. It is not merely a loss to the college and denomination that owns it—it is a loss to the whole State, in that it reduces the facilities available for educating the young people of North Carolina at a time when those facilities are already taxed beyond their normal capacity

By the same token, it is to the interest of the whole State to have this building replaced at the earliest moment possible. The Christians, numerically, are not especially strong in North Carolina, and it is probable that this loss of the building will be a serious blow to them; so it would be a wise, as well as a gracious act for any North Carolinian, whether he has any connection with that sect or not, to assist in the reconstruction of the building.

Especially should the cause appeal to citizens of Greenboro and the surrounding country. We know best what a power for good the school has been, to how many boys and girls it has opened the way to an education when without its help all avenues would have remained closed. Helping to rebuild Elon should be to us a privilege and a duty, and no time should be lost about it.

HELP ELON REBUILD.

(Raleigh News and Observer)

The disastrous fire at Elon College involves a loss of something like $150,000 to that institution. It is not rich but it has made one dollor do two dollars' worth of service since the day it opened its doors. Money invested in that institution brings good dividends.

The people of the Christian Church will rally as one man to the rebuilding, but the loss was one which is felt by all friends of education outside as well as within that denomination. People of other churches and of no church will be glad to help in this emergency. The Burlington people have set a good example for other communities in the way of generous aid. They have undertaken to raise $100,000 from Alamance county, Mr. Robert L. Holt having headed the subscription with $5,000. Let other communities and liberal citizens do likewise.

State Superintendent Brooks also issued the following statement to the press, respecting the situation here:

"Elon College has recently lost its main building by fire, which is a financial loss of over $100,000. The greatest loss, however, is not in the amount of property consumed by the fire, but in its handicap to continue the same service for the State that it has rendered for more than a generation.

"This institution in its hour of distress has a right to call on the public for assistance. It is one of our standard colleges supported by private donations, but it is as much a public institution as any supported by funds derived from State revenues, because its purpose is to serve the public, and every student it educates relieves the pressure on State funds just that amount. North Carolina will suffer just to the same degree that such institutions as Elon are made to suffer. It cannot ask the State government for help, but it has the right to call on he public for assistance in its hour of distress. During the number of years it has served the State it has given honest work and rendered fine services. The regard in which it is held by friends who know it well is best illustrated by the fine example set by the town of Burlington, which undertakes to raise $100,000 to help replace the building destroyed. Patriotic citizens throughout the State will be given an opportunity to come to the assistance of this fine institution in its hour of distress and it should not call upon them in vain."

The Board of Trustees therefore concluded and rightly that the hour of destiny had struck, when a great forward step must be taken. With calm resolution they therefore voted to raise The Elon Emergency Fund of $600,000, $300,000 to be used for building and equipment and $300,000 added to the permant funds to care for the new department of Theology as voted at last commencement.

The Board of Trustees is not willing to ask others to do what it is itself unwilling to do and so it voted to raise $50,000 among the Board members. Mr. P. J. Carlton, whose gracious gift of $25,000 rejoiced every heart, subscribed $10,000 more and Dr. Staley said he would put off placing a tomb stone to mark his devoted companion's final resting place and give a thousand and if need be more.

The committee to have charge of the $600,000 Emergency Fund consists of Col. E. E. Holland, Mr. P. J. Carlton, Dr. W. H. Boone, Hon. K. B. Johnson, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, Dr. L. E. Smith, Col. J. E. West, Mr. J. D. Gray, and Dr. W. W. Staley. The Building Committee is to consist of the writer, Mr. D. R. Fonville, Dr. R. M. Morrow, Mr. Charles D. Johnston, Col. R. L. Holt, and Col. F. L. Williamson.

Just as soon as possible the work will begin both in the field for funds and on the ground in the reconstruction. Meanwhile I call unon the loyal friends who love Elon to pray that the leaders charged with great responsibilities may have wisdom and that ere long out of ashes and tears a greater and nobler Elon may arise with blessing in her ministry to the cause of Christian Education.

W. A. HARPER.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

This is the last letter before the campaign begins. The date for the beginning of the campaign is Feb. 5. I have secured a splendid corps of field workers. The following men will solicit funds: Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Rev. O.D. Poythress, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. E. M. Carter, and undersigned. These men will call on the constituency of the church and ask for pledges and cash donations on the Bethlehem College Building Fund. It is hoped by the Trustees that during these twelve days of intense work one hundred thousand dollars in cash and subscriptions will be secured for the college. This amount will be required to finance the building program and take care of the other necessary expenses incident to the opening of the institution in Sept. 1923.

In order to offer moderate accomodations to students it is imperative that we erect two buildings—an Administration Building and a Dormitory Building for girls. In view of this need and with the hope of supplying the immediate demands upon the institution, the people of the Christian Church are asked to contribute the above named amount. Pledges will be received covering a period of five years, with as large a cash payment as possible. The pledges will be paid in five annual installments. A separate pledge, for each installment, bearing the date of payment, will be signed by the contributor.

While the simultaneous canvass will be conducted among the churches of Georgia and Alabama, the people of other conferences are urged to contribute to this fund. There is no division line. Bethlehem College is not to be a segregated institution, deriving its support solely from the churches in Georgia and Alabama. If it is to be a success it must have the sympathy, cooperation and financial support of the entire brotherhood. The institution is to be the property of the Christian Church, and it will be great or small, strong or weak to the extent of the moral and financial backing it receives from the church.

It is generally known that the Christian Church in the far South is weak. Two factors are responsible for this condition, viz: The church has not been established in this section as long as it has in some other sections. And the church has been so far removed from our educational centers that it has been impossible for it to reap the influences and benefits accruing from such sources. This is therefore a case where the strong should help the weark. We plead with the brotherhood to lend us a helping hand. Who will respond to this plea? Will you?

R. F. BROWN.

BROTHER ABE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PASTOR.

Dear Brother:

My last letter, in which I related to you something about my Christmas joys, seems to have either been lost in the mails, or was thrown into the waste basket, or its non-appearance may have been due to the fact that the editor had just been married. As the parties who are entrusted with the handling of my mail have always been careful and faithful, and so all my former letters have promptly appeared in THE SUN, I naturally suspect the last may have been the reason. If so, there is no blame to be attached to anyone.

As a matter of fact, I feel very much elated to know that I am pastor of the church in whose membership the editor found his bride. Added to this the further fact that he is so well known in all parts of our church, makes Windsor not the least of all our Christian Churches, for out of it the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN selected his help meet. And in doing so, his judgment is to be praised, for she will not only make for him a happy home, but will also be of invaluable service in his pastoral labors. As a token of her faithful services so well performed in so many departments of our church in Windsor, she was presented a beautiful silver basket by Prof. J. W. Roberts at the Sunday School hour last Sunday morning. The prayers of the church and the best wishes of our town follow them.

And now, Brother Abe, as you have so many boys and girls, some of whom may even now be secretly contemplating matrimony, I want to say a few things to you about it. You need to be very careful in either making or breaking lovematches. As old as you are, if your wife should die, you would very likely grow young and marry again. It is wonderful how the old may become young. The Fountain of Youth is not found in Florida, but it may be discovered in love and courtship. In a family like yours, where all are members of the church, there are at least three parties who should be greatly concerned in the subject of courtship and marriage. They are the parties themselves, the parents, and the pastor.

The hearts of young people have always been a prey to Cupid's arrows, and love is the only salve that will heal the sore. Hence all young people should be protected with the shield of common sense. Before the heart is exposed, good judgment will seriously ask three important questions: Is he a Christian? Is he intelligent? Is he healthy? If these questions are not satisfactorily answered in the affirmative, then beware, for the Scripture is plain: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." Experience has taught me that some have approached matrimony without even a mention of Christianity and church relations—even when one of the parties was a member of the church. Here is a wonderful opportunity to win a soul to Christ; and, unless it is done, no man or woman should yield their hand and heart.

No thoughtful Christian young people will elope or secretly run away and break the hearts of their parents; and no thoughful Christian parents will deny their children the right of marriage when intelligently and religiously considered. The same questions asked by the young man or woman should be the question of parents. Too often, however, they are left out entirely, and the question of money or salary, of houses or lands is the principal ones. Again we find a wonderful opportunity to win a soul. And if parents are unable to do so, they may well discourage the marriage of their children.

As no Christian young people should marry without the consent of their parents, so they should not be united in matrimony by other than their pastor—unless it is impossible. I seriously question the moral right of any man to slip into a pastor's congregation and secretly win the heart of one of his young people—may be his organist or Sunday School teacher, take her to some distant town or city and marry without consulting her pastor. And this fashion of our young people running after some Justice of the Peace ought to be discontinued since there is such a better way provided.

Preachers, too, need to exercise great care in uniting people together. They should not marry divorced people nor run away couples. If Scripture forbids people being unequally yoked together with unbelievers, what should be said of the minister who, with little thought of anything except a fee, unite without question any and all who may come before him. In the Catholic Church marriage is one of their seven sacraments, and they are the open and avowed enemies of divorcement. To Protestant ministers is at last given the wonderful opportunity to win a soul, and if he is wise he will rarely fail. There comes to my memory now the vision of a young man who once came to see me. I knew what he wanted. I most always do. After some time his lips tried to speak for his heart, and he asked, "Where are you going to be next Wednesday night? Are you going to be busy? Could I get you to do a little job for me?" He was not a Christian, but wanted to marry a Christian girl. It was my opportunity to lead him to accept Christ, and I did so. It is one of the best opportunities a minister ever has with some young people, and he should never fail to intelligently and sympathetically use it.

I hope, my brother, that there may be some weddings in your church or homes this year, that your young people may love and marry only in the Lord, and that the ceremony may be performed by your pastor.

Sincerely,

T. E. White.

PHILOSOPHY AND CHRISTIANITY.

By Daniel Albright Long.

When the Christian religion had been ecclesiastically sanctioned at Nice in 325, Christian philosophers turned their thoughts to the work of philosophical theory.

In Augustine the development of ecclesiastical doctrine in the Patristic period reached its culminating point. Scotus regarded true philosophy identical with true religion. So he went to work, attempting to interpret the dogmas of the church in the light of the supposed early Christian, but in fact Neo-Platonizing conceptions of pseudo-Dionisius, he produced a system containing at once the germs of mediaevil mysticism as as well as of dialectical scholasticism. When scholasticism had passed its period of bloom, there grew up on German soil, a peculiar branch of Mysticism, which exerts an influence on the development of science at the present time.

By Modern Philosophy is meant philosophy since the discontinuance of its condition of subseviency to theology. Its chief divisions are: 1. The Transitional Period, beginning with the renewal of Platonism; 2. The epoch of Empiricism; Dogmatism and skepticism, from Bacon, Descart and Hume; 3. The epoch of the Kantian Criticism and of the systems from it from Kant till the present time.

Among the events which favored the transition from the Middle Ages to the modern times; the earliest was the revival of classical studies, the gradual dissolution of scholasticism, the remains of ancient art and literature in Italy, and the flight of large numbers of learned Greeks to Italy, at the time when the Turks had taken Constantinople. The invention of printing facilitated the spread of literary culture. In the Protestant Reformation we observe the return of the religious consciousness from the doctrines of the Catholic Church to the letter of the Bible. Luther held that philosophy, as well as religion, needed to be reformed. He said "* * I believe it impossible that the church should be reformed, without completely eradicating cannons, decretals, scholastic theology, philosophy, and logic, as they are now received and taught, and instituting others in their place."

Bacon overthrew the scholastic method of beginning in philosophy with conceptions and principles supposed to be given by the reason or by divine revelation.

Hobbes, the political philosopher and friend of Bacon, developed a theory of the State as founded on the subordination of all actions and even of all opinions to the will of an absolute monarch.

The only thing, reasoned Descartes, which, though all else be questioned, cannot be doubted, is doubt itself. But my thinking presupposes my existence; "cogito ergo sum."

Benedictus de Spinozal, unsatisfied by his Talmudic education, turned his attention to the philosophy of Descartes, but transformed the Cartesian dualism into a pantheism, whose fundamental conception was the unity of substance.

John Lock denied the existence of innate ideas and principles. With him, the mind resembles, originally, a blank tablet.

The founder of the German philosophy, of the eighteenth century is Gottfried Wilhelm Von Leibnitz. In opposition to Lock, Leibnitz adopts the dogmatic form of philosophizing i. e. he has an immediate faith in the power of human thought to transcend, by the aid of perfect clearness and distinctness in its ideas, the limits of experience and attain to truth. He oversteps the rualism of Descartes and the monism of Spinoza though the recognition in his Monodology of a gradation of beings. In France, Voltaire came forward, resting in the positive part of his doctrine essentically on the physics of Newton and on Lock's philosophy of cognition, and finding favor, especially for his hostile criticism of the dominant theological confession, not only among the educated of his own nation, but also, to a great extent, outside of France.

The third division of the history of Modern Philosophy begins with Kant's critique of human reason. The object of this critique is to establish, by an examination of the origin, extent, and limits of human knowledge, the distinction between phenomena—whose substance is given us through impressions on the senses, but whose form is a purely subjective product of the mind itself—and real things which exist out of relation to time, space, or causality.

Johann Gottlieb Fichte, originally a Spinozistic determinist, was led to a change of opinion through the influence of Kant's doctrine of the limitation of causality to phenomena, and his assertion of the independent moral freedom of the Ego as a noumonon. With Fichte the Ego posits both itself and the non-ego, and recognizes itself as one with the latter; the process of thesis, antethesis, and synthesis is the form of all knowledge. The philosophical school of Fichte included but few men; yet his speculation became of most decisive influence for the further development of German philosophy.

Fredrick Wilhelm Joseph Schelling transformed Fichte's doctrine of the Ego, which formed his starting point, by combination with Spinozism into the System of Identity. With him object and subject, real and ideal, nature and spirit are identical in the absolute. We percieve this identity of intellectual intuition.

George Wilhelm Fredrick Hegel, developing the principle of identity postulated by Schelling, and subjecting it to the forms of demonstration according to Fichtes' method of dialectical development, created the system of Absolute Idealism. We leave the subject of philosophy in order that we may speak of CHRISTIANITY.

This history of this world presents no phenomenon so striking as the rise and progress of Christianity. Its standard bearers were not numbered among the philosophers. Its victories were won without the aid of worldly influence, and in the face of the keenest opposition, on the part of all the learning, wealth, wit and power of the mightiest nations of the earth. As we enter the twentieth century, we behold Christian men at the head of the greatest Republic and Empires, which the world has known. The most distinguished portion of human kind, today, in art and learning, as well as in arms, profess and respect Christianity. The birthday of its founder receives more attention than the birthday and the death day of all the philosophers. The conclusion is strongly forced upon us that a power beyond that of man was concerned in its success, and that its early and unexampled triumphs offered an incontestible proof of its divine origin.

The Christian religion is the result of two factors: The objective element, which consists in the appropriation of this manifestation and revelation of God to his people for the purpose of salvation; and on the other side there is the subjective element, which consists in the oppropriation of this manifestation and what it implies by man though faith.

When we speak of Christianity, let us remember that it is neither a denomination, nor theology, nor Christian Ethics. It is more than all these put together. The common life of Jesus and his people manifest itself in many outward visible organizations for the purpose of worship. But this worship is not Christianity; still less are the various institutions and ceremonies according to which worship is carried on. Christianity is nothing less than the whole round of human life in all its carious departments in so far as it is related to and illumined and dominated by the divine love revealed in Jesus Christ. "It is the presence of Jesus among His people and all that is implied in such a presence." How often men suppose Christianity to be passing away because theologics, denominations and philosophics change and pass away. The higher criticism may find many imperfections in the translations of the Bible and in the lives of the professed followers of Christ. Yet, "there is above all, the specific difference of the church from all other earthly and human communities, which is preserved intact by rightly distinguishing what is essential from what is accessory. To churchdom belongs the idea of an institution consituted by law, legally regulated, and brought about indeed not by a divine law, and not by human conformation of a divine law, but by human law-making and legislation. With Christianity as manifested in the church of Christ it is not so. The church is one and the same with the organism of the body of Christ upon earth; but churchdom is not so. The church, as the living fellowship of the community with Christ, is always the same. Has always like fundamental conditions and fundamental characteristics of its existence; for the fellowship of the Holy Ghost of saving faith is at no time a different one in its nature and its means. Churchdom, however, as the humanly constituted and institution shaping expression of this society which has become conscious of this vital communion, is not only, subject to the temporal human conditions of its external shaping, but also to human vaccilation and error. He who identifies churchdom with the church, of Christianiy with denominations, not only makes essential that which is human, and in fact formal, a means of the fellowship, of salvation, but he deprives himself of the possibility of recognizing that continuity of the nature and existence of the church which always remains consistent with itself as the sole work of her Lord and Saviour.

Many honest seekers after truth, believe that Christianity is only one of the many religions which are all of them true though none of them contain the whole truth. The notion of evolution has been called in to enforce this view, and Christianity is explained to be the most perfect developement yet reached by the religious spirit of mankind; while the character of Jesus and the New Testament writings are explained on the same principle. On theories of this kind Christianity is the production of the natural forces of the period which gave birth to it, and contains nothing which cannot be traced back to the circumstances of the time, and the condition of humanity. All such theories commonly rest on the general principle that the supernatural is impossible, and that whatever involves a miracle is ipso facto incredible and then proceed by means of some special principle to explain the presence of facts which seem to imply the supernatural. These principles are used to explain not so much the origin of Christianity itself as the origin of the Christian writings of the New Testament, and the production of the scheme of doctrine and morals therein contained. The writers of the Tubingen school of philosophers have suggested the general method of nearly all those who deny the divinity of Christ. By their ingenious arguments, Jesus is reduced to the position of a Jewish rabbi, not much more noticiable than some of his contemporaries, and Christianity, is not the religion of Jesus, but what grew out of that religion when it was subjected to the influences of Roman civilization, Greek philosophy, and Eastern theosophy. Such theories are only advocated by those who deny the miracles of Jesus Christ. Those who believe in the divine origin of Christianity, believe that Jesus spake as never man spake and did what never man did. He was the manifestation of God, and came to give by His presence, person and work, as well as by what he said, the revelation of God, Jesus Christ is the center of the world's history. Christianity is not the simple product of the contemporary philosophical and religious system, but is the embodiment of the unique appearence and work of the great Christ. If Christianity does not appear to meet the wants of our times, it is not its fault, but that of those who profess but do not possess its power in their lives.

JUDGE WOODS BELIEVED THE BIBLE.

My good brother and fellow college-mate, Carl Brown Riddle, has frequently written some very good articles for THE SUN on a fast-going train. Tonight I have two of his qualifications, only two, a fast-going train and something I wish to say. I am returning from a funeral over two hundred miles from Princeton. It was the last rite of love bestowed on a great man. I could ill afford the trip because tomorrow I must sit for an examination in New Testament Biblical Theology and I shall not reach Princeton before late bedtime tonight, but, as I was saying, he was a great man and it was a bestowal of love.

He was great because he was a Christian; and not because he was a great lawyer, State senator, and judge, though all these he had been. He was great because he was a good father of seven God-fearing and parent-loving children; not simply because for a number of years his fellow-citizens had declared him worthy of many of its sacred trusts. He was great because he believed in God and in believing in God he believed in His Son. He did not question the great teachings of the sacred Scriptures, the Holy Spirit taught him they were true and he practiced them by his fireside and in the forum of his State. His home was a house of prayer, therefore I am not surprised that he was the father of a missionary to China and of a Senior in the theological seminary at Princeton. Nor am I surprised that although his children were trained in the larger schools of our country they remain faithful in their estimate of the Word of God and fear not the hisses of the worldly-wise.

Judge Joseph M. Woods was familiar with the recent trend of religious thought, and last spring as I sat with him in his library and listened to his sympathetic discussion of some of the latest religious books I thought of him only as a father, a friend, and a man of God. With an inimitable smile he concluded a remark on a far-fetched naturalistic theory of Christ by looking out through his window at his growing garden and nonchalantly saying, "I think we will have a good crop of strawberries soon."

An individualistic age is here, but the unit of a great nation, as I have felt today, is the Godly home. Such homes can do more for the safe guarding and promulgating of the true principles of greatness and righteousness than godly men, or godly women; for a godly woman may marry an ungodly man and her otherwise warm Christian spirit be chilled while a godly home is a unit of power both for the present and the future for God and His Kingdom. Judge Woods believed that the Word of God was the hope of the home. If there is any rock mightier than the Rock of Ages upon which the Bible may be smashed to pieces so that its statements come to be regarded as tales told under the dim light of superstition, then surely the genius of the glory of our nation is broken and the worst is yet to be. For Christianity is the bedrock foundation of our beloved country. Christianity is based upon the Christ of the Scriptures. And the Christ of the Scriptures had for His Bible the Old Testament as we have it today. "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself."—Luke 24:27. It can be proved beyond documentary dispute that Jesus and the disciples held the Old Testament to be Scripture. Fewer persons dispute the New Testament's right to a place in the Bible. This complete, unbroken, unscarred Bible is what Judge Woods believed in; it is what the great majority of the church has believed in throughout all these ages; and it is still our only sure hope.

Out of that Christian home which from today is a hallowed and beneficent memory,—Mrs. Woods, a strong Christian character, having preceded her husband by three years to the land of endless day,—comes five homes. How lovely they are! Christ is honored in each of them, and the children are being taught the never-dying principles of their gradsire whom we buried today." Thou hast been our dwelling place throughout many generations." And may it ever be so.

My train hastens on, my time is limited, I close. But in conclusion I beg to quote from an editorial which I am just reading in the current issue of Harper's Monthy Magazine in speaking of a ruling against the reading of the Bible in the schools of California. "That seems unfortunate because not to know the Bible is a serious defect in education. It is too bad about the Bible that it makes so much trouble. To clear up our conflicting notions about the Bible is a highly important piece of work. It has a bearing on all the peace of the world, and the progress as well as the composure of human life, and deserves to be included among the big jobs that should engage our wits during 1923." This editor has spoken wisely. I should like to add that we can never clear up the "conflicting notions" by allowing everybody the privilege of cutting out all the portions that conflict with his own peculiar notions. In the same editorial the Old Testament is declared to be "the back ground of the New." Again he has spoken wisely. And if our preachers are afraid of a sort of so-called science and dare not tell the truth about the blessed old Bible, I do pray God that he will use wise statesmen and editors of our great magazines to set our thinking right about the place and power of the unmolested Word of God.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

Princeton, N. J. Jan. 15, 1923.

If the Christian Church would serve its mission to man, it must be wide awake and up and doing each day ahead of the rising of the sun. To be slow and lazy in our service for God is practically the same as deserting it. No drone is fit for the service of the Christ of our calvation. We need to be wide awake, not so much for the sake of the denomination, except indirectly, as for the cause of the Christ who came into the world to reveal God to us and thereby give us the chance to enter into the family of God. There is but one plea that should move us for the denomination with which we are connected, viz.: That we may gain strength to use in the building up of the cause of Christ. For this purpose we are justified in pleading for the extension of the influence and power of our denomination, then we have no worthy end at all, for a big denomination might be cold and formal and of no real service to the cause of Christ. It has ofteen hapened that way, and apparently lettle good came of the effort. Let us build up our cause that it may become a means to an end, and then our work will not be in vain in the Lord, if that end be the unbuilding of the cause of the Christ among men.

Reference Material: Matt. 6:5-15; Luke 15: 20-24; John 4:23-24.

"Into the woods my Master went
Clean forspent, forspent;
Into the woods my Master came
Forspent with love and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to Him.
The little gray leaves were kind to Him;
The thorn-tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came.

"Out of the woods my Master went
And He was well content;
Out of the woods my Master came
Content with death and shame.
When death and shame would woo Him last
From under the trees they drew Him last
'Twas on a tree they slew Him—last
When out of the woods He came."—Sidney Lanier.

Our Master lived His life here on earth as a Man of prayer. By His deeds, as well as in His teachings, He placed His divine approbation upon the prayer life of the Christian. If Jesus Christ in His days on this earth felt the need of communion with God, how much more do we need to talk to the Heavenly Father and ask His guidance and help in our lives! The disciples had once come to Jesus with the plea "Lord, teach us to pray." In this lesson, the teaching goes on through simple stories showing the essential qualities of true prayer.

Prayer should be continuous. "Ought always to pray and not to faint." There should never be a time when prayer is not possible. There is never a time when prayer is not needed and helpful. The rabbis taught that God must not be fatigued by too frequent prayer. In their minds, the three times a day offered sufficient opportunity. Paul taught: "Pray without ceasing—in everything give thanks." The Christian who devotes certain time to prayer, in a definite place gains strength in his Christian life,—but a strength which is further developed when he is continually in the spirit of prayer. Like the plea of the widow who came to the unjust judge, prayer must be persistent, "asking in faith—nothing doubting." God may be preparing for the granting of the request, and the time of waiting is often the time of testing of the faith. "If you are not willing for God's will to be done whether it means victory or defeat, you are not praying at all." Earnest prayer is always answered by a Heavenly Father who is far wiser than any of His children.

Prayer Should be Sincere.

"To say my prayer is not to pray
Unless I mean the words I say."

The Pharisee prayed "with himself. He was conscious of no need. His prayer was filled with his own merits only. His only thought of God was to thank Him for making him not as other men. His chief thought was not talk of God, but to impress other people with his worthiness. Surely his words could not be called a "soul's sincere desire" expressed to God. On the other hand, the publican, the man who was despised by the Jews, stood away from the Holy Place, and uttered but a single sentence, calling upon God for mercy for a sinner. But his prayer is the expression of a need, sincerely felt in his life. Can we be sincere in our prayers, with a consciousness of our own superiority, feeling that we are more deserving than others of God's attention and gifts? Is the spirit of the Christ? In our public prayers' is God's desire not more for the prayer of sincere petition and thanksgiving, than for eloquence? "This man went down to his house justified." The sincere prayer has Christ's approval.

Prayer should be humble. "Humble yourself in the sight of the Lord and he shall exact you." (James 4:10). Humility is a vital characteristic of prayer; humility, not for the conscious purpose of being exalted, but true lowliness of spirit. Meditation of the great power of God and the teachings of Christ, realization of the great work of the Kingdom and the Christian's individual responsibility to help carry on this work brings a feeling of unworthiness, coupled with the desire to have a share in the work. Such thought will make our prayers humble petitions that we may be faithful servants.

Dr. Gordon says: "The great people of the earth today are the people who pray. These are the people who are doing the most for God; in winning souls; in solving problems; in awakening churches; in supplying both men and money for missions posts; in keeping fresh and strong these lives far off in sacrificial service on the foreign field where the thickest fighting is going on; in keeping the old earth sweet awhile longer." Such is the service of the humble man of prayer.

Prayer should be trustful. Jesus Christ received the mothers with their little ones, and taught His followers that one who desired to enter the Kingdom of Heaven must become as a little child. One of childhood's qualities is perfect trust. The child is ready to believe. So our prayer must express a simple trust in God.

Prayer should be unselfish. The ruler came to Jesus to ask what he must do to inherit eternal life. But he departed sorrowfully because he had great possessions; because he was selfish. Sometimes even this spirit enters into the prayer life. The spirit of prayer is unselfish and is unlimited for it may extend to folks we have never seen. Prayer is the expression often of the attitude of the individual; narrow or broad, according to human sympathies. The prayer of Charles D. Meigs should be the prayer of other Christians:

"Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way,
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayers shall be for—OTHERS."

Dr. Andrew Murray in speaking of prayer says: "A beautiful little book, 'Expectation Corner,' tells us of a King who prepared a city for some of his poor subjects. Not far from them were large storehouses, where everything they could need was supplied if they but sent in their requests. But on one condition—they should be on the outlook for the answer, so that when the King's messengers came with the answers to their petitions, they should always be found waiting and ready to receive them. The sad story is told of one desponding one who never expected to get what he asked, because he was too unworthy. One day he was taken to the King's storehouse, and there to his amazement, he saw with his address on them, all the packages that had been made up for him, and sent. They had been to his door, but found it closed; he was not on the outlook. From that time on he learned the lesson Micah would teach us: 'I will look unto Jehovah; I will wait for the God of my salvation: my God will hear me.'—Westminister Teacher.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

February 11, 1923.

(Consecration Meeting).

Thoughts for the Meeting.

God is the Ruler of our lives, the King of our hearts. Should we not be continually praising him for His goodness and power. Vs. 1.

Testimony for God is not just a Sunday affair, or for prayer meeting along. Every day his blessings are bestowed. Every day should be "Thanksgiving Days" to Him. Vs. 2.

We can see many evidences of God's goodness. But far beyond our conception are the powers of His greatness. We can never live long enough to appreciate all He has done. Vs. 3

It is a privilege to teach to others God's goodness. To make others to know Him is the great work of testimony. The story of His love is passed from one generation to the next. This is religious education. Vs. 4.

Meditation helps us to realize God's goodness. How much time do you spend thinking about God. Vs. 5.

Realization of God's favors, brings the added blessings of telling about them. Vs. 6.

God is no respecter of persons. He is "good to all." Can we be obedient children of His and draw a line where He has not?
Rank nor color, wealth nor poverty make any difference in His sight. "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but Jehovah looketh on the heart." Vs. 9.

God is always ready to listen to His children, who call upon him in the true spirit of earnestness, humility, sincerity and unselfishness. Vs. 18.

God loves all, but His word has declared that the wicked will be destroyed. Vs. 20.

"Let all flesh bless His holy name for ever and ever." Vs. 21.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

This is the second Consecration Meeting of the year, and the second Psalm presented for thought and study. It was suggested that these twelve Psalms be memorized this year. This Psalm is a little longer but worth learning. Place on your wall an honor roll with stars after the names of those who learn these passages of Scripture.

Make this a real "Testimony Meeting" asking every person present to tell of God's goodness in their own lives Ask several in advance to choose a verse in the Psalm which appeals most, and to quote this verse in the meeting, telling why it helps them. Have the Prayer Meeting Committee see that the younger members have a suggestion which they may follow in taking part in the meeting, so that every person may have a part in the service.

Ask five members to speak briefly on the following five reasons for praising God in testimony: For His Greatness, (as seen in the world He has created); For His Goodness; For His Kingdom, (over which He rules everywhere and always as an ever-wise ruler); For His Care; for His Salvation, ("He will preserve those that love him." saving power).

For Scripture Reading: Ps. 119:27; Isaiah 12:4; Isaiah 32:4; Isaiah 43:10; Mark 5:16-20; Luke 8:38; Luke 12:8,9; Luke 24:48; John 4:28-30; Acts 1:8; Romans 10:9; 2 Timothy 1:8; Hebrews 2:3,4; Revelation 12:11.

Hymns: I Love to Tell the Story; Take My Life and Let It Be; Take the Name of Jesus With You; God Will Take Care of You; We praise Thee Oh God: There's a Wideness in God's Mercy; The King's Business.

JANUARY IS OVER.

The month of January is past, but it is not too late to use the leaflet for "Men and Millions Sunday" in your Sunday School! Many of our Sunday School leaders have ordered this leaflet for use in their schools. Many more should be sending for it. If you want the boys and girls of your Sunday School, and perhaps the men and women as well, to know what the Christian Church stands for, and what we are trying to do as a church, place this leaflet in their hands, to be read and learned. Copies will be furnished free as long as they last. One teacher is offering a special award to the Junior boys and girls who memorize the entire reading. Why not have an Honor Roll in your Sunday School of all who can answer every question, by Children's Day, or Rally Day? Is it not worth while to have your people familiar with the principles and work of the Christian Church? Write for copies of the leaflet today, to the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va Many Christian Endeavor Societies and Missionary Societies are requesting them, as well as the Sunday Schools.

A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DISCOVERY.

Christian Endeavor Societies often discover talent, and use that talent in the work of the society and the church. One of the greatest pieces of service rendered by the Christian Endeavor Society in many places has been to find young people who can work, and give them something to do for God. Every Society furnishes examples of this kind. The Chairman of the Prayer Meeting Committee of the Liberty (Vance) Christian Endeavor Society, an organization less than one year old, sends the following, which was written by a young man in that Society, Mr. E. E. Hoyle, who wished to make his contribution to a Christian Endeavor prayer meeting at Liberty:

THE BIBLE—OUR GUIDE.

The Bible is our guide,
From this sin-cursed world to Jesus's side;
And we must read it all we can,
Or we will miss the Promised Land.
There you will see the promise sweet,
How Jesus guides our wayward feet.
And we must read from day to day,
If we would walk the narrow way,
Just think how Jesus bled and died,
And on the cross was cruicified;
Just for us, that we might live
In that bright mansion that He will give.
And as we walk from day to day,
Our lives grow sweeter along the way;
And then we'll know and understand
Why Jesus wrote this blest command.
Come unto me, I will give you rest;
A home in heaven among the blest;
That place of joy and peace and love,
A home with Jesus in heaven above.

FOUNDER'S WEEK CONFERENCE.

The annual Founder's Week Conference of The Moody Bible Institute will be held Feb. 5 to 9 inclusive, in the Institute Auditorium, Chicago.

The list of speakers includes Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D., Dean of the Los Angeles Bible Institute, for many years intimately associated with the great evangelist; Dr. J. Gresham Machen of Princeton Theological Seminary; Dr. Leander S. Keyser of Hamma Divinity School, Springfield, O.; Dr. Donald McTavish of Toronto, evangelistic and conference representative of the Presbyterian denomination throughout Canada; Rev. W. S. Gottshall, president Mennonite Home Mission Board, Bluffton, O.; Dr. Gordon Watt and Mrs. Watt of Glasgow, Scotland, Rev. Charles W. Abel of the London Missionary Society, for thirty-two years a missionary in New Guinea; Dr. Maurice Frater, who in 1900 went to the New Hebrides to evangelize two savage islands.

Mr. C. S. Bishop, veteran secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Kansas City, Mo., who directed Mr. Moody's great evangelistic campaign there, the last of his career, is also expected.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THIS LESSON?

Is the lesson a true one? If so, what say you? Will you undertake to learn and apply it to your own life? At any rate read it, and then if you think the lesson is worthy of your life, will you not undertake to make it the rule of your life and so try, not only to get good out of it yourself, but also to help others do likewise. We copy the folowing from an exchange:

A wealthy old gentleman residing in London, on one of his birthdays invited his servants into the house to receive presents. "What will you have," said he, addressing the groom, "this Bible or a five-pound note?" "I would take the Bible, sir; but I cannot read; so I think the money will do me more good," replied the hostler. "And you?" he asked the gardener. "My poor wife so ill that I sadly need the money," responded the gardener with a bow. "Mary, you can read," said the old man, turning to his cook; "will you have this Bible?" "I can read, sir, but I never get time to look into a book; and the money will buy a fine dress." Next was the chambermaid; but she had one Bible and did not want another. Last came the errand boy. "My lad," said his kind benefactor, "will you take these five pounds and replace your shabby clothes by a new suit?" "Thank you, sir; but my dear mother used to read to me that the law of the Lord was better than thousands of gold and silver. I will have the good Book, if you please." "God bless you, my boy! and may your wise choice prove riches and honor and long life unto you!" As the lad received the Bible and unclasped its covers, a bright gold-piece rolled to the floor. Quickly turning its pages, he found them thickly interleaved with bank notes; while the four servants, discovering the mistake of their worldly covetousness, hastily departed in chagrin. —Selected.

Education Referendum.

A special committee, appointed by the United States Chamber of Commerce to examine into the Federal Government's participation in education, has reported. A brief of the majority and minority reports has been mailed by the Washington office of the chamber as a referendum, with ballots, to individual and associate members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, with the request that they place the question before their organizations to ascertain their views on three questions: (1) Do you favor the creation of a Federal Department of Education with a Secretary in the President's Cabinet? (The proposal of the Towner-Serling bill) (2) Do you favor enlarging the present Bureau of Education? (3) Do you favor the principle of Federal aid to education in the States on the basis of the States appropriating sums equal to those given by the Federal Government?

The special committee consisted of eight members. The majority report, of five, is opposed by a minority report, of two, and one member of the committee submitted a separate memorandum, signing neither majority or minority report.

Copies of the referendum with the briefs of the two reports are available for interested inquirers, from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Washington, D. C.

The final voting must be done by February 9th, after which the results will be collated and made available to the public through a bulletin.

Saving the Babies.

The point in human life which baffles medical and health authorities is the first month of a child's life. The Literary Digest tells us that only half as many babies die after the first month as did fifteen or twenty years ago. That looks like progress in the right direction, but we are also told that during the first month of the life of children as many die as did formerly. In other words, that much has been done for the life and health of children after they have passed their first month, but that during the first month neither science, medical skill nor health bureaus have been able to reduce mortality among children under one month of age. Each year in the United States more than 105,000 babies die before they are a month old. It is said that it is easier to survive a year at the age of 65 than it is for a baby to live through the first month of its life. We are also told that to this number who die during the first month of life must be added an equally large porportion of still born children. So we have the death of more than two hundred thousand children annually in the United States including those which are still born and those which die before they are one month old. Here all means of modern progress has been ineffective, although the same means has been effective in reducing the death rate among Children over one month old by half, as compared with what was done fifteen or twenty years ago.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

HOW THE WHOLE CHURCH MAY HELP.

Since the great calamity befell the church in the loss by fire of the Main building at Elon College, January 18th, one has heard nothing but words of sympathy, interest and concern for the future of the college on all sides and from everywhere. Men and women, boys and girls in and out of the Christian Church are discussing our loss and expressing the wish that a greater Elon shall spring up and that bigger and better buildings shall take the place of the one destroyed. Burlington and Alamance County have spoken their sympathy and interest in no uncertain terms in their resolve to contribute $100,000 to an emergency fund with which to rebuild. The faculty and citizens of Elon College have spoken in no uncertain terms in their resolve to contribute $20,000 to help build a bigger, better Elon. Moved by these and other like generous expressions of sympathy and interest, the trustees of the college met Wednesday, 24th, and decided to seek $600,000 with which to put up three buildings instead of one, and also add to the permanent endownment in order that some of the increasing expense of the greater Elon may be cared for. There is to be no general canvass among the churches to raise this sum, because the churches have their obligations already in the form of their Men and Millions pledges. Now every one who made a pledge to Men and Millions can come to the relief of Elon in this emergency by paying up those pledges. The trustees in session past this resolution: "Since our church has suffered the calamity in the loss by fire of the Main building at Elon College, we urge every one who made a pledge to the Standardization and Men and Millions funds to pay these pledges at the earliest possible date, and in this way help relieve a situation that is most urgent."

Let every reader of this line, if he signed a pledge to Standardization send the same to President Harper. Or if he has a pledge to Men and Millions, and we presume all Christian Sun readers have, see the Captain in the local church and if possible pay, not only what is due at present on the pledge, but all that the pledge calls for. Such a movement on the part of the membership of the Christian Church would count mightily now in Kingdom service and in relieving a most urgent and worthy and needy situation. Let all who love their church express their sympathy to their college by paying at once their Men and Million pledges. This, as stated above, will not only relieve a situation but will help the whole church to greater service.

FOUR LEAVES FROM A DIARY.

Scenes and Impressions at Bethlehem.

Leaf No. I.

(I find myself again keeping a diary. That is no unusual announcement, but I am inclined to believe that my friend, W. P. Minton, Secretary of Foreign Missions, Dayton, Ohio, is in some way responsible for my offering to make public the secrets of my daily doings for four days just now. No, Minton should not be blamed, for he never once hinted that the public should be afflicted with these scenes and impressions, but there seems to be something about the fellow that provokes one to such daring. Minton has a way of making one rush in and face foes all unexpectedly, and without reservation. So much by way of apology for presenting four leaves torn from my diary kept while at the Foreign Mission Conference at North America, Bethlehem, Pa., January 9, 10, 11, 12, 1923.)

Room 600 Bethlehem Hotel, Bethlehem, Pa., Jan. 9, 1923.

Saw for 500 miles traveled over sundry railroads

This day past without particular incident till the evening hour of it struck. Then things began to happen. Rev. W. P. Minton, D. D., Secretary of our Foreign Mission Board and Rev. W.H. Denison, D. D., Chairman of the Board, had come from Dayton, Ohio, and our rooms (adjoining on the sixth floor of this two-hundred rooms, million dollar hotel) had been engaged. Count on this man Minton to have everything arranged and his house in order when the minute comes. He had no glorious Porto Rican coffee with him, but he wore that smile that never comes off and all the sunshine needful for a household. We had fore gathered to join other Mission Secretaries and returned missionaries from all over the earth in the Annual Session of the North American Missionary Conference. The opening session was in the great old Moravian Church in this city. To my dying day I will never forget this church, its structure, its stately bearing, its marvelous architecture and the wonderful service which opened the Conference. This city of Bethlehem was founded by a band of Moravians coming over from Bohemia in 1741 and is at present the headquarters of this wonderful and world-wide religious sect. The Moravians formed the first incorporated missionary society. This was on February 27, 1788, but before papers of incorporation were taken out namely on May 17, 1746, two missionaries had gone out to South America, and these were the first native American missionaries to go out to any country. This was several years before Adonirum Judson went out from Massachusetts. That is to say, the city of Bethlehem was settled not by individuals but by a church, and as a home for the religiously oppressed of other lands and immediately became a missionary center, which it has been to this day. This church building in which the session was held tonight was begun in 1808 and completed in 1806 and was the third house to be erected on this spot, but the first one was just as large as the present one. The builder certainly had faith in their colony and in the future, for the house easily seats 1200 people. It is built of stone and is all in one room, and there is no column or support in sight that supports the wide spreading roof. The building is of stone and has no rail or screw of any kind, even in the making of the roof, we were told. In this house great congregations have gathered for one hundred and fifteen years, and from it have gone forth ambassadors, sent out to all parts of the earth to preach the unsearchable riches of the gospel. The chronicles of the church meetings and the letters of these missionaries have been kept in the archives of the church through all the centuries, and an accurate history of our country as well as Christian Missions could be written from these records.

We were told tonight that the religious colony settling here was observing its first Christmas vigils, and as a song of the Babe of Bethlehem was being sung, one of the worshippers looked over the hills and saw a bright star in the skies and proclaimed that our community should be called Bethlehem, from the name of Bethlehem of Judea, "for the founding of our community, like that of the ancient Bethlehem, is for the building up of the kingdom of our Lord. From that night till now this city, which has at present a population of more than fifty thousand, has been called Bethlehem.

Let it be written in my diary that religion does not retard a community, but builds it up and makes for its progress, prestige and power. This city of Bethlehem is not only a great and thriving city today, but has ever led in may progressive ideas and movements. It founded and is still the home of the first Seminary for girls in the United States. It introduced the first city water system, which system had as its source the old spring, around which the religious colony settled in 1741. It is the home of Lehigh University, one of the most famous seats of learning of our land, and is also the home of the Bethlehem Steel Company, in whose works more than sixty per cent of our war ammunition in the recent world-war were made.

The service was opened in the grand old church tonight with a great pipe organ playing and a wondeful choir leading, and the whole congregation singing "From Greenland's Icy Mountain." I had heard the old song a hundred times before but it sounded never so solemn, sacred and searching at it did tonight. After some preliminary and welcome remarks the church again resounded with the splendid hymn "Jesus Shall Reign." Dr. Robert E. Speer, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board, delivered the address of the evening. Dr. Speer is but recently returned from a trip around the world, and his experience and observation fitted him for the test of the evening. He opened his marvelous address by declaring that it was most difficult to think hopefully of the church and the advancement of the Kingdom at the present time. He declared emphaticaly that pessimism and doubt were everywhere. He dramatically propounded this question "Has religion lost its grip upon the world?" The mood of doubt, dread and fear seems prevalent everywhere. He read several letters from eminent men in various parts of the world, the import of all of which was that he who can be optimistic about the progress of Christianity and Kingdom enlargements at the present time must be blind to actual facts. If we ground our reasoning upon mathematical equasions and seek to solve our present problems in the light of actual facts, then good bye to our hopes. We simply at the present, in the face of actual facts cannot base our hopes on what we see, but we must base them on what we see not. Our only hope at present is to turn our gaze from world facts and fix them on a world Saviour and Redeemer. We must base our hope, our faith and our aspiration on the Son of God. What we see at present literally blinds us, and only that which we cannot see can give us courage. We have got to come back to the grounds on which those who founded missionary movements stood. Only on those grounds can we find standing room today. The first of these facts is that of redeemed and transformed persons. We have got to consider and put emphasis on people in whom the miracle of transformation has been wrought. These people were not until Christ touched them and then they were. Take the low castes of India. These people really did not exist as people until the miracle of salvation through Jesus Christ began to be wrought in their hearts and then they came to be. Second.

We shall have to base our hope on the transforming of life and truth through Jesus Christ. That is to say, through the turning of the tide of truth and life to Jesus Christ. It is not sufficient for us to know the truth, but to know the truth as it is in Jesus Christ and the mind of Jesus Christ as it permeates the world. A purely selfish life did not apologize for itself a hundred years ago. Now the church which does not undertake missionary effort to save the world through Jesus Christ, and the people who do not, find themselves reduced to the necessity of apoligizing. There is, declared Dr. Speer, a growing consciousness among men that the hope of the world is in the Church in Christ.

By the apprehension of a true perspective one may even in this dark time get hope. Let us turn back to the early beginnings of missions and see how these early missionaries had to fight against closed doors abroad and cold and indifferent hearts at home. The present willingness on the part of those at the home base to stand by the efforts of missionaries in other parts of the world will give hope. We must, therefore, take counsel of our needs. The only way to enlarge our resources is to enlarge our work, and that means larger excesses and debts. We shall preserve our hope if we keep our unrelenting grasp on the fundamental fact that Jesus is Redeemer and Saviour.

Christianity is not a rival among other religions. It is in the world as absolute. It is an offer to the world of that which Christ is. He is the one sufficient Saviour for the needs of all hearts. Our Lord and Saviour is a sufficient power to save the world. It we will turn our eyes from present world upheavals to Calvary and the Cross we shall find hope—and only there.

Dr. Speer of course swept his audience, as he always does. I put him down as a great Christian statesman—possibly the greatest living.

Back at room 600 Minton,Denison and I, still under the spell of Speer's wonderful address discuss Jesus Christ the world's only hope, and in connection with it our new movement in Christian Education. We agreed that what our Christian Church needed today was to press home in our Sunday Schools, in our Christian Endeavor Societies and in our colleges the very idea Speer had so marvellously expounded. And we resolve that while we live we shall be found trying to do our part in pressing this idea through our wonderful program of Christian Education. Surely our Christian Church has come to a great day and a great program.

And now I lay me down to sleep, while the houses and hills of Bethlehem, Pa. are slumbering beneath their blanket of snow and will try to dream of the Bethlehem far away in whose manger years ago was cradled my Redeemer and the world's only sure hope.

MAKING THE BEST OF THINGS

If you cannot have what you like, learn to like what you have, says an old adage. There is great wisdom in this saying, for in it is found all the difference between a joyous, sunshiny life and one that is filled with gloom and disappointment.

Our students at Elon have caught this fine spirit in the crisis through which we are just now passing. Onr students are always a joyous set, but tho our hearts are aching now I do not believe I have ever seen so many smiles as now greet us on every hand. We are playing the game in superb fashion. Our morale is grand. I feel sure we shall continue to make the best of things this spring.

This spirit we shall find most valuable in the years that lie, as I trust, ahead of us. We shall meet many disappointments. If we accept them in the spirit we have met the destruction of our Administration Building with the attendant inconveniences, we shall turn these disappointments into stepping stones and upon them ascend the heights of lasting achievement. From every fall that comes to us we shall mount higher, if we meet misfortune in the spirit of optimism.

The determination to make the best of things can overcome any handicap. You may have a slow mind. It could certainly not be more halting than Patrick Henry's. His teacher advised that he be put to work, since he could not learn. Yet Patrick Henry was the flaming orator of national independence and governor of Virginia. Darwin, Herbert Spencer, Robert Louis Stephenson, and Elizabeth Rarrett Browning overcame the impediment of poor health and registered for themselves, despite the physical handicap of perpetual suffering, a high place in the esteem of the world. Helen Keller is a source of constant inspiration to every aspiring woman. Who could be more rightly discouraged than this beautiful character? Yet she has achieved greatness. And let us not forget that one of England's greatest statesman was but the trunk of a man, without arms or legs.

I think we can afford to be personal just here. One of the most useful members of our student body is a blind man. Mr. Lynam is a constant inspiration to me and I am sure he is to each of you. Afflicted as he is, he would be entirely justified to offer his handicap as a reason for looking to society to care for him. Having resolved to make the best of things, Mr. Lynam is a marvellous inspiration to us all. His fine record as a student and the splendid manner in which he meets his responsibilities in the activities of the campus life are a constant spur to noble effort on the part of us all.

No matter what our handicap is in a personal or community way, we can make it the ministering servant of our life's achievement. In overcoming our weakness we acquire the use of powers before unknown to us. It is such victory over self and circumstance that transform defeat into triumph.

And so I end where I began by saying that we have a splendid moral discipline challenging us in the crisis that has overtaken our Alam Mater. Let us make the best of our situation and in the years to come we shall rejoice that we had the courage and faith to do it.

Mrs. W. A. Harper.

INFINITE DIMENSIONS OF THE GREAT COMMISSION.

The longer I study the Great Commission, the deeper it impresses me with its wonderful proportions. It is recorded in five places, written by four men; divided in seven parts, which contain the whole of Gospel Doctrines and duties. In John 20:21-22 Jesus said to his disciples: "Peace be unto you: As my Father has sent me, even so send I you. And he breathed on them and said: Recieve ye the Holy Spirit. Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them: and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." This was not spoken to a Pope or priest, but to the church, and includes both personal tresspasses, and offences against the church, with abcundant instructions in other places on both.

Violation of the moral law can be forgiven only by God.

Those sent on such a commission as he had from the Father, need to receive the Holy Spirit, imparting to them saving and serving grace. Serving grace is given in the measure the service requires. Ordinary gifts are for ordinary service, and extraordinary gifts are for extraordinary service. As the Father has sent me so send I you; on the same mission to the same field, which is "the world." The first doctrine the Spirit writes in a regenerated heart is missions-saved to serve. Any other Gospel would be a curse to even an angel.

Matt. 28 and Luke 24 we have: "Thus it is written and thus it behooved the Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. It was important that this should begin at Jerusalem, for here the gospel would receive the greatest opposition, even the crucifiction of its author, and there the greatest victory must be won even—the conversion of the murderers of the Lord of glory.

Mark 16: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, but he that disbelieveth shall be damned." Here the emphasis is on preach and not on go. The first statement of the commission has "Whosoever," the next "All nations," and this "All creation every time it is World Wide Missions. The last words he spoke on earth, as he ascended from Mt. Olivet, are found in Acts 1:8: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." A good witness tells what he knows, all he knows, in face of all foes, wherever he goes. Note the order—Jerusalem (City Missions), Judea (State Missions), Samaria (Home Missions), uttermost parts of the earth (Foreign Missions).

All these texts throw light on Matt. 28:18-20, his omniscience comprehended and His omnipotence compressed all doctrines and duties into a few sentences. These are preceeded by "All authority in Heaven and upon earth, and succeeded by omnipresence, "Lo, I am with you, in all the days, and in all places till the end comes." Here is all there is of doctrine and duty in the Gospel. The instructions are plain and given in mandatory form and by all authority in Heaven and Earth.

When we try to apprehend something of the dimensions of his commission as given by Christ, and reinforced with statements made by the Holy Spirit through the Prophets and Apostles, we feel that He spoke moderately and modestly when he said: "All authority was given him." In Isa. 9:6,7 he is called: "Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Father of Eternity, and the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end; upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice forever." In the commission is seen a reason and power for all the churches activities—a reason for the Men and Millions and the Forward Movement of the Christian Church— and a reason for paying every dollar we have pledged to these great MOVEMENTS. Let us magnify the great Commission, defy its author, amplify its terms, clarify its spirit, purify its subjects, glorify its keepers and verify its promises.

Christian Orphanage

GREATER THINGS THE COMING YEAR.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

The Christian Orphanage had a very successful year during the year 1922. It supported more children than any one year in its history. The churches, Sunday schools and friends stood by us loyally and our income was sufficient to meet all our bills each month so we were not embarrassed financially during the year. We had in our care most of the year about ninety children. We have a splendid crowd of children and I guess they make as good grades in school, taking them on an average, as any family of children.

It makes me feel glad at the end of the month to run over their school reports and note what fine grades many of them make. Of course we have some that make poor grades, but we find the same thing in families. Some of the children will have no trouble to make fine progress, but sometimes the father and mother have a hard time to get some member of the family to make any progress at all in their studies.

In looking over the cards last month I noticed many of them averaged over ninety which I consider a good grade.

We start off the year 1923 with bright hopes for another year filled with blessings. We hope to do a greater work for the Master in this work of love and charity.

We now have ninety four children in the Institution and expect to run our number up to one hundred. That is the number we set for our goal and we feel that our church ought to be glad of the opportunity to support that many.

We have two special things to do this year.

First.—We want to equip an infirmary for our sick children. We have an ideal room in our new building for this purpose and it will cost us about one thousand dollars to equip it.

Second.—We want to refurnish the old building. Most of the beds have been in use since the orphanage was opened. The springs are Springless. The beds out of shape and broken up. The furniture is also broken. We want to get it in better shape and then keep it in shape but we will have to have new furniture to do this.

We have recently refurnished the little girls' department on the lower floor and they are happy over their nice home like room as if they were worth a million. It gives them an incentive to keep it nice so they will always feel proud of it and it makes them happy to have visitors tell them it looks nice.

We appeal to every church and Sunday school and friends to stand by us during the year 1923 and give us your loyal support. It takes quite a good deal to clothe and feed ninety-four children. It takes lots of food to serve three hundred meals each day. But we have that abiding faith in you to believe we will have your unstinted and loyal support and that we will be able to do a greater work.

The Story of The Bible

By Hendrick Van Loon

is being published in McCall's Magazine. It is the most important and epoch-making contribution ever printed by an American magazine, because here for the first time has a master-writer and master-historian picked out shining thread of the Biblical narrative, dropping away all details from it and presenting it not only in the simplest and most beautiful of English but fixing it also in its exact historical perspective.

IN McCALL'S NOW.

"The Story of the Bible" is appearing now in McCall's. We have made special arrangements with the publishers so that you will be able to enjoy this beautiful presentation of the Bible story. For a short time only we can offer our readers this remarkable club—

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

Called Home

MRS. LILLIE J. GRAHAM.

Mrs. Lillie J. Graham entered into rest January 14, 1923, while at the home of her daughter, Mrs. B. F. Moore, of Raeford, N. C. Her husband, Albert Graham, died several years ago. Her body was brought to Burlington, N. C., and taken thence to Union Church, and placed by the side of her deceased husband. The funeral services were conducted by Dr. P. H. Fleming, Rev. J. W. Holt and the writer.

She was the mother of four children, one son, Hon. W. J. Graham, Burlington, N. C., and three daughters, Mrs. Junius H. Harden, Burlington, N. C., Mrs. John W. Roberts, Windsor, Va., and Mrs. B. F. Moore, Raeford, N. C. Sister Graham leaves behind to mourn their loss all her children, several grandchildren, and many relatives and friends.

The love and high esteem entertained for her was attested by the very large number of friends who attended her funeral, and the great wealth of beautiful flowers that they placed on her grave.

On the 12th of May, 1922, she wrote this short sketch of her life evidently in anticipation of her death: "I was born June 20, 1839, married December 19, 1867, was converted at Hebron M. E. Church, Caswell County, 1863, through the influence of the sainted Mrs. Daniel Kerr, joined the church at Union, Alamance County, 1869. Now feel that I have kept the faith and have almost finished my work and am ready to enter upon my reward, blessed hope, of eternal life with loved ones who have gone before. I only dread the passage from life unto death. I feel so thankful for the many comforts and blessings I have enjoyed through life."

When the last morning came, while in full consciousness, she passed out from us with words of praise and thanksgiving on her lips.

She was an exemplary Christian woman in all the relations of life; as wife, mother and neighbor.

Ready always to entertain the stranger, or the minister, or to minister to the sick and needy. Her influence was extensive, and her memory is blessed.

What joy and peace, what happiness, yea what blessedness in the Christian home, where parents and children live together in each others love and confidence, sharing the joys and sorrows of life!

Nothing is better or sweeter on this side of heaven.

TUNE

On Wednesday, January 3, 1923, the death angel visited the home of William A. Tune and bore him to that home where sin and suffering are not known.

Mr. Tune was born August 7, 1881. At an early age he united with the Vernon Hill Baptist Church, where he remained a faithful and devout member until his death. For the past two years he was the Superintendent of this Sunday School.

In June, 1904, he was married to Miss Minnie Boyd, to which union were born six children. All of these together with a devoted wife are left to mourn his untimely death. He was a true husband, a loving father and a friend to all.

The passing of this good man, this highly esteemed citizen in his community, is not only mourned by the devoted wife and children, but is sadly regretted by innumerable friends throughout this section.

On the following day, his body was tenderly laid to rest in the Vernon Hill Cemetery. The services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. Bagwell, assisted by Rev. J. E. McCauley. The Masons had charge of the burial.

The many beautiful floral offerings showed the love and esteem in which this good man was held.

EASON.

James Eason was born in 1849, and departed this life January 3, 1923. He is survived by a widow, Mrs. Laura V. Eason (Miss Laura Speight, of Wallaceston, Va.), and three daughters: Mrs. R. C. Hall, Mrs. J. B. Saunders, and Mrs. Harry Stewart, of Petersburg, Va., and four sons: Charles and Edgar Eason, of Great Bridge; Bert Eason, of Campostella, and James Eason, and five grandchildren. Two brothers, the last of a large family survive. Mr. Monford Eason, of Norfolk, age 70 years, and Mr. Haywood Eason, of Drumhill, N. C., age 78 years. Brother Eason had been sorely afflicted for about three years. He was a faithful member of Berea Christian Church, Norfolk County.

The flowers were many and beautiful. He was laid to rest beside his daughter, in the family plot, in Berea Cemetery. One week only separated them. Mrs. Mabel Eason Reeves was buried on December 29, 1922, Brother Eason on January 5, 1923.

Services were conducted from the home of the deceased by the pastor.

Weep not as those, who have no hope. Though your sorrow seems to be doubled Jesus will not have us to bear our burdens alone.

B. F. BLACK.

COX.

Jesse Cox, of Altamahaw, aged 45, passed from this life on January 8, 1923, after an illness of a few weeks. He leaves a widow and five small children. He is also survived by his mother, father and several brothers and sisters. Brother Cox was a member of Berea Christian Church and the funeral services were conducted from that church by the writer, assisted by Rev. A. H. Hook, January 9th. Interment followed at the Church cemetery. God comfort those who mourn with a love that heals broken hearts.

BENNETTE

Mrs. Mary E. Bennette, of Elon College, N. C., Route 1, was born December 23, 1889, departed from this life on Friday morning, January 5. Mrs. Bennette was married to B. M. Bennette on December 25, 1909. To this union was born one child which died in infancy. Her husband, mother, four sisters, one brother and step-father survive her.

Sister Bennette was a Charter member of Berea Christian Church and always filled her place of faithful service. Everyone who knew her held her in the very highest esteem. She was a leader in every church, and community activity and her sweet life shall be missed.

The funeral services were held at Bethlehem Church at Altamahaw, Saturday afternoon, January 6th, by the writer, with Rev. A. F. Isley and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield. Interment followed at the Church cemetery. The services were very impressive. The precious little song sang by Mrs. Bennette's Sunday School Class of fifty little beginners will not be forgotten. Upon her request the services were held at Sunset, and just as the sun was sinking behind the western horizon, her body was lowered to its final resting place. This reminded us that her appearance on earth has ended just as God calls a perfect day to an end.

The love of the great crowd which gathered to pay last tribute to this faithful Saint was manifested through the beautiful flowers which covered the grave.

"Well done thou good and faithful Servant." May God help others to live after the ideals of this Godly woman.

HENDERSON.

While sitting by the fireside, after having done his usual morning work about the barnyard, Wesley "Tobey" Henderson, died suddenly January 1, 1923. It is thought that apoplexy was the cause of his death. He was about 64 years of age.

He had resided in Chapel Hill for many years, and was the town's champion "stone fence" builder. The close of another century will find in those stone walls about the University of North Carolina the evidence of the honest work of that honest man. His spare time from his splendid truck farm was used in that kind of work.

Brother Henderson was won to Christ in a series of meetings held here by Rev. J. Lee Johnson a little more than three years ago. He joined the Chapel Hill Christian Church and remained a member and a lover of that church until his death. In his dealings with his fellowman, the Golden Rule was his standard. He was kind to all, and sympathizing to the point of sacrifice toward those less fortunate than he.

Rev. Walter Patten, of the M. E. Church, assisted the writer in the funeral service. Interment in town cemetery.

B. J. HOWARD.

McCAULEY.

Addie M. McCauley, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. McCauley, of Elon College, N. C., died January 15, 1923, age 14 years. The funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Dr. J. O. Atkinson and the body laid away in Elon cemetery. She was a member of Elon College Church and active in Sunday School and in Junior Missionary and Christian Endeavor societies. Addie was a sweet and attractive child, faithful in her home and kind and loving to her companions. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the entire community. May God bless and comfort them.

N. G. NEWMAN.

VARNER.

Mrs. James Varner died at her home in Chapel Hill, N. C., December 10, 1922, at the age of 67 years. She was stricken with paralysis about two weeks before her death, but was thought to be improving until a few minutes before the end came.

She was a member of Damascus Christian Church, and was a devoted wife and mother, and a consecrated Christian. She was so kind, uncomplaining and free from fault finding that it was a joy to be in her presence.

Her husband and one son, Roswell, a young business man of this place, are the surviving members of the family.

Rev. E. L. Baskin, pastor of the Chapel Hill Baptist Church, assisted the writer in the funeral service. Interment was made in the Chapel Hill Cemetery.

WILLIAM HENRY HOLLAND.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church has been bereaved, in the sudden death of Mr. Holland, of a loyal Honorary member; and we offer the following as a sincere expression of our love and our loss:

1. He was a Deacon loyal, devoted, true, always responsive to every call of duty and every service of love.

2. He was, also, a Charter Honorary member of the Ladies' Aid Society, and always a willing and liberal helper in every good work undertaken by the Society.

3. He possessed, in a marked degree, the virtues of a good Christian, a good member, and a good friend.

4. We offer these Resolutions as a token of our high esteem for his life and usefulness, and desire that a copy be sent to his bereaved wife and children, and, also, to the Christian Sun for publication.

SUTTON.

God called Miss Mary E. Sutton, of Altamahaw to be with Him on January 4th. Funeral services were held from Bethlehem Christian Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. C. Crutchfield. Interment followed in the Church cemetery.

Sister Sutton's life had always proved to be one of love for her God. She had been a member of Berea Christian Church for a number of years. She expressed her desire to go to her loved ones who had gone on before her. God spared this, our sister, for seventy years so we again turn our eyes upward and say, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away."

COMBS.

Mr. E. L. He leaves a widow, two sisters and four step-children. We feel that our loss is heaven's gain.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The Population of Palestine.—

A census of Palestine, recently completed under British auspices, shows that there are in the Holy Land: 589,564 Moslems, 83,794 Jews, 73,-026 Christians of various denominations, and 7,028 Druses.

Pennsylvania Governor a Dry.—

There was no cheer for the foes of prohibition in the inaugural address of Gifford Pinchot as governor of Pennsylvania, for the first two items in the extensive program of reform he enunciated were: To drive all saloons out of Pennsylvania, and to prevent and punish bootlegging. "Pennsylvania must either control the criminals who are openly breaking the law or be controlled by them," he declared. "I shall expect and demand from every public servant appointed by me, or subject to removal by me, from the highest to the lowest, entire and ungrudging obedience to the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act."

An International League of Churches.—

The recent meeting in London of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches, was addressed by distinguished clergymen representing various denominations. The Bishop of Oxford, President of the British Council of the World Alliance, declared that judicial procedure and international arbitration under the League of Nations would be ineffective unless behind them there was a growing international Christian enlightenment and a disciplined conscience. He expressed high hopes that the World Alliance was building up such a conscience. Dr. Jowett sent a letter emphasizing the opportunities now opening for fuller intercourse and union with the churches of America. "I am impressed,"he wrote, "with the conviction that the mood of the American churches, their relation to their government, and their outlook upon the affairs of Asia and Europe are very much what they were before America joined us in the Great War. There is in America a great growth of the international sense and a definite craving for international fraternity. I am profoundly convinced that a real international League of Nations will be best and most surely prepared through an International League of Churches. If we can cultivate a really vital and active friendship among the churches, it will be impossible for the people to hold aloof from one another in cold or feverish detachment." A resolution was passed urging the Christian Churches to throw the weight of their influence on the side of peace and good-will among nations and to cooperate in such way as will enable Christian opinion on international relationships to be authoriatively and effectively declared.

Increase in Wealth and Happiness (?) in the United States.—

In 1850 the total wealth of the United States was $7,100,000; the population was 23,200,000, which gave a per cent capita wealth of $308. In 1870 our total wealth had increased to $30,000-000,000, or more than four fold, while the population had increased to 39,000,000, or a little over fifty per cent, the per capita wealth then being $780. In 1890 our total wealth had jumped to $65,000,000,000, our total population to 63,000,000,and our per capita wealth to $1035.

In 1917, twenty seven years later, our total wealth had multiplied to $250,000,000,000, or nearly four hundred per cent, and our total population had climbed to 104,000,000, an increase of considerably less than one hundred per cent, and our per capita wealth to $2,404. It is doubtful if in all history any nation has shown such rapid increase in total and per capita wealth.

Have our morals, our manners and our righteousness increased proportionately with our wealth? Has our benevolence to church and to charity increased proportionately with our wealth? Has our happiness increased proportionately with out wealth? Has the worth of human character and the value of human life increased proportionately with our wealth?

If human welfare, and not human wealth, is the aim of individual experience and of human society, is this end and aim being achieved. Let the wise and knowing crack these nuts, or get the marrow out of these bones.

What is The Cause of Earthquakes?—

We live to learn and it is well we do. Various theories have been held as to the cause of earthquakes, but the very newest is that live mountains cause the earthquakes. By a live mountain is meant a mountain which is still growing. The mountain which is not alive is the one which does not grow any more. The theory is that in a live mountain in its growth, large masses, comprising many thousand of cubic miles, are pressed against each other and held by friction until the strain becomes too great. They then slip and the earthquake is produced. This it is said is the modern theory for earthquakes. It was developed through a study of the great earthquake of 1906 which caused fire that destroyed San Francisco. Since then the correctness of the theory has been demonstrated by further study and observation. Dr. Bailey Willis, Professor of Geology in Stanford University, says that the mountains on the Atlantic are dead, but the mountains on the Pacific coast are alive, hence the greater number of earthquakes on the Pacific coast than on the Atlantic. THE SUN does not vouch the correctness of the theory, but we give it as the latest theory as the cause of earthquakes. It may be that some of our readers will ask, what is the use to study and theorize as to these earthquakes when we can do nothing to stop them or to prevent them, we cannot even predict with any accuracy the time of their coming. These scientific men claim that by perfecting our knowledge of earthquakes we may devise methods of forestalling their disastrous effects by choosing safer locations, or by appropriate methods of construction.

Wilson Foundation Fund Completed.— .....

Zion's Herald, in commenting on the passing of the sixty-sixth birthday of former President Woodrow Wilson, conveys this information: "One of the several celebrations of Mr. Wilson's birthday took the shape of a formal completion of the collecting of $1,000,000 for what is to be known as the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, which is officially described as 'created by public subscription in recognition of the national and international services of Woodrow Wilson, twice President of the United States, who furthered the cause of human freedom and was instrumental in pointing out effective methods for the cooperation of the liberal forces of mankind throughout the world.' The purpose of the Foundation, to which the income from the fund is to be devoted, is officially described in the following words: 'The award or awards from the income of the Foundation will be made from time to time by a nationally constituted committee to the individual or group that has rendered within a specified period meritorious service to democracy, public welfare, liberal thought, or peace through justice.' In the gossip in Washington it is said that, while Mr. Wilson was finally prevailed upon not to forbid the creation of this fund during his lifetime, he gave his assent only upon one condition and said that this would be the only condition he would impose. This condition was that no dollar of the income should ever be expended in the shape of stone for building or any other form of material monument, but that the money must be confined exclusively to a living institution, so that every outcome of the effort should express itself in stimulation to thought and achievement within the world of human minds and human spirits. Mr. Wilson's fellow citizens, irrespective of party differences, congratulate him on his wonderful vitality and prospect of many useful years as well as upon his great and growing fame as the providential leader in a great war and the idealist who tried to bring to the world a great peace." —Exchange.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Some one has well said: "We understand why the vine is pruned, but how we are perplexed when we are being pruned." Yet the purpose is just about the same in each instance.

Prayer is natural to the child of God. It is the unembarrassed talk of the trusting child in communion with his Heavenly Father. Prayer indicates a high degree of intimacy with God. Keep it up at all costs.

Do you do your part to introduce THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the people who do not take the paper in your church. If you will just try, you may work much good for the cause. Thy it—you may succeed. well.

The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN desire a number of canvassers in each church or community, and have an attractive and remunerative plan. Confer with your pastor, he can advise you. Send in your name and address. Do this now and begin work forthwith. Address "The Christian Sun". 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., preached for the Henderson Christian Church on Sunday, Jan. 28th, in the absence of the pastor. He gave his great sermon on The Church and What It Stands For. Those who know this beloved preacher well know that the Henderson people of the Christian Church had a great feast. Come again, brother.

Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., is surely "up to his eyes" in business in the building of that new $250,000 house of worship, and he is pushing to have it ready for occupacy in September next. If ready, we suggest its opening the first or third Sunday in October, as the weather is likely to be very pleasant then. September is usually a hot month, besides storms are frequent in September.

"Prayer is the great spiritual weapon with which we may all fight. It is not hampered by distance, and it is not limited by age or qualification. It links us to the source of unlimited and absolute power, and though all the forces of evil be arrayed against us, the victory is certainly ours. It is a wonderful privilege which we can never overstep, and which we dare not neglect." —A. R. Hay.

President Harper has always been one of the hardest working men in our church, but now for a time it must be harder than ever, but he smiles as he sees the tasks which the burning of the Administration Building is bringing to his shoulders. Let us see that he does not carry it all on his own shoulders. If you can do nothing else, then you may pray for him—pray that he may walk in fellowship and communion with God while he does his work.

Here is some good advice. Read it again and again till you take in its wonderful meaning. It was the late Bishop Phillips Brooks who said: "O, do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come to you by the Grace of God."

E. J. Brown is quoted as having once said: "The man who weeps that those he loves may smile, does something angels would like to do." It takes a man sustained by the Grace of God to do that sort of a thing.

Where is the Extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention to meet this year? Some of our churches ought to be sending in an invitation very soon. You would not like to have the Convention go begging for a place to spend three or four days in an effort to promote the work of the Lord's cause would you?

The Herald of Gospel Liberty announces that Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga., has received and accepted a call to Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and that he will soon take up the work at that place. We wish Bro. Brown every possible success but we are reluctant to give him up on account of his work in Georgia and Bethlehem College at Wadley, Ala.

It is real self-denial when a man or woman has to neglect their own family interests in order to pay their pledges to some good work, but there are men who do it and allow themselves to go without, rather than to let the cause suffer. We saw one do it only recently and he seemed to do it with real willingness, because he was anxious to keep the cause of the church from suffering. So let us all feel and act as nearly as we can.

If you could see how Dr. Atkinson is living now to accomplish the great undertaking of the Christian Church in the enterprise which we call "Men and Millions," you surely would do your best to help him. He is putting his life into that work and he surely deserves the helping hand of every one of our people, but there is a better reason than that that you should take hold with heart and hand and do your best to do your part in this great enterprise, and that is, it gives you an additional opportunity to serve in the vineyard of our Lord and Master. Do your best!

Rev. B. S. Crosby, for many years a minister in the Christian Church, serving churches in various sections of our country, is now located at Greenwich, Mass. He is now preaching for the congregationalists. He says he is in the best of health and enjoying his work, but he says he is preaching the same gospel he preached when he was in the Christian Church. We have rarely known a man who was trained in the Christian ministry among our people, but later went to work for other people, who did not stick to the same old gospel he learned to love and preach among our people. This at least speaks well for the work our people have done in training their ministers as gospel preachers. We are glad to hear from Bro. Crosby again and glad to know, as we expected, that he is preaching the same gospel he once preached among our people. God's blessings be upon you, Bro. Crosby, in all the work you may do for the Master.

In a private letter from Rev. Jno. G. Truitt, now a student in the Princeton Theological Seminary, he says in referring to that institution: "Tomorrow (Feb. 1,) is a day set apart for prayer. All the professors and students gather on equal footing before God's throne of grace. A preparatory meeting is held tonight in Miller Chapel, and before breakfast tomorrow we all meet in the chapel and celebrate the Lord's Supper; after breakfast there is an hour of private confession and prayer—every man in his own room. At ten o'clock some small group prayers; at eleven o'clock an address and prayer by John Timothy Stone, D. D., of Chicago. After a light luncheon some personal conferences led by experts in personal work; at four o'clock, P. M., comes the second address and prayer by Dr. Stone, and at 7:30 comes the final address and prayer hour by Dr. Stone. This is an annual thing and is a day when the power of the Holy Spirit is felt in an awful and compelling manner. For many years nearly all countries have felt the influence of this day. Very little is said about it but only God knows its far-reaching power and how much he blesses on this day." Indeed, we are glad to have such information of such an event. Would that not only our seminaries everywhere, but our churches, too, might seek to have such a season yearly, and even oftener. If there is anything this old world is in need of, it is prayer. Let the example of Princeton be an incentive to our schools generally and churches, too.

Tuesday, Jan. 30th, was pounding day with the pastor of the Henderson Christian Church. Early in the morning of that day an auto arrived from Mount Auburn in Warren County with a lot of fine sweet potatoes from the well known men, the brothers, Jake and Will Kimball. It was a most agreeable treat for new housekeepers. Thank you, brethren. Then later in the day, that is, near 8 o'clock in the evening, the door bell of the parsonage rang most energetically and on going to the door, there was a porch almost full of the members of the Henderson Christian Church and each one seemed to be loaded with a package—it was a real pounding from the church people, and we cerainly will not have to go to the grocery again soon, unless it be for "accidentals," for we are well helped as to most of the ordinary eatables common in most households. Then on Wednesday morning there came a package from Norfolk which was full of useful articles, and by the same parcels post there came a package with many good things inclosed from Windsor, Va. It is surely pleasant to be remembered in this most practical way. Brethren and sisters, we doff the hat and say with all the heart, Thank you, thank you! And in all of this expression of appreciation Mrs. Barrett joins me heartily.

The Virgin Birth of Christ was suggested in these columns as a suitable theme for a Christmas sermon, and in order to stimulate effort in this direction we offered a reward of five dollars in gold for the best sermon on the theme. Only a few responded to this proposition. Revs. W. S. Long, D. D., Rev. J. U. Newman, A. M., Ph. D., and Rev. W. C. Wicker, A. M. D. D., served as judges, and after examining carefully the papers submitted, they unanimously awarded the reward offered to Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., Burlington, N. C., as having presented the best paper on this question. The editor's instructions to the judges were to consider only two points, viz.; 1. The teaching given as to the Virgin Birth. 2. The Literary form in which the teaching was expressed. We are sorry that so few were moved to undertake the task, but glad that the lesson desired was brought out so well as in the paper of Dr. Fleming. The judges acted not on their likes or dislikes for the author of paper they examined, for not one of the judges was given the least intimation as to who was the author of the papers thus passed upon. Dr. Fleming's sermon appears in this issue under the caption: The Angel's Message to Mary.. Be sure to read it carefully and prayerfully and so arm yourself to stand for the miracle of the Virgin Birth of Jesus Christ.

WHY ARE YOU A SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER?

Have you ever stopped to think why you are a Sunday School teacher?

The following was written by a Norfolk High School girl, giving her reasons for wanting to be a Sunday School teacher after taking a week's course in a Sunday School Institute:

"My reasons for wanting to be a Sunday school teacher are numerous. I have always possessed as my highest ambition the desire of teaching. I consider it a privilege to have the ability to talk in public, and to teach others what one knows. I also hold as one of my reasons that God intends for every church member to do some definite work toward promoting His kingdom on earth. I have always been associated with little children and love to be with them and to teach them. I think it very helpful in broadening one's views on life, and it helps one to think of others. If a close study is made of children, the different dispositions, qualifications and sentiments of the children are observed. It helps one to live a Christian life to hold the admiration of the children."

Another writes:

"God means for everybody to teach His word in some way. I prefer Sunday School teaching, especially teaching small children. It is my aim to teach the little children about God and the way He loves them, and also to live a cleaner and purer life. When they come to the age to take Christ as their Saviour, I hope that I have done my best toward helping them to choose the very wise side."

And a third:

"My aim in Sunday School teaching is to lead a sincere Christian life, so as to influence the innocent lives of my pupils to follow the teachings of Christ."

Why are you a Sunday School Teacher? These are the aims of only three, who are, or who expect to be teachers in the Christian Temple Sunday School. Many others could be given with reasons just as splendid. Teachers, like these, realizing their responsibility and facing gladly their opportunity, are going to do a wonderful work for God in this church.—L. M. E.

"The Christian Endeavor at Christianna is doing some fine work. The Sunday School is alive and in almost full force. It is the first time that the school has gone this long during the winter months as I remember." This is just a part of an encouraging letter from Mr. Pressley Ingram, Dadeville, Alabama, secretary of the Christiana Sunday School. The pastor, Rev. G. H. Veazy, also writes of the splendid work that the people there are doing.

MEDITATIONS.

1 COR. 13.

Love is the great virtue. If ye have not love, but have all knowledge, through training, and mountain removing faith, ye are in spite of them, nothing. It seems a hard saying.

And even if ye leap so far beyond the tithe as to give all that ye have to feed the poor, and have not love it profiteth you nothing. Someone has said money is the acid test, but it appears from this that love is.

It is not easy either to love or to have love in this all embracing fashion. Before it the family, sectional, and national prejudices and traditions of generations have to give way. A leader of our day has said, "Race hatred is the greatest sin of the day." Before it every kind and degree of envy must retreat. And comes with it the humility that so beautifully yet astonishingly, graced Jesus. And come with it a faith and a hope that illumine every night, bridge every chasm, and pave the way to the kingdom.

ROMANS 12:1

My Lord, Thou knowest I have no great flocks from which to give Thee the firstlings. Thou knowest I own no ground which orchards grace or grain transforms into a golden sea. Thou knowest, too, I store no gems or jewels, nor contemplate a wealth of stocks as bonds. Oh, wretched man am I, my Lord, for I have nought to give to Thee.

And then I heard a voice, as it were, saying, "Give me your body a living sacrifice, holy."

LUKE 1:35.

And can it be that this is untrue? That no angel appeared to Mary? That Mary was not overshadowed by the power of the Highest? That the babe in her arms, in the manger at Bethlehem, was not the Son of God?

Yet while I read my heart burns within me, and I hear a voice, as it were, saying, "Whom say ye that I am?"

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

JOHN 12:32.

The afternoon sun played in the green tops of the tall poplars that bordered the road side. Fifty yards away quietly flowed the Marne in one of its great bends East of Meaux. About us could be heard the birds' songs and the crickets' chirp. And about us, too, could be heard the deep intonations of great guns, the roar of exploding shells. Far ahead could be heard the peculiar metallic hen call of machine guns and the sporadic rifle fire.

Of course one's thoughts should have been on the dangers and hardships ahead, but one gets used even to them, and besides was there not something after all in the sergeant's observation? We had come suddenly upon a great cross and on it a stark thorn-crowned Christ. The Sergeant was just ahead and he had turned to call "Preacher, there's your Christ!"

At first I was shocked. Then that resentment mastered me. And then I began to ponder the sergeant's statement. The more I thought about it the clearer it became to me the Sergeant was right, only he did not mean to be right.

But my Christ was crucified. He was taken from Tabbatha to Golgotha and crucified between two thieves. This is a stumbling block to the alike of Jews and foolishness to the alike of the Sergeant, but unto us it is the power of God.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

THE MINISTERS THEMSELVES MUST TAKE A HAND IF THIS IS TO BE ACCOMPLISHED.

Whatever concerns a minister in his character and work should have his undivided attention and promptly. The church may help him in some important particulars, but he must take a hand if the highest and best results are to be attained. That there are many in the ministry of all the denominations who need to step up higher in their life and calling and so prepare themselves for larger usefulness and greater helpfulness to their followers we thing cannot be disputed. No question but that we have in all denominations men in the ministry who are not as careful of their conduct and influence before men as they need to be for the sake of not hindering the work they seek to accomplish and so keep personal stumbling blocks out of the way of the progress of the gospel.

The Right Reverend William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts, an Episcopal clergyman, and if we mistake not, a brother of our Sunday school Marion Lawrence of Chicago, in The Southern Churchman of Jan. 6, 1923, did use the theme of "Overcoming False Ideas of the Ministry," and in doing so he presents some most important points for the consideration of the ministers of all denominations. We are therefore republishing it for the benefit of THE SUN'S ministerial readers, and we trust it may be read with much care and thoughtfulness. There can be no sort of question that the ministry has loss standing in many important particulars in the last quarter of a century and that being true, we should give ourselves most earnestly to an effort to so live and demean ourselves before men that they seeing our good works, our solidity of character and service might glorify God. Brethren, it will not be the thing for us to throw the whole matter aside, as if it involved no complications in our lives as ministers of the church of Christ.

Bishop Lawrence says:

What are the opinions of the average person about the church and the ministry? A few days ago I asked a young friend to get out of doors and find what men and women on the street think of ministers: and he found. It is interesting to know how the other half lives, even more interesting to know how the other half thinks. Here is what they say about the church:

"The ministers are clever at sliding through: they don't believe what they say," says a tradesman's wife. "They keep telling what you must-not do; that you can't do this— play cards, go to the theater. They talk about charity and won't give a man a cent or a job. I've had enough of them when I was a girl."

"Ministers aren't interesting," adds an automobile man. "Everything they tell me I know already. The minister never comes into my shop to see; and I am glad of it."

"Ministers are fakirs," answered a Syrian shoemaker, a member of a Congregational Church. "They look after Americans, and think the rest of us are duds. In Syria the ministers are pastors; they know every child; they are the friend of everybody—not so here."

A manager of machine works does not hesitate. "Ninety-nine per cent of the ministers are wishy-washy. They are preaching for money."

The director of an economic foundation expresses his sentiments. "Ministers, especially Episcopalian ministers, don't give me anything in their sermons; they fall back on stock phrases; they don't define terms, but just keep on talking. They talk on the price of coal or industrial and economic conditions which they don't know anything about."

A medical student adds, "Ministers aren't modern; they lack moral courage to speak the truth." And a newspaper woman breaks in, "Why can't ministers be humans?"

It is of no use for me to protest that I have known hundreds of ministers, and that what these people say isn't true. Thousands and thousands are thinking as these people think, and that being the case, they probably have some ground for their opinion.

I may have my idea as to how they got these ideas. Perhaps some narrow-minded, uninteresting parson struck one or the other of them wrong when they were young men, when they were a little too free in their manners or after a good time; and they have cut parson and church ever since; they judge all by one. Then they read the newspaper headlines that feature every scandal and weakness of ministers, every failure and parish row, and that seldom mention the ninety-nine sensible, faithful men.

Granted all this; we haven't yet met the situation. The fact is that in the popular mind the person is not what he should be. When I was a Professor in Pastoral Care, I used to say to the students, "The parson is the 'person,' the one person whom the town looks to as the finest character in the community. Think of your own town. Is the first character the doctor, the judge, the grocer or the minister? You may never attain the position of the best citizen; perhaps you have not got the inherited stuff, or the force; but don't be content until you have tried, and remember that publicity or popularity is not the test, but humility, moral courage, thought of others, public spirit and dogged determination to do and say the right thing as Christ did."

Isn't it about time that the church wake up to the idea that although there are hundreds of strong, high-minded, spiritual leaders in the ministry, and thousands on thousands of good, faithful, somewhat narrow and uninteresting persons, there ought to be a lift of the standard all along the line?

The American people are ambitious, the immigrant often more ambitious than the native-born. They are overcrowding the colleges and pressing into all the higher professions. They are inventing new methods of business, competing in commerce, politics and public service. Their minds are active and as a body they want to do the right thing. But in the stress of competition they, most of them, see only just what is in front of them—"Where are we going from here?" "Just to the next corner," is their answer. And they haven't the time to think of the long stretch of road ahead, where it leads.

This generation offers the biggest chance possible, then, to a man who has the conviction as to where the road leads and who has the power of leadership to make the people go with him. I do not say, "Follow him"; a true leader keeps the people about him, and they move forward together.

Here then is the chance for the ministers: here the opportunity for the churches and especially for the theological seminaries. A layman said to me a while ago, "Our minister is quite a scholar; he is as dry as dust as a preacher; he is no pastor. The children run away from him, and he is afraid of them; he would make an excellent professor in a theological seminary."

Think of it! A sane layman who wants an alert, openminded, interesting rector suggests setting the old man to training the young men preparing for the ministry! Yet much of this has gone on in the past; seminaries have made a sort of "Soldiers' Home" for the old warriors. These days are passing and they have got to pass altogether, and mighty quickly, if the church of Christ is going to get into pace with the rest of the world.

The fact is that in these days the real scholar and teacher has got to be caught young. The colleges know that well, and the seminaries are learning; some of them have gotten on to it as quickly as the colleges. A teacher of divinity students is a trained man, a specialist. He was a scholar in college and is now; but theology is not purely an academic study, it is the revelation of life; he must be human, keen in his interest in youth, in present day thought. He must be a character, a big, vigorous, truth-loving character; he must have vision beyond the lecture room; and the one object of his life and teaching is to bring God to man and man to God; for Christ, the very revelation of God, is the leader, the leader of men through the ages. If young men are to be leaders, they must have teachers who have the intellectual and moral courage to be leaders, of the future leaders.

THESE BE BUSY DAYS.

Whoever lives and serves his day and generation in this the early part of the twentieth century must of necessity be a busy person. Indeed, we sometimes wonder if the devil has not a hand in all this hurry and struggle to get things done in these days of great haste? There is rarely a more effective way to limit the power of any life than to get oneself busy. All of us need to be about the Father's business, but it is a mistake to hurry, hurry all the time, for that keeps us out of communion with our Lord, and whatever may do that is a hindrance to the Christian life and its activities. Undue haste prevents Christian men and women from doing their real work in an effective way, and that means pood work and not much of that can be done in a truly Christian way.

Not but a short while ago the papers told of an interesting case of the devil's planning to keep a man from being highly useful in a certain city. It is said that—

"The devil met one of his local subordinates on the street of an American city not long ago and said to him, "Well, how are things getting along in this town?"

"For the first time since I've been stationed here." said the subdevil, "They're looking pretty badly."

"What's the matter;"

"See that fellow across the street?"

"Yes, What about him?"

"Well, in some way he has got hold of a grain of real, undiluted concentrated truth. That grain of truth is like a deadly bomb. If he uses it rightly he can blow up our whole business here."

The devil looked carefully at the man on the opposite side of the street, and then he said to his subdevil:

"I'll tell you how to handle him. You tempt him to take that grain of truth and organize it. Make it the basis of some kind of a society, or lodge, or club. Then he'll spend his time running the club and he will not have any time to use the truth against us."

Then the reporter declared:

"From the latest reports I hear that the man yielded to the temptation and that the devil's plan is working beautifully. The grain of truth which became the nucleus of the organization which he founded, lies in a glass case, unused, in a corner of the gentleman's office in the building which the new organization erected. Some day the man who introduced that organization may take it out and use it; but just now he is too busy taking care of his organization to do any extra work, and so the truth, which he had, lies helpless and bleeding because it has no one to take it to the people who so much need it.

That man was sidetracked, and the devil did it! He saw that the truth must be handicapped and put out of active service, or his kingdom of darkness would be greatly retarded, if not indeed destroyed. And the devil did not organize a society, or a club, in order to stop the man who had a grain of truth. He simply sidetracked him by getting him to work on another line. He made him think that organizing a society would enable him to do a larger work than he could do by simply using the truth in the various places where he might have opportunity to do so. And his plan was quite a success, for getting the man to organize a society got his attention drawn away from the precious truth he possessed. He thought his new organization would help him to do great things with his truth, and so it might if he had not allowed the organization to take all of his time and strength, so leaving the truth paralyzed and helpless. Instead of using the truth for the pulling down of the strongholds of the devil's kingdom, the devil was sharp enough to induce the man to give up the truth under the false hope that the new society would make that truth mighty in the work of giving light to all the people. But just as in the case of many another man, the truth was left, and an organization was substituted which was itself helpless because it did not have the truth as its main dependence, and the truth was also helpless because it had no one to take it about from place to place. So the devil's trick to get the man sidetracked worked in a wonderful way, it not only rendered the man usless to the cause of righteousness, but it also paralyzed the truth, so hiding it away in a corner. You see the truth has no way to go anywhere, except as some person will carry it. In this case the man who had it was induced to go aside and give his time to something else, and it proved a handicap to him, and his course at the same time laid the truth away, as one said, in a case for safe keeping, and the outcome of it all was a great loss to the cause for which that man was laboring. Is it not strange that a man of sense will allow himself to be hoodwinked into doing nothing, and that when he has a great opportunity for real service in the cause of Christ.

Truth is the most precious jewel in the great cluster of God's gems. It is nearer and dearer to the great Heart of God than any of His creations, and yet we lay it aside, or hide it in a corner, and then we expect great things to come to pass, just as if the truth were given a chance to strike at the monster with all its power. The sword is helpless apart from the hand of the soldier, but in the hand of a strong and brave soldier, there is no telling what the sword of truth may do in the suppression of sin and for the exaltation of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world.

Let us learn this lesson once for all, the truth in the hand and heart of a true child of God is mightier than all mere organizations. Truth is the living power of the universe with God as its source and His glory as its ultimate aim.

It has well been said that at the building of Martin Luther that truth leaped over the cloister walls and challenged every man to make her his guest; aroused every intelligence to acts of private judgment; changed a dependent, recipient people into a reflecting, inquiring people; lifted each human being out of the castles of the Middle Ages, to endow him with individuality, and to summon man to stand forth as man. Then the world heaved with the fervent conflict of human opinion.

Thus did the mind of George Fox arrive at the conclusion that truth is to be sought by listening to the voice of God in the soul. Not the learning of the university, not the Roman see, not the English Church, not Dissenters, not the outward world, can lead to a fixed rule of morality. The law in the heart must be received without prejudice, cherished without mixture and obeyed without fear, and then truth will not be crushed to the dust, but will have its seat on the throne of the human mind and heart.

PROFESSOR BATESON ON EVOLUTION.

Prof. William Bateson is connected with the John Innes Horticultural Institution, Weston, London, S. W., 19, England, and is a noted biologist. "Science," Vol. LV, No. 1412, January 20, 1922, contains an article from him on the subject, "Evolutionary Faith and Modern Doubts." It is an address delivered before the American Association for the Advancement of Science. The article contains terms which would not be familiar to the non-technical reader. But many things he says will be appreciated by us all, in view of the present revival of debate on Evolution. Among them we give the following quotations: "So we went on talking about evolution. That is barely forty years ago; today we feel silence to be the safer course." "Discussion of evolution came to an end because it was obvious that no progress was being made." "When students of other sciences ask us what is now currently believed about the origin of species, we have no clear answer to give, faith has given place to agnosticism for reasons which . . . . may be profitable to consider. Where precisely has the difficulty arisen? Though the reasons for our reticence are many and present themselves in various forms, they are in essence one; that as we have come to know more of living things and their properties, we have become more and more impressed with the inapplicability of the evidence to these questions of origin. There is no apparatus which can be brought to bear on them which promises any immediate solution."

"What glorious assumption went without rebuke! Regardless of the obvious consideration that 'modification by descent' must be a chemical process, and that of the principles governing chemistry, science has neither hint, nor surmise, nor even an empirical observation of its workings, professed men of science offered very confidently positive opinions on these nebulous topics, which would now scarcely pass muster in a newspaper or a sermon. It is a wholesome sign of return to sense that these debates have been suspended."

"Biological science has returned to its rightful place, investigation of the structure and the properties of the concrete and visible world. But that particular and essential bit of theory of evolution which is concerned with the origin and nature of species remains utterly mysterious."

There are many such expressions by this noted and careful scientist, and they all go to show that while the specialists of forty years ago were most certain of their evolutionary theories, the solid scientists of today declare we do not know the orgin of species, and the office of biology and of all science is to deal with realities, things as they are. It is clear, therefore, that editors and preachers who are so dogmatic and sure of the theory of evolution are talking without knowledge, and professed scientists who are talking of evolution as a cock-sure thing show that they are seconds, and only copy and assert as original what they have only borrowed from another. All this is important in the present revival of the debate.—Presbyterian.

"GETTING ALONG."

For some reason I was impressed the other day with the extreme convenience of this expression and the frequency of its use. Really, our vocabulary would be impoverished without these two words that in themselves mean little and may be employed in diverse ways.

"I wonder," mused Jeanette, surveying last year's headgear with a critical eye, "whether I can get along without a new hat this spring!"

"I should think that you could if you just made up your mind to. One can get along without most things in this world if one only thinks so."

Jeanette turned her thoughful gaze to me. She had that far-off look that denotes a moralizing or philosophical mood.

"Then it's merely an attitude of mind?"

"What?"

"Oh, hats and people—and perhaps husbands. I never looked at it in this way before, but honestly, life is made up with getting along without and getting along with."

"That's true."

"Mary Tompkins gets along with that lazy husband of hers by working twice as hard herself and letting him sleep late in the morning."

"That's because she loves him."

"She thinks she does it for love; but it really isn't affection. It's easier on the whole to work than it is to make him work. 'Getting along' is sometimes a synonym of mental sloth."

I gazed at Jeanette in astonishment.

"You're a pessimist."

"No, I'm a philosopher. Getting along with something is shiftlessness, pure and simple."

"It doesn't apply to hats."

Jeanette whirled on her hand her last year's brown straw with a wing stuck up jauntily.

"No, not to hats. I never thought of how many significations that phrase has. Now, it isn't creditable to put up with a dirty house and slovenly children as Mame Jones does, with the excuse that she can 'get along' that way as well as any other, and it saves a lot of trouble and soap and backaches. But it is highly to my credit if I make the hat do another season and give the money I save to the poor babies who are starving over in France."

Mother came in at that moment.

"Oh, girls, I've been over to see Miss Lyon! Did you ever see anything quite so beautiful as the way she gets along with her deaf old father? And he's so cross when she isn't there. I don't see anything to laugh at."

"There isn't anything, dear," Jeanette explained, "except that we were just talking about the use of that expression. Miss Lyon gets along with her difficult relative, but she has to get along on a very small income."

Mother's eyes danced in her merry way. "But they say that her brother is getting along splendidly in business," she commented.

"While her father is getting along in years," gasped Jeanette. "Oh, the beauties of the English tongue!"

Father's voice was heard in the hall.

"Aren't you people ever going to bed?" he queried. "It's getting along toward midnight. I never knew any women who could talk so much."

And then he wondered why a peal of laughter greeted his remarks in a frivolous manner.

"Get along to bed yourself," was mother's quick retort, for mother was the brightest of us all when she caught the spirit of a thing.—Exchange.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There is always an explanation for human experience; but the explanation is often delayed. This is truer of unpleasant experiences than of pleasant experiences. It was easier to understand the birth of Jesus, at the time, than the crucifixtion of Jesus; but centuries since Calvary's tragedy have revealed its meaning not only to Jesus, but to His disciples and the world. Yorktown explains Valley Forge. The Resurrection explains the crucifixtion. Maternity finds its joy in a happy family, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." The harvests of the world grow out of death; it is the harvest that explains the struggle of the seed through death up to golden grain and becomes fruit.

The feeling of the people, under what seems to them the burden of Men and Millions, will find a satisfactory experience in the final payment of pledges. Debt is like a boil. It worries while it is unpaid. It seems larger than it is. It is moving toward the time of payment. The only remedy for a boil is to wait patiently for its full development and the final discharge of its feeling. But there is no time so painless and sweet as when the core is delivered and the debt is paid. No matter how much one worries over a pledge; no matter how painful it is to meet obligation; it is a sweet experience when the pledge is paid. The only way to get the bad feeling out of the system is to nurse the obligation patiently and look forward to the full payment of the pledges. The longer the final day is postponed the worse the painful feeling: to leave it unpaid is to poison the whole future. Bankruptcy does not dissolve the moral obligation; it simply suspends the legal obligation. Every member who made a pledge to Men and Millions should hold the obligation sacred, ask the Lord to help in the payment of it, and then work faithfully and patiently to that end. It is a waste of effort and money to wait for Captains and helpers to urge payment of Men and Million pledges; but it is the only alternative, unless those who subscribed pay without notice.

Two other things are worthy of prayerful consideration. First, the Men and Millions Campaign was the Christian Movement in the interest of the Kingdom and not in the interest of persons. That makes it a worthy obligation upon all who subscribed, and upon those who did not subscribe. All are under the same obligation to the Kingdom; but when the obligation is assumed by the individual it becomes doubly binding. Second, the reputation of the church is involved in the obligation it assumes through its members. A nation that repudiates an honest debt to another nation loses standing with the nations of the word. The world estimates the people of God by the way they pay their debts. The severest criticism, and the most common, is that church members are slow to pay Bills. This criticism is unjust in large measure; but it shows that the world is not measuring church members by their motives, their purposes, their endeavors, but by their outward acts. The eye of man looks on the outward: God looks at the heart. But in this present world we are dealing with men, living among men, and being judged by men. The cause of Jesus Christ and the reputation of the church are both involved in Men and Million pledges. It is not simply a commercial obligation; it is a Christian obligation. Stand by the pledge until it is paid in full.

ELON LETTER.

Events have been moving fast since the Elon Letter of last week was written. Mr. and Mrs. M. Orban, Jr. of California, sent us $5,000 to aid in rebuilding and Mrs. H. W. Phillips, Hardeeville, S. C., sent one thousand dollars in cash. Numerous friends and Alumni have sent in smaller gifts. Mr. C. C. Howell, Jacksonville, Fla., was the first Alumnus to send his check. It was for $100.00. Mrs. J. B. Gay, Franklin, Va., also sent her check for $100 and a subscription for $400 more. A strict account of every donation is being kept and in due season the names and amounts will be printed in a special bulletin.

A great mass meeting was held in Burlington on Sunday afternoon. Col. F. L. Williamson presided. Dr. Thomas F. Opie, Mr. Jno. M. Cook, Hon. E. S. Parker, Jr., Mr. W. E. Sharpe, Dr. W. B. North, and the writer took part. It was a "pep" meeting and gave fine spiritual impetus to the efficient organization Mr. W. E. Sharpe is setting up to raise Alamance County's $100,000 for the rebuilding campaign.

The Building Committee gave careful consideration to choosing the architect and awarded the work to Mr. Herbert B. Hunter. Mr. Hunter is experienced in College work and is very popular in Alamance County. It is highly appropriate that he should furnish the plans for the Administration Building which is to be erected by Alamance County people and it is to be known as Alamance Hall by vote of the Board of Trustees. Mr. Hunter has already begun his work. His first duty is to furnish a complete layout of the campus for the future development of the plant.

The Emergency Fund Committee of which Col. E. E. Holland is chairman is shortly to meet in Suffolk to formulate general plans for raising the money. It is a stupendous undertaking, but one I am sure our people will rally to in the heroic spirit of Christian sacrifice. Our people are folks—they are.

Unexpected friends have sprung up for Elon in this emergency. Almost every day has brought an exhilarating piece of comfort and sympathy from people outside our connection. Here is a sample from the Editor of the Salisbury, (N. C.) Post, Mr. J. F. Henley. He sent his check for ten dollars and published the note below editorially in his paper.

The College at Elon.
(The Salisbury Post)

"Some years ago we were in school at a military school that operated in the eastern section of the State, and in going to and from school we passed by Elon College. The place was not very inviting. It was a clearing in the woods where a little band of earnest people had their hearts set on a school. We have taken an interest in the growth and development of that school. During the years we have passed by Elon many, many times and we never fail to take a look at the campus, and note the upward trend of all around. Elon has in these years become a great institution. It has done a wonderfully fine work. It now suffers from a fire loss and would come back bigger and better, and it will, for the spirit which built this institution, the spirit which brought it thus far, will carry it on to higher and nobler things.

"The college authorities propose to raise $600,000, half of this sum will go to rebuild the Administration Building recently destroyed by fire, and the other half will go to the endownment. It cannot be much, but we want to have a small hand in the rebuilding of this school; when the new Elon arises from the ashes we want to think that we had some small part in its rebuilding."

Another splendid editorial utterance was that in The Raleigh Times, from which I quote as follows:

Elon College in Need of Help
(The Raleigh Times)

"Elon College, which lost its administration building last week by fire, faces a staggering loss in physical equipment in the gamest sort of fashion. The lost records of the institution may not be replaced; the insurance covers hardly a third of the monetary loss and with building costs so much higher than when the part of its plant that has been destroyed was built, the cash in hand is hardly more than a drop in the bucket.

"But Elon expects to prove its right to continued existence by replacing the burned building with four others. This much was needed. It now becomes essential that the college to hold its own, to say nothing of going forward, must secure funds which a few years ago it would have been impossible to raise.

"But with Trinity and Wake Forest College adding to their endownment these days by millions, Lenoir College receiving contributions by the hundreds of thousands and Guilford's finances greatly on the mend, there seems no reason to believe that the members of the Christian Church will allow their higher educational institution to fall hopelessly behind the academic procession.

"North Carolina needs all of its educational facilities. The State needs Elon College,—its enrollment shows this need. The building fund which Elon proposes to straightway set about raising is a good place for all believers in education, whether of Elon's doctrinal belief or not, to put some of their surplus money."

A third and final editorial for this time comes from The Schoolmaster, the official organ of The Alamance County Schoolmasters' Club. It reads thus:

The Opportunity of Alamance
(The School master)

"A severe loss was sustained when the Administration building at Elon College was burned a short time ago. It was a loss to Elon, to the Christian denomination, to Alamance County, and to the cause of higher education generally, especially Christian education.

In view of that fact that valiant efforts are being made today by many to discredit the teachings of Christ, it is a serious thing when the work at a Christian institution is interrupted. At present the rector of a fashionable Fifth Avenue church, New York City, is under fire because of his bold denial of the divinity of Christ. In connection with this denial he intimated, that the young college man of today considers such teaching "bunk". We do not believe that the young man who has been trained under Christian influence has any such ideas. The prattling of such a bigot could go unnoticed if it were not for the fact that such wide publicity is usually given to such utterances as herein referred to.

"The people of Alamance realize the loss the county has sustained. Already mass meetings have been held and help has been promised

Elon by the citizens of the county. The men who have led in this work deserve much praise. Citizens of Alamance, you can not make a better investment than a substantial donation for the work at Elon. Money spent for training young men and young women for Christian citizenship will yield bigger and better returns than a like amount invested in any other way. In helping Elon rebuild you are merely building in a larger way for yourselves.

"We understand that the Board of Trustees of Elon have decided to undertake immediately a program of extensive improvement. Elon is to be congratulated for this determined spirit on the part of her governing authorities. Alamance County should appreciate the attitude of Elon authorities, and should show this appreciation by a hearty response to the suggestion that funds be raised in the county to help Elon rebuild. We believe that such response will be made. Alamance has an opportunity to serve."

I call upon the people to seek the divine leadership in their efforts to aid the cause of Christian Education in our church. The hour of destiny has struck. God's people will not fail His work. Forward they will go. Forward is the only direction they can go.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

This is a crucial hour in the educational program of the Christian Church. This is especially true with reference to the educational policies and plans in the far South. The need of a denominational college in Georgia and Alabama is imperative. Bethlehem College will meet the demands of this crucial hour if the people of the Christian Church meet the demands of Bethlehem College.

It is simply impossible to build a college unless provision is made for more money than will accrue from Men and Millions. This money will help materially in starting the building; but it will not meet one tenth of the financial demands upon the college. There is an argument current that this money is all that is needed, but I cannot imagine a man who is thoughtless enough to advance such an argument. Even a child ought to know better. I am sick, and tired, of hearing such flimsy excuses. People want to hide behind this excuse in order to avoid further financial obligations. But those who are interested in the college will not allow the fact that they have subscribed to Men and Millions keep them from giving to this worthy cause.

It is obvious that there are some members of the Christian Church who cannot give large amounts to this cause; but if all the members (and preachers) will do all they can, we will raise a sufficient amount of money to meet the immediate demand upon the college.

The future of Bethlehem College is in the hands of the people of Christian Church. Its promises, potentialities, and possibilities are tied up in the pocketbooks of the people. And our high hopes, our great anticipations, and our ideals will be reduced to a howling mockery unless the pocketbooks of our people are ungirdled and our possessions are dedicated to the needs of the college. The college can mean nothing to the Christian Church, to the present or future generations, unless it has the financial support of our people. On the other hand, it will be a great power for good if the people will make it a reality.

Our hearts articulate with great anticipation as we look forward to the realization of an ideal that has been cherished for a quarter of a century by our people of the far South. How the emotions of our souls find expression in words and deeds as we ponder the potentialities and possibilities of Bethlehem College. What a moulder of life and character it will be! It will take the feet of young men and young women out of the road that leads to indolence and failure and place them in the road that leads to success and happiness. It will supplant the undesirable qualities of inefficiency with the power of leadership and efficiency. The uncouth lives of boys and girls will be transformed. Parents will rejoice over the beautiful lives and signal achievements of their sons and daughters. Manhood and womanhood will be crowned with the fruits of honesty and integrity, and once more the whole life will be in harmony with the great purpose of God.

Who is it that can withhold his money from such a worthy cause? It cannot be said that a man has fully given himself to God if he wilfully withholds his money from God's enterprises. His action reduces his profession to chilling formality. God wants to spiritualize our lives. And when our lives are spiritualized, our money will assume the likeness of its possessor.

Brethren and beloved, will you help build Bethlehem College? Will you ask God what He would have you give? When the amount is determined, send a check to the undersigned. Or if you are not in a position to send check, send your pledge for some amount. The subscriptions are to be made payable in five annual installments, the subscriber being ask to sign a pledge for each installment.

A COLLEGE REGULATION.

What is known on the campus as the sixty per cent rule went into effect with the opening of the Spring Semester in January. According to this rule any student failing to pass sixty per cent of the Fall Semester's work is not allowed to return to college after the holidays. Under this rule fourteen young people who were here in December are not here now.

This regulation is not original with Elon. Many colleges have enforced it for many years and have found that experience justifies its continuance. Trinity College of Durham this year excluded sixty persons under this rule and the University of California 521. A few years ago Washington and Lee dropped about four hundred at one time.

There are two main reasons for such a regulation. It is unfair to parents to spend money on sons and daughters who have demonstrated their inability to profit by college education. It is not expected that all college students will be scholars, but a man who does not pass three out of five courses, when the passing mark is 70, can invest his money to better advantages in some other direction than in attempting to continue longer in college. There are a few cases of plodding students who might be injured by such a rule, but not a single one of that character was caught by the Elon drag-net this time. Every one excluded had failed to apply himself or herself properly.

The other reason is that students who fail properly to apply themselves make it hard for others to do their best. Maroon and Gold, the college student publication, in its news columns and editorially, stood solidly by the College in enforcing the rule.

But not all those excluded approved the rule and as is usual blamed the college or the faculty or some individual for their misfortune. One guardian wrote his high approval. He expressed regret over his ward's having to leave, but he rejoiced that Elon had taken such a stand and promised to send another ward here in the future.

If the friends of Elon knew the anxious care with which every matter of discipline is approached by the faculty here there would be larger sympathy for the college in its difficult work and earnest prayers would constantly ascend on its behalf.

The readers of this letter will gladly learn that while fourteen students were unable to return after the holidays, sixteen new ones were ready to take their places. It is not proper however to judge a college by its enrollment nor by its wealth, but by the character of its product. I am ready to compare Elon Alumni, man for man, or woman for woman, with the alumni of any college anywhere and Elon will not suffer by the comparison. I married one of them and know what I am talking about.

VALLEY LETTER.

Part of the Christmas holidays was spent attending Christmas services in my field. Appropriate and beautiful services were held at Bethlehem, Dry Run, Concord, and Whistler's Chapel. I could not be at the services at Whistler's Chapel, but have been told they had an excellent program. Those that I attended were certainly fine—I have never seen better. Bethlehem rememberd thir pastor on that occasion with a gift of $15.25; Dry Run followed suit with $17.25; Concord came along with several presents for the pastor and his family. All these gifts were very much appreciated indeed. No one but a pastor knows how good a pastor feels to be thus remembered by the people to whom he tries to minister.

I also greatly enjoyed a Christmas service at Antioch where I used to be pastor.

As I am in the mood just now to tell of the good things that have come my way lately I must not fail to mention the constant and long drawn out pounding kept up by the people of my churches this year. To name the givers and the gifts would make too long a list. The folks at Joppa, Dry Run, Timber Ridge, and Mayland deserve special mention along this line, though there have been others. In addition, an organized pounding from there dropped in on us one night last week. We appreciate the visitors as well as the numerous and valuable packages they brought.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Timber Ridge sent us a Christmas present of a beautiful quilt—one of their own make. It is certainly a beauty, as well as a real comfort these winter nights. We are so glad thus to be remembered by the good ladies at Timber Ridge.

The whole Andes family gives a unanimous vote of thanks to our friends for all these kind remembrances and substantial expressions of good will. May the Lord bless them all and use us all together in his service.

I have recently had the pleasure of being with Rev. W. C. Hook in a revival meeting at New Hope. I was pastor there several years ago, and it was a pleasure to meet old friends again, and learn new ones too.

THE SUN'S PULPIT

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE TO MARY.*

"And the angel answered and said unto her," 'The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.' "—Luke 1:35.

Looking down the vista of time from a prophetic peak many years before the Holy Ghost came upon the virgin Mary and the power of the Most High overshadowed her and she conceived and gave birth to the Child Jesus, the prophet, Isaiah, foretold the event in a most wonderful and specific manner. "Behold," says he, "A virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Immanuel means "God with us." In this far off prophetic utterance before the event, we see a virgin mother, a son born, and God with us in human form.

And again the prophet says: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called, Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and justice from henceforth even forever." This prophecy fits in admirably with the Angel's announcement to Mary, and with the birth of the virgin child born to Mary.

The striking fulfillment of this wonderful prophecy is beautifully told by Luke the evangelist, who says, "And the angel came unto her and said, 'Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women.' " And when she saw him she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, 'Fear not for thou hast found favor with God. And behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.' "

"Then," said Mary to the angel, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?"

"And the angel answered and said unto her, 'The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.' "

One of the most important elements in the life of Christ is his miraculous birth.

The gospels according to Matthew and Luke record narratives of the birth of Jesus. The gospels according to Mark and John omit it; but John begins with the doctrine of Christ's pre-existence which accords with the idea of the miraculous birth as declared by Matthew and Luke.

John says, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God." In these words we see the pre-existence of Christ before his birth in human form. John also tells us, "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory as the only begotton Son of the Father) full of grace and truth."

This statement by John who knew Jesus, perhaps, better than any other man, fits in very harmoniously with Matthew's and Luke's account of the miraculous birth of Jesus. And the gospel according to Mark declares Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. His opening sentence is, "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." This is the same Jesus, the Son of God, whose pre-existence is declared by John and whose miraculous birth is recorded by Matthew and Luke.

The fullest account of the birth of Jesus is recorded by Luke. The narrative is exquisitely and beautifully told. Its purity and sweetness captivates the heart, its sincerity charms the intellect.

Matthew and Luke both declared that Jesus was conceived by Mary, his mother in her virginity by the immediate presence and energy of the Holy Ghost and the power of the Most High. John declares the pre-existence of Jesus and all four of the evangelists declare that Jesus is the Son of God.

Then Christ's birth, his coming into the world by way of the virgin birth, was the manifestation of God in the flesh; and the life he lived, and what we find him to be in life, death, and the resurrection attest his miraculous birth: for no mere man could have lived, wrought, died and arose from the dead as he did. His virgin birth is seen not only in the recorded narratives of his birth; but also in the recorded life he lived; deeds he did; death he died. His virgin birth—his Divinity— is seen in his character and personality manifested in his life.

The evangelists, Matthew and Luke, who record the narratives of Christ's miraculous birth are accredited and trust-worthy writers. Their records are authentic and genuine. Matthew was one of the original twelve disciples that followed Jesus day in and day out. He was a Jew and originally a tax collector. A word from Jesus redeemed him from sin, and from his sordid and despised position. Touched by the love of Jesus and drawn as if by hooks of steel by Christ's command, "Follow me" he sprang from his place, a despised tax-collector to an apostle of Christ. His obscurity, his profession of tax-collector and his unpopularity help to make his authority indisputable. That he records the facts of Christ's birth and life as he knew them is unquestioned. He was a good and truthful man; therefore his record must be true; and he in speaking of Mary, before she and Joseph, to whom she was espoused, came together says, Mary "Was found with child of the Holy Ghost."

Luke was not one of the twelve disciples. He was not even a Jew; but a Gentile, and hence had no preconceived ideas or notions of the coming of the Jewish Messiah. He was a convert to the Christian faith and an evangelist. His name Loukos in Greek, and Lucauus in Latin, indicates that he may have descended from heathen ancestors. He was a physician, a scholar, and a writer of marked ability. He was a trusted companion of Paul and the author of the gospel which bears his name and The Acts of the Apostles. The high degree of his education is seen and proved by his classical style and his explicit and learned details on various subjects. He was a good Greek scholar, an accomplished writer, a keen observer, and unassuming historian, a well instructed and skillful physician. The gospel according to Luke is the most literary of the gospels.

Luke is a credible and trust-worthy writer. The gospel according to him has stood the test as to genuineness and authenticity. His record of the birth of Christ is not called in question; and he says, "The angel said unto Mary, 'the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; and therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.' "

We see here the recorded evidence of Jew and Gentile—Matthew and Luke—witnessing to the virgin birth of Jesus. And when Jesus was born of Mary as announced by the angel; and in Bethlehem as foretold by prophecy, Jew and Gentile were told of his birth; and Jew and Gentile sought his manger and worshipped at his feet. To the Jews, shepherds, an angel told of his birth and heavens' choir sang his praise. To the Gentiles, wise men of the East, the Star in the East told of His birth and guided them to where he lay with Mary his mother. Singularly, Matthew, a Jew, tells of the Star and of the coming of the wise men, Gentiles, to the infant Jesus; while Luke a Gentile tells of the angels visit to the shepherds, Jews, and of their going to Bethlehem to see the Child, Jesus Christ.

The New Testament was written in the Greek language and translated out of that language into the English tongue. An examination of the Greek text and several translations—five in all—show that they all concur in the miraculous birth of Jesus. There is hearty unanimity and agreement among the translators in the translations consulted and with the original Greek text, as to facts stated regarding the birth of Jesus. They all concur regarding the angel's appearance and the message he brought to Mary, the mother to be of Jesus. In the scene under consideration we have an angel, the virgin Mary, the Holy Ghost, the power of the Highest, and the birth of a child called the Son of God.

The angel was Gabriel. In Jewish and Christian tradition, Gabriel has been denominated an arch-angel of God—the mighty one or herald of God. He was sent to Daniel to explain a vision and to communicate the prediction of the seventy weeks. He announced the birth of John the Baptist to Zacharias and the birth of Jesus to the virgin Mary. He said to Zacharias "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God." To Mary he said, "Hail, thou art highly favored, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women."

Mary was a descendent of Abraham and David and hence of the family royal from which the promised and predicted Messiah was to come.

She was espoused to Joseph, but Joseph had not taken her to wife at the time the angel Gabriel appeared to her. She was the mother—the virgin mother—of Jesus. She holds a place in the heart of humanity that no other woman holds; not only from what she was as a woman, but also as the mother of her illustrious son, Jesus the Son of God.

In prose, poetry, painting and praise she stands supreme among women.

To the angel's announcement that, "Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son and shall call his name Jesus" Mary said, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?"

There is no unbelief, but a taking of thy great fact for granted. "The import of the question seems to be, on what principle is this to be so contrary to the hither-to unbroken law of human generation." In Mary's question, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" she declared her virginity and the angel knew and accepted her statement as truth and he explained to her that very point in mysterious detail.

The angel said unto her, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

How exquisite! How delicate! How efficacious! The curtains are drawn. There is deep mystery. The formation of every babe and the entrance of the spirit of life into it is a great mystery and especially so was the formation of the child Jesus.

But let us not stagger at mysteries. Let us notice the exquisite wording of the angel, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee." All things are possible with such a presence, energy and power.

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. And the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." On this moving, hovering or brooding upon or over the face of the waters order came out of a world that was without form and void by the word and power of the Creator, God. It so, then why should it be thought a thing incredible that the Almighty God, through and by the Holy Ghost coming upon the virgin Mary and the power of the Most High overshadowing her, enable her, who knew not a man, to conceive and bring forth a son; The angel expressly said to Mary, "That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." God who created the heavens and the earth and who made man out of the dust of the ground without the presence and aid of man or woman, could certainly generate a child in a virgins womb, if he willed so to do.

That Jesus Christ is the Son of God, that he is Divine and eternal is clear from the New Testament; and the word "holy" thing denoted the singularity and sanctity of his birth. The evidence is clear that Mary was the mother of Jesus; that she was a virgin; and that God was his Father.

When Jesus was baptized, Matthew, Mark and Luke record the fact of the descent upon him of the Spirit of God—Matthew—the spirit—Mark; the Holy Ghost—Luke; "Like a dove" and a voice coming out of or from heaven that owned Jesus as "My beloved Son" and declared, "In Him I am well pleased."

And when Jesus was transfigured, the same witnesses record the fact of his transfiguration, of a bright cloud that overshadowed Jesus, Peter, James and John, and that out of that bright cloud, behold, there came a voice saying, "This is my beloved Son; hear him."

Peter who was an eye witness of the transfiguration of Jesus says in speaking of Christ and that scene: "For he received from God, the Father, honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And John, the beloved disciple records the fact that once when the soul of Jesus was troubled and he prayed, "Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name." "Then came there a voice from heaven saying, 'I have both glorified it and will glorify it again.'" These voices were God's voice witnessing to and for His Son, Jesus.

Jesus, when he dwelt among men recognized and claimed God as his Father and declared his pre-existence with God before the world was. He says in speaking to and of God, his Father, "I came out from Thee" and in speaking of his return to God, his Father, after his sojourn upon earth says, "I come to Thee."

Wonderful witnessing of Father, Son and Holy Ghost in these scenes and declarations.

Josephus, a Jewish historian, speaks of Jesus as "a wise man; if it be lawful to call him a man; for he was a doer of wonderful works, and a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure." He further states that "He drew over to him both many of the Jews and of the Gentiles. He was the Christ." He says that at the suggestion of the principal men among them, Pilate condemned him to the cross; and that he appeared alive again on the third day to them that loved him; and that the tribe of Christians so named from him is not extinct at his day." Secular history speaks of Jesus, a Hebrew born in Palestine, the land of the Jews, in the days of Augustus;" and of teachers who told the people of His Divine father-hood and about "visions of human brother-hood," and of his having incurred the displeasure of his people was crucified in the reign of Tiberius.

Not to accept the statement of Luke regarding the birth of Jesus makes us falsify Luke: for he expressly says that he had accurately investigated the truth of the account communicated and made use of statements of eye witnesses; and as to the statement of Matthew if we do not accept it, we charge him with being a false witness; and hence a bad and untruthful man. Not to accept the statement of Luke and other New Testament writers as to the birth of Jesus Christ puts us in a worse dilema than to accept it; for if we refuse to accept their statements, then we have Jesus Christ as the unexplained mystery of the ages. If Jesus Christ was not the Son of God, conceived of the Holy Ghost and the power of the Most High, and born of the virgin Mary, then he must have been a man just as other men are. But in birth, life and death and after death he was not as other men. Creditable witnesses and authentic historians declare that he was not as other men are. He is the miracle of the ages. He is supreme in all fields of thought and action. His worship grows young with the ages. He stands supreme. There is none other like him in all the annals of time. Inanimate nature heard and obeyed his voice. The wind and the sea and the barren fig tree obeyed his command and water at his word blushed into wine. In his presence disease fled, the deaf heard, the dumb spoke, the blind saw, the dead lived.

The realms of nature and the realms of the spirit were all one to him so far as his power and word were concerned. He saw into the spiritual as clearly as he saw into the natural. To him in his deeds of love, mercy and power there was no boundary-line between what we call the natural and the supernatural. He was all powerful in both realms. He changed the currents of the world's thought and action. Among the enlightened nations of the earth, time is dated from his birth—before or after—whether we will or not we are compelled to recognize his birth. All of our legal papers, wills, bequests, legacies, contracts and letters bear the imprint of his birth.

The deed to your house and land is worthless without the date of his birth. The money we use, whether green-backs, silver or goal is worthless as money, unless it bears the stamp of his birth.

His birthday is remembered and kept by millions of people. No other birthday is remembered and kept by so many. Countless multitudes on every side of the globe meet week after week to worship and to sing his praise. He is and has been the consolation, comfort and support of millions upon millions of people. Even in the Catecombs of Rome where the early Christians took refuge in times of persecution and where they met in secret to celebrate the ceremonies of the Christian religion, are found mosaics and carvings on the walls which tell of their faith, hope and love in Christ. In those underground burying places, they pictured Jesus as the Good Shepherd, staff in hand, coming down from the hills and out of the night; his locks wet with dew, and on his arm a helpless little lamb. All of these things tell of His influence and power and say in unmistakable language that He was more than mere man.

I know of no one who doubts that Jesus was born or who says that Mary was not His mother. That He was born and that He lived are established facts. But if He was born and lived, are established facts; and if He was more than a mere man; and if Mary was His mother then some being more then man was His father. His life attested the fact that He was Divine; and if so, then a Divine Being must have been His Father, and that Divine Being was God: for Jesus was God manifest in the flesh.

Mary, His mother, humanity; God, His Father, Divinity; Jesus Christ the God-man.

Understand the mystery! No, I do not understand my own birth. I do not understand the birth of my own children. I do not understand the birth of any child. Neither do I understand the birth of a beautiful butterfly out of a catterpillar or that of a frog from a tad-pole. But in their coming whether it is bird or beast or flower or a child, the power of God is there.

Mystery does not stagger my faith in a great free Spirit, greater than the universe which He created, sustains and orders: for I know that He can do anything He wills; and He wills when the occasion demands; and the cause of the truth, justice and righteousness require it; and when holy love and perfect goodness prompts it.

The occasion is here; a lost world to save; and none could save it but God: and so it pleased God to send His only begotton Son, Jesus Christ into the world, by way of birth to redeem it.

I can conceive of no way by which this could have been done other than that chosen by God—a virgin to be the mother of His Son. But I am not surprised that I cannot think of any other way for God to manifest Himself in the flesh than that of having a virgin mother for his Son—than that of being born; since God Himself conceived and thought out no other way.

Jesus Christ is the Son of God, born of the virgin Mary, or else the world is still lost, is still without a Saviour for man by himself and of himself is unable to save himself from sin; how then can he save others?

If Jesus Christ is not God manifest in the flesh, man is yet in sin; and there is no forgiveness, pardon or remission provided. A mere man cannot atone for sin, nor redeem a lost race nor save a single soul with his blood. If Jesus Christ was not Divine, then man is without a Saviour; and our faith, hope and love in Him as our Saviour is false and our preaching is vain; and our inner experiences of the new birth, of assurance, and life everlasting in Him is a myth. But how am I to account for the inner experiences of life, of forgiveness of sin, of salvation, of faith, hope and love which I and myriads of others have; and the blessed assurance that some day all who believe in and love Him shall be with Him in Heaven and see Him face to face and know Him in all His glory?

Unto Jesus Christ, "That loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and His Father; to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen."

The ministry of Jesus Christ as a man on earth was drawing to a close. He was journeying toward Jerusalem. This lesson and those following present the activities and teachings of the last days of His earthly life. The last sayings of great men have always been treasured and handed down from generation to generation. How much more vital and worthy of remembrance are these last teachings of the Master of men!

The story of Zacchaeus meeting Jesus brings four important questions to 1923 Christians:

1. How great is your interest to see Jesus?

Zacchaeus had so great an interest to see the Christ, that no barrier could stop him. He was willing to make an effort to see Him. His was no passive interest, but a concern that carried him over obstacles which would have stopped many a man. He showed initiative and determination, which was bound to bring reward. Zacchaeus ignored the differences in position. He was a rich publican, the Christ a teacher who had not where to lay His head. Zacchaeus ignored he ridicule of the citizens of the town. He cared not that he was doing the unusual thing in climbing the tree that might attract to himself unfavorable criticism. He cared only to see the Christ, and every difficulty put in his way, was just one more thing to be overcome. How great is your interest to see the Christ? Are you thinking only of Him, or more of what others will say about you? Do you have the Zacchaeus type of interest?

2. Do you know the blessing of seeing Jesus?

Zacchaeus received Jesus "joyfully", and his whole life was blessed. The gift of salvation was bestowed upon him, by the "Son of man" who "came to seek and to save that which was lost." His choice of an upright life, after meeting the Master, was a blessing to himself, and to his household, as well as to the poor to whom he gave part of his wealth. When Jesus is welcomed into the life, great are the blessings which He brings; new life, new purposes, new joys. No place on earth is more blessed than the genuine Christian home.

3. Is your home blessed by having Jesus Christ as a guest;

The citizens of Jericho murmured because Jesus went to visit Zacchaeus, because they hated the tax-collector and called him a "sinner". But while they criticized still evidently they had not thrown their homes open to the Christ. Jesus recognized the interest of Zacchaeus, and knew that he would be welcome, and that the little man needed the gift of salvation. And salvation blessed his house that day. What sort of a welcome would Jesus receive if he came to your home unexpectedly? Would any changes have to be made to entertain Him fittingly? Jesus Christ, who knows our hearts, must know our homes well, and is often there in spirit. I wonder, does He ever feel out of place there? While Jesus may not come in person, He has left a way to entertain Him, as kindness is shown to "one of these—even these least" (Matt. 25:40). Blessing will come to the home which is caring for the world's unfortunates and suffering ones, for thus is Jesus made a welcome guest.

4. Does knowing Jesus affect your business life?

Zacchaeus was a wealthy tax-collector. Doubtless he had gained much of that wealth dishonestly, for the Jews were outspoken in their hatred. We are not told that Zacchaeus changed his work, but that he made amends for the taxes which he had wrongfully taken from his fellow-Jews. He may not have stopped getting money, and probably did not, but his whole policy was changed when he came to know Jesus. He added to his getting wealth, the giving of money to the poor. From a tricky, selfish official, he evidently became an upright, generous Christian, eager to do all he could to make up for his past. The Christian, who really lives the gospel which he professes, will carry his religion into his business life just as surely as into his church life. The man who really knows Jesus and loves Him, cannot wish to trick his fellowmen. "What you are thunders so loud that I cannot hear what you say." The influence of the Christian is lost, when his deeds do not show the same high standard which his words express. How does knowing Jesus affect your actions on Monday, and Tuesday and Friday?

"Ye are called with a holy calling
The light of the world to be;
To light up the lamp of the gospel
That others the light may see."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

February 18, 1922.

$50,000 for Improving our Community: How Should We Spend It?

"And Jehovah said unto Cain, Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, I know not: am I my brother's keeper;"—Gen. 4:9.

Thoughts on the Topic.

Jesus Christ said: "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, even as I have loved you." Can we love one another, as the Saviour commanded, without having a responsibility for each other's welfare? Love is expressed in service. Brotherly love is shown in protection and helpfulness.

The query: "Am I my brother's keeper?" calls to mind that other question, asked by the rich young lawyer: "Who is my neighbor?" and Christ's story of the Good Samaritan, picturing the neighbor as the one showed mercy. The Priest and the Levite felt no compassion for the robbed man, but the Samaritan recognized him as a brother, despite differences in nationality and rank. As my brother's keeper, I have the responsibility of protecting him and caring for him in trouble.

"Where is your brother?" was the Father's question. Many people today are in wrong places simply because no good place is provided for them to fine recreation and amusement. Is it fair to blame those for going astray, when we have never helped them to be better? The church has a responsibility for knowing where the "brother" is during the week, as well as on Sunday morning. Christianity is an all-time religion, not a one-day affair.

The first step in improving your community is to know its needs. Such are many, but a careful survey will find them. Are your children ever thought of? They are the most valuable asset of your community. Where do they play? How do they play; A leading newspaper in one of our cities recently printed a plea written by some boys and girls for a playground. The letter was written after plans had appeared for securing a municipal golf course, and the children stated that while only a few hundred people might play golf, 34,000 children in the city needed a playground. Was their plea just? Were not the older folks responsible for seeing that the play hours of the children were provided for and supervised? During the play hours, their future citizens were developing strong bodies and high ideals. or were acquiring habits which would make them dangerous citizens. How about the recreational opportunities of your community?

How are the sick cared for in your community? Do the poor lack careful attention? Would a community nurse, or a hospital which could give treatment free, or at small cost, improve your town or city? These are needs to be considered.

Is the manufacturer his brother's keeper? Many of our greatest industrial plants are making rapid forward strides in their consideration of employees, and as a rule, these are the plants which are least troubled by strikes and labor troubles.

What are your citizens reading; A public reading room has been started by one of our good women in Eastern Virginia, which should meet a great need, and start a good work.

Our subjects that we should consider how best $50,000 might be spent in improving our communities, for the good of our "Brother." The above items are only suggestive. Every Christian Endeavorer should ask himself seriously the question: "Believing that I have a responsibility for my brother's (and sister's) welfare, what can I do now that will improve our community?" There is much that can be done, with no large sum to start. Make a beginning, before "your brother" is too far away.

Illustration for the Meeting.

In his book "Character Through Recreation" Howard Palmer Young gives this effective word picture from Prof. Simon N. Patten, of the University of Pennsylvania, under his discussion "Amusements and the Modern Church:"

"He imagines himself as standing on a great thoroughfare of a large city in the evening hours and noting the difference between the two sides of the street (and the difference could be seen in many a small town as well). In the gloom of the dark side looms up the heavy bulk of the city library and the public school, and the church with its towering spire. The light which shines from across the street is sufficient for him to read on the door of the library building a notice in brazen letters which says that 'The library closes at 5 P. M. during July, August and September, and is not open on Sundays, or on Saturdays afternoons or on holidays.' On the gate of the iron fence around the high school building a similar plate informs the public that the grounds and building are closed during the vacation months. Approaching the church he discovers that it also is enjoying a vacation period, a notice upon the bulletin board announcing that there are no services held during the summer months. A faint light from a basement window, and the sound of a few voices raised in song, indicate that the Wednesday evening prayer meeting is in session, with only a small attendance.

Outside the church, near the entrance, reflecting dully the light from across the street, there is a bronze statue of heroic size which represents, according to the inscription, a minister who served the church through a long period of years, and whose stalwart character and mighty deeds are a hallowed recollection. Too often does the church thus commemorate the past, while the present is left for other agencies to meet and master.

And the light side of the street is also described. Here are buildings gay with decorations, and brilliant with tastefully arranged electric lights. The doors are open, and the multitudes are patronizing the soda fountains, the restaurants, the thearters, and other places of amusement. The observer marks that by far the larger number of the crowd are young people and children who, attracted by the scene of light and beauty, listen to the music from the various phonographs and pianos and fill the openings of the places of pleasure. It is the light side of the street, and the multitude throng there, the darker side is left almost without a single traveler upon its shadowed pavements."

The encouragement is that the church is making its side of the street lighter, and that ministers and laymen are realizing that they are their brothers' keepers, especially the helpers and friends of those younger brothers and sisters, who rightfully look to them for a worthy example to follow. Is your church throwing out a light that they may see?

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Give six members the six daily readings, as given in The Christian Endeavor World, asking each to give a short talk on these six ways of improving the community.

1. Improving morals.—Isa. 1:10-20.
2. Help the poor.—Deut. 24:17-22.
3. Help the church.—Roman 15:25-33.
4. A city beautiful.—Ps. 48:1-14.
5. Good roads.—Isa. 35:1-10.
6. Good schools.—2 Chron. 17:7-9.

Ask the leader in your Civic League, or Parent-Teachers Association, or someone especially interested in community betterment, to come and tell how the Christian Endeavor Society can aid in the program of the community. If no such movement has been started in your community, no better time to arouse interest can be found than through this meeting. Send special invitations to leading citizens. Study your local situation, and decide where the beginning should be made.

Place on the blackboard, or on a large sheet of paper in front of the society, "What Would Jesus Do in Our Community;" and ask several to give answers.

Special musical numbers help make a meeting inspiring and effective. If possible organize a Christian Endeavor orchestra, which can be a valuable aid in community gatherings as well.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Suffolk Sunday School has ordered one thousand leaflets for Men and Millions Sunday. How many has your church ordered?

Richmond Sunday School held a Sunday School institute last week devoting three consecutive evenings to the study of Sunday School problems.

Bethel Sunday school, New Hill, North Carolina reports good work. Mr. W. S. Johnson has been re-elected superintendent, and Mr. Raeford elected Secretary. Miss Myrtle Holt is the superintendent of the new Junior Christian Endeavor Society in this church.

Miss Vongue Moffitt writes for thirty leaflets, giving the history, principles and work of the Christian Church for use in the Greensboro Christian Endeavor Society. This is fine! Many other Societies will doubtless be following Greensboro's example. Leaflets will be sent free of cost upon request.

Mr. J. V. Simpson, Elon College, writes, after receiving copy of the leaflet prepared for "Men and Millions Sunday" in our Sunday Schools, "I think that one of these should be in every home. It contains information that I have been wanting for a long time—I am writing for twenty-five copies that I can use to good advantage."

The Thirty-Third State Convention of the Virginia Sunday School Convention will be held in the Court Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Lynchburg, Va., February 6th, 7th, 8th. A splendid program has been prepared including the following able speakers, Mr. A. M. Locker, of Chicago; Dr. Henry Louis Smith, President Washington and Lee University; Dr. Henry Edward Tralle of New York City; Rev. Henry K. Ober, of Elizabethtown, Pa.; Mr. Thos. S. Evans of New York, Director International Daily Vacation Bible Schools; Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, Washington, D. C.; J. E. West, of Suffolk, Lieutentant-Governor of Virginia, and many Virginia workers. Many of the leaders in our Virginia Sunday Schools should attend this gathering, and gain the benefit of its inspiration and information.

One of the Sunday School teachers of Christian Temple, who took the course recently carried on for Sunday School workers in that church, wrote the following to express her aims as a Sunday School teacher:

"I aim, 1. To lead a Christian life.
2. To be a teacher of religion.
3. To have love for God and children.
4. To be sympathetic and friendly.
5. That the child may be able through my teaching to realize that God is his Heavenly Father."

Do you have such a definite aim in your Sunday School teaching?"

IN WHAT WAYS IS THE BIBLE A UNIQUE BOOK?

(Note: The following article was prepared by Miss Mae Patterson, a Christian Endeavorer at the Christiana Christian Church, Dadeville, Ala., and after used in the meeting of the Society on January 14th, published in the "Dadeville Spot Cash." This Society is not more than six months old, but has done some splendid work under the leadership of its president, Mr. Barnes Jennings —L. M. E.)

The Bible is the Word of God, given to man through inspiration. God, our Heavenly Father, the Giver of all gifts, deemed it necessary to provide for man a way by which he could read and know the way, and the plan of salvation. This Book of books is in reality the supreme Book of the world. It does not teach us that there is no evil in this world, but warns us of the evil and wrong doing. Its message is always of hope and joy. It does not soothe the feelings with the idea that all will be well. Instead, it warns of the difficulties of life and calls for someone to go carry a message of love and gladness to all parts of the world, in the name of our Lord, Jesus Christ.

It is the source of true joy that rids the soul and the world of misery, and drives fear and woe away. This beautiful book of joy will make all hearts truly and eternally glad and bring hope and light to our souls where darkness and despair abound. It is the book of joy supreme, and if we will only follow it, it will bring happiness and peace to all. If all would read and obey the teachings of the Book, what a beautiful world we would have to live in! Whenever and wherever the pages of this Book are opened to men and nations, there arises hope, faith, peace and joy.

The Bible is our greatest English classic. It stands as the most attractive work in our language. The makers of the translation lived in a day when the English language was in full bloom, and much of the fragrance and beauty will be found on the pages of the sacred Book. The power that it possesses is finer and more exquisite than any great literature. It is an abiding book using large ideas in its construction, dwelling on things eternal and deals with the great truths of life.

The thoughts of the Bible are upon the highest and the noblest, the deepest, broadest and most inclusive things of life. It has taken the beautiful wings of morning, gone to the utmost parts of the earth, ascended up into Heaven and looked into the face of God. It has descended into the depths of human misery, sin and woe, searched the human heart and found its strength and weakness, its sin, its peace and joy and has discovered the solution of our woes.

The Bible is a work of real art for the soul itself. All other books live for only a short while, but the Bible lives on and on and is revered more day after day. The sacred songs of the world which have been so helpful in converting sinners were composed from themes taken from the Bible.

The Bible is the first book in the hearts of the people and shall ever be so. Though Heaven and earth may pass away, its joy will live in the hearts of those who found God in its pages. This book will bring the beautiful light of joy to all appreciative hearts that read its pages and keep all its commandments, walking in the light it sheds, and following its words of truth to life eternal. This will carry us to the beautiful home called Heaven. Then if the Bible can bring such joy, it must be a unique book.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

AN AWAKENING.

Among the many letters that have been received pointing to a new sense of Stewardship, comes the following which tells its own story:—

"Something in the tone of my husband's voice as he read the last words and laid the paper down, made me glance up into his face. A half-startled look was there. He had been reading over the closely written sheet of paper on which we had been working the whole evening. It was our budget for the next year. He had read, 'house rent, food, clothing, fuel, amusements, books, automobile expenses, church and charity —" It was when he stopped there that the half startled look came.

" 'My dear, do you see what we have done? For amusements and the automobile we have appropriated almost ten times as much as we are planning to give to the church and charities. I never thought of it before.'

"I glanced over the list. I saw that we had set aside for those last two items as much as we would pay for two new automobile tires. We had made the appropriations, never thinking of the absurd disproportion. The truth is, that we were both interested in our church, and in the needs of other people, and we honestly had thought we were giving all we could.

" ' What are we going to do about it;' he continued. 'We've got to fix up that thing right away.'

" ' We can cut the clothing item,' I answered. 'You remember it includes a fur coat for me. Cut that out, and we'll give the money to the church benevolences.'

" 'Really, little woman, can you give up that fur coat?'

"I nodded assent, though I didn't want to. 'What sort of Christian do you think I am, to prefer a fur coat for myself to helping other folks—when once the thing's been put up to me like this?'

"He mused a moment. 'Well, really now, I don't need those fancy accessories for the machine. The old car'll go without them. They were chiefly to pamper my pride, anyway. We'll cut those out, and transfer the credit to charity.'

"And so we went through the list, eliminating here and there expensive trifles we had thought we could never do without. After a half-hour's work, the sum set aside for church and charity amounted to a little more than one tenth of our income.

" 'Now that's something like,' John murmured. 'That'll do for a starter. A tenth is the least we can do. Still it seems kind of a heathenish little bit, but we're learning.'

"I smiled up into his earnest face. I knew it wasn't going to be easy for us to 'carry on' when it came to tithing, but I was as determined as he to see the thing through. And we did it!

"Now we have, literally, 'grown up' as supporters of the enterprise of our church, and are no longer mere children, giving on impulse. We weigh one claim against another, so as to be sure not to waste our little hoard. Each year we give a definite proportion of our income—a tenth? It was that at first, but now—well, with a tenth we just couldn't do all the things that had to be done."—Cushman.

MEN AND MILLIONS SCHEDULE.

All our pastors, captains and women leaders doubtlessly fully understand by this time the schedule and seasons for our Men and Millions activities. For covenience the program that all may thoroughly understand and cooperate, is divided as follows:

I

First Quarter—The first three months of the year, January, February, March we set aside as the season for teaching, preaching, emphasizing Stewardship. During this period it is desired to show to all and each that God is the owner of all and that we are but stewards, tenants for a season. That we one day, each and all, will have to render an account of our stewardship. We believe that as tenants of His earth, sea, land, cattle, crops, mines, fields and forests He requires a rental of at least one-tenth with which to promote His kingdom in the earth. When we pay this one-tenth we have only discharged a Christian's obligation and that beyond this we make those gifts that bring joy, happiness and gladness. Hence we seek to enlist in the churches as many tithers as possible, believing it to be God's program of asserting His ownership and our stewardship.

II

The Second Quarter.—The second quarter of the year, April, May, June, we seek to emphasize before budding, springing, blooming youth the importance of giving God the whole life, if haply He will receive it, for all-time service as minister, missionary, teacher, preacher. We would not seek to "call" or persuade any ourselves. We would, however, seek to show our youths the importance, obligation, privilege, joy and opportunity of lives willingly consecrated to Him and His service. Hence we would seek to enlist as many as possible in our list of life-recruits that those who offer themselves may be nurtured, taught, trained for the Master's service.

III

Third Quarter.—The third quarter of the year, July, August, September, we would emphasize, preach, teach, the eternal truth that He who hath made all can through His redeeming power save all. During this period the church would seek to sound the note of evangelization and that Jesus is a power sufficient unto the salvation of all. This is the time when the church would particularly emphasize the need of winning souls to Christ and enlarging its own numbers and membership. This is life dedication—giving the heart, soul, life in obedience to Him who is abundantly able to pardon and save to the uttermost. Hence we seek to add new members to the Church roll—of such as shall be saved.

IV

Fourth Quarter.—And then the last quarter of the year, October, November, December, we would seek out of the increase God has given us to pay up all our pledges and obligations made to the church, pay our pledges to Men and Millions so as to express our loyalty and love to all the enterprises God has seen fit to give us thus far.

Surely no man ever made these plans. They are too beautiful, too holy, too logical to have ever been thought out by man. "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

A STORY OF A UNIQUE EXPERIMENT.

Last September the Rev. George S. Henninger, pastor of East Tenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Indianapolis, led his congregation in a unique plan to test the worth of tithing stewardship and the promise of God. He asked them, each and all, after due and careful preparation, to make a promise that on a given Sunday they would bring to the altars of the Church the tenth part of their income for Kingdom service. It was a new method. Some doubted, some hesitated, all wondered; but 152 people, out of a membership of 875, agreed to make the trial for one week.

There were some handicaps. It was not plain sailing. The church is far from wealthy. Skilled mechanics, bookkeepers, stenographers, and other working people, constitute the mass of the congregation. Many felt that the church was doing its full share, as all bills were paid, all quotas for the year entirely provided for, and a surplus in the treasury. Why should they do more? A goodly number, too, knew that they were already paying "more than a tithe", although they "did not keep account."

One man did not dare promise to tithe for he was out of a job, and would have no money to give anyway. But the pastor said: "All right! No income, no tithe; that's fair, isn't it? Are you willing to agree to tithe on condition that you have an income when the time comes?" The man said: "Yes, I'll agree to trust God and obey him whatever the results." We shall hear from that man a little later.

A DELUGE OF BLESSING.

Just as might have been expected, God fulfilled his promise and poured out his grace.

When the offerings of this sacred Sunday were all counted, it was found that, instead of the usual $175, a gift of almost $800 had been laid upon the altar. Deducting one large tithe this offering represented an average of nearly $4.00 each, as the tithe for the week, and demonstrated that should only these 142 persons continue to tithe the receipts for the year could be expected to reach $40,000, while, if the whole church should adopt the plan, a local and benevolent budget of $200,000 could be supported! In a church of "working people"! In a church of "great financial depression"!

But the money was the smallest part of the victory. The membership were awakened to a new sense of God's presence and partnership in all their personal affairs and their religious endeavors. Fifty of these one-week tithers immediately enrolled as permanent stewards. The remainder asked for another trial period of a full month. A friend of the pastor, not a member of his church, pledged him $5,000 to be used as he might see fit. The prayer meetings increased in power, and the undercurrent of spiritual life was deepened. The church and Sunday school overflowed.

And here was a strange occurence and we put it in the list of spiritual, not financial, victories. The man who did not dare to tithe, because he had no income, and later did dare, because he trusted God without an income, unexpectedly found himself on Saturday night the proud occupant of a position paying four hundred dollars a year more than he had ever before received.

And we, then, holding out to other men "unworthy and material motives for tithing?" We are not. We are simply saying, what God in His word has said a hundred times, that the hard-pressed man who is strong enough to trust God, though the fig-tree does not even blossom, is strong enough for God to trust with any income He sees wise to send. Such men can always cast their burden on the Lord. No others need apply.

"Looking Backward."

After six months, has it "all died out?"

Listen to what the pastor says: "We still have our problems, but they are not financial. It is a matter of leadership with us. So many have flocked to the Sunday school that our hands are overfull in caring for them." The average attendance—not total enrollment—for the year is 896; three years ago it was less than 300. The church numbers a thousand members, after a revision of records which set aside 185 as non-residents, making a net increase, in two years, of more than three hundred.

"We were hard hit by the business depression," says the pastor, "but not a bill remained unpaid." For five weeks the church has been enpaged in a union tabernacle service, to which the church is giving heavy financial support, besides losing the usual Sunday evening offering, yet the first Sunday morning in February "as a free will offering $419 was laid on the church plate to help build a mountain church in Tenn."

And better still, the Christmas Thank-offering of the church and Sunday school "for the children of the world" amounted to $1,015. This was contributed wholly as a voluntary offering, without pledges or contests or other competitive device, but, after five weeks of faithful announcement and explanation from the pulpit, was gathered in a thousand little red stockings from the families of the church.

On Sunday, January 29, the windows of heaven opened. As the pastor was preaching his morning sermon, the tongues of flame seemed suddenly to kindle all hearts. There was not a dry eye in the great congregation. Thirty-six adult seekers came pressing their way to the altar, and the service lasted until one o'clock in the afternoon.

The Reason Why.

To conclude that tithing stewardship alone brought all these things to pass would be to commit the fallacy ofputting a part for the whole, and the sin of exalting a method above the full-rounded program of God. First, there was a faithful pastor, with mind ever kindling to new and better plans for the building of his church, and with heart of self-forgetful devotion to the welfare of his people and the purpose of God, ready to be a burning as well as a shining light. Then there was a receptive, teachable church, "willing in the day of God's power." and ready to follow a truly consecrated leadership. Then, there was a divinely-suggested, or, at the lowest estimate, a scripturally-encouraged method, that which this faithful pastor and this loyal people knew no beter. Who can doubt that even the limited and fragmentary obedience thus far accorded to this scriptural plan is the key which has unlocked above this favored church the windows of God's immeasurable abundance?—Committee of Conservation and Advance.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS LEARNING ABOUT OUR CHURCH.

We Christians never have taught our children and the pupils in our Sunday schools enough about the Christian Church, its principles, its practices and its purpose. The Board of Religious Education is now supplying a wonderful opportunity along this line. Under the leadership of Miss Lucy M. Eldredge a leaflet has been prepared for free distribution to the Sunday schools, which leaflet carries in the form of a responsive reading the cardinal principles of the church and the other salient features of our church pursuits and polity. These leaflets are for free distribution and are simply used as a responsive reading at the opening of the school. Neglect on the part of the Superintendent or Secretary to request these leaflets can be the only excuse for the school not putting this responsive reading on. It is certainly a wonderful opportunity to acquaint our Sunday schools with the principles of our church. It is very gratifying to learn that in one of our Sunday schools the announcement has been made that the Junior boy or girl memorizing this responsive reading during the present year, 1923, will be given a prize. This seems most commendable. It will be a most helpful thing indeed if instead of merely using the leaflet as a responsive reading, classes will use it as a catechism for months until the boys and girls have learned it thoroughly.

The Superintendent of our Suffolk Sunday school has ordered 1000 of the leaflets. Every school should order the number needed of Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

RALEIGH CHURCH.

It will be gratifying to all Christian Sun readers to know that the Christians are to have a model, ample, up-to-date church building in Raleigh, N. C. For years this congregation has been making out in a building altogether inadequate and unattractive. Nowhere in all the church is there a more loyal, devoted, true and faithful membership than in North Carolina's Capital city. But the congregation has for years been seriously handicapped because their building had become so inefficient more than a year ago, now the city authorities condemned the main auditorium as unsound and unsafe. Since that time the congregation has been worshipping, working and striving to keep together and go forward in the Sunday school auditorioum.

This is all too small for church purposes.

So the main auditorium is to be torn down; The work of removing this is to begin at once and in its stead a handsome $75.00 building is to go up.

The Raleigh Christians are happy with their new pastor, Dr. Wm. D. Perry. His congregations are growing. He is a man with ideas and a program. Both Pastor and people are confident that a building program is not only a necessity but can be carried out and will succeed. Raleigh richly deserves the prayers, the cooperation and support of the entire Christian Church in their great desire for an ample and adequate building.

J. O. Atkinson.

My definition of money for my purpose is simply this: Money is myself. I am a laboring man, we will say, and can handle a pickaxe, and I hire out for a week at $2.00 a day. At the close of the week I get $12.00, and I put it in my pocket. What is that $12.00? It is a week's worth of my muscle put into greenbacks and pocketed; that is, I have got a week's worth of myself in my pocket.

Now the moment you understand this, you begin to understand that money in your pocket is not merely silver and gold, but is something human, something that is instinct with power expended. Now, money is like electricity; it is stored power, and it is only a question as to where that power is to be loosed.

What I am coming to is this—that this matter of the stored potentiality of myself in my pocket is so very serious that I need God's Holy Spirit to guide me in it.

Much of the lack of spiritual power in the church is certainly due to the fact that great numbers have come to the church altars singing. "All to Jesus I surrender," and have not included the pocketbook in the transaction. The people give little evidence of a realization that money is an essential part of personality, and that therefore the consecration of money is essential in the consecration of self.

Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour the mill;
And back of the mill are the wheat and the shower,
And the sun and the Father's will.

NEWPORT NEWS.

The Christian Endeavor Society gave a social in honor of Mr. W. L. Rilee, the efficient and retiring president who is to leave Newport News next week for Suffolk, Va. Mr. Rilee was presented with a nice morocco bound Bible as an appreciation of the excellent service he has rendered while he was president. During the term that he has been president the society has doubled its membership, and at this time is doing fine work.

The Ladies' Aid Society under the wise direction of Mrs. W. B. Baker has by no means been idle the past year. They have succeeded in eliminating all indebtedness, and the chairman of the lookout committee Mrs. W. H. Baker, last month submitted 10 new names for membership. The society has raised $406.38 during the year.

UNDER CURRENT OF CRITICISM.

In the comment of many men of the world on any thought of trying men for heresy there is, at least as we see it, an under current of criticism of any one who seeks to keep men and women true, not to mere creeds, but to the real teachings of the Bible. The latest instance of this kind in regard to the action of Bishop Manning of New York City, who in dealing with one of the ministers in his diocese (a Mr. Grant) for heretical teaching, forbade the minister to preach again in the church of which he was rector, unless he should confess his wrong and so stand by the teaching of his church. We also saw some remarks indirectly reflecting on Bishop Manning for the stand he made for the teachings of his church. Now as a matter of fact the Bishop was entirely right in such action, the ministry having taken the vows of the priesthood in the Episcopal Church, was under obligation to be true to them. There is there fore no occasion for any effort to reflect on any order which the Bishop is said to have given. Shall a man be allowed to ignore not only the teachings of his church, but to disregard his moral obligations as a minister of the gospel, and yet go free of rebuke? We think not. In the Christian Church the obligation is a bit different—there is no obligation to a mere creed, but there is even a more sacred obligation to the teachings of the Scriptures. If a man teaches, plainly teaches, contrary to the Scriptures, we believe he ought to be called to account and required to adjust his teachings according to the Scriptures, or withdraw from the body which has no creed but the Bible. If a public teacher will not tie to the Bible, you cannot depend upon his teachings in the matter of salvation. How is it to be expected that a church shall authorize a man to teach the truths of everlasting life when he refuses, in so important a matter, to tie his own life and teachings to the Bible, the highest source of authority in the Christian world? We confess we like to be tolerant toward brethren who differ from us, but we have no toleration for the man or the woman who repudiates the Bible as the Inspired Word and Revealed Will of God. If we may not tie to it, then to what may we tie. We believe we ought to be definite in our Christian beliefs. A "milk and water" faith is not much anywhere.

is being published in McCall's Magazine. It is the most important and epoch-making contribution ever printed by an American magazine, because here for the first time has a master-writer and master-historian picked out shining thread of the Biblical narrative, dropping away all details from it and presenting it not only in the simplest and most beautiful of English but fixing it also in its exact historical perspective.

"The Story of the Bible" is appearing now in McCall's. We have made special arrangements with the publishers so that you will be able to enjoy this beautiful presentation of the Bible story. For a short time only we can offer our readers this remarkable club—

Pray for it. The one great need of our Christian Church today is Men and Millions consecrated upon God's altar to the service of the Church and the Kingdom. If you love the Christian Church then you love also Men and Millions, since Men and Millions is the one Movement amongst us in behalf of the entire Church and all it has, is and stands for. When one pays a dime or a dollar to Men and Millions in that act one gives to all the work and worship of the Christian Church in this world.

Men and Millions is the one Movement which undertakes to cultivate love for, and loyalty to, and support of all the enterprises of the Church.

If we love the Christian Church then let us prove that love by paying our pledges to

MONTHLY PICKINGS FROM PORTO RICO.

I wish to tell THE SUN'S family about our Christmas, and I have no excuse for telling it, except that I think it may be worth telling. Of course we began preparation for it some weeks before Christmas by appointing a committee to get things in shape for the occasion. Not feeling altogether satisfied with former programs, given to celebrate the Birth of our Lord, we decided to use only Scripture verses and music. So our program was called The Prophecy and The Coming Light.

A Psalm was chosen which portrayed the spiritual darkness of man and his need of light, then the promises of the Light, the place where it should first be seen, the Story of that Holy Night, the Shepherds, the Wise Men, etc., and on down to the words of our blessed Saviour Himself: "I am the Light." All of this part of the program was interspersed with songs appropriate to each thought, sung either by separate classes of the Sunday School or the congregation.

Then came the second part of the program. The Light has come. What shall we do to show our gratitude and joy? The commands to care for the widow, the orphan and needy, visit the sick and such as may be in prison were recited by a representative of each class, and at the same time they brought provisions, etc., to be distributed among our sick and needy. Also an offering was taken which amounted to about $5.00. This also went for the same purpose. After which we had more singing and then came dismissal.

The next morning, Christmas Day, the Committee and a few of our Endeavorers met and took to the homes of the widow, the orphan, the sick, etc., the gifts which our church people had offered to our Lord and King so joyfully. We felt that we had received the greater blessing, for it is still true that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." This was not our first giving Christmas—it just happens to be the first time we have told THE SUN'S family about it.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society enjoyed their Christmas giving so much last year that they wanted a part all to themselves this year also. So several weeks before, we prepared a green tree cut out of a card and pasted it on a white card board and took it to the society meeting. We told the children that the Christmas tree must be decorated, but as it was a very particular kind of a tree there was only one kind of an ornament that would do. A number of things were guessed, but the leader shook her head until finally some one said, "Dinero," and then we said, "Yes, and it must be a silver piece, too," so a ten cent piece was used and little by little the children decorated that tree with ten cent pieces until we had $1.50 to spend. Then a committee was appointed, after voting to use the money for a little treat of candy for the 26 children in Ponce's Asylum for the Blind, so we bought the candy and made little baskets and took them to the Asylum, full. The plan was carried out nicely. If you wish to teach a child real happiness, show him how to bring joy into another's life. I dare say that he will enjoy it more than he would eating candy given to him, as our Sunday School children did. There was a church up in Ohio which sent $20.41 for a treat for them, and other societies, classes, and groups which sent toys. Also another society in Maine which sent $5.00. We did not spend all the money for sweets. There was enough left to buy medicine and a few necessities for one of our workers who is not well. So Christmas came and went and left us happier because we put into practice, in a very small way, the commands of our Lord, our Blessed Master.

The first week in January is an exceedingly busy one in Porto Rico. The Christmas festivities begin on Christmas Eve, when a sumptuous supper is served at mid-night by all who can afford it. By such as are less fortunate in this world's goods, sweets at least are served, a favorite among which is a desk made of rice, cocoanut, sugar, butter and rice. We, the Barretts, had our share, sent in as gifts from three different members and friends of the church.

The festivities continue till Jan. 6th, which is celebrated as "Three King's Day," when the wise men are supposed to bring toys, leaving them in the little box, which the children prepare and leave full of grass, for their camels. Just as our American children leave their stockings for Old Santa Clause to fill, so a Latin child leaves his box. New Year's Day is a day of new things and new beginnings, and as complete a holiday as is possible.

The New Year has started well with us, in a way, although two of our workers are not well, and a third one was granted a two-weeks rest. We are hoping a change from his home town might enable him to overcome malaria which is sapping his strength.

The new Santa Isabel Church is going up fast. We had hoped to use it for our first Christmas Endeavor and Sunday School Convention, which is scheduled for Feb. 24th, but we see now that all will not be ready, still we rejoice that it will soon be in use. We had waited so many years for that building that now, since it is actually going up, it seems to put new life into our entire Conference.

Our Ponce Church voted on a $500.00 budget for this year, in its business meeting for January, 1923, including help on the pastor's salary, Home and Foreign Missions. The amount for Foreign missions goes to help the Evangelical work in Santa Domingo, also for light, janitor, literature, and Education. From this fund we are able to help some of our native young people who are preparing for their life's work, incidentals, etc.

The little Kindergarden pays its own expenses, all except Miss Vazquez's salary. Our other kindergarden teacher, Miss Cruz, is not well. The Ponce Church is supplying her needs. She is slowly improving and we hope will be able to continue her training the coming summer.

We have three other young women who hope to enter the work within a year or two. But, one of our big needs at present is some one to look after the Christian Endeavor and Sunday School work throughout our Conference.

Pray for the work—that we may very soon have help.

EVA O. BARRETT.

DEATH OF N. A. WOODELL.

On January 16, 1923, Mr. N. A. Woodell died at his home in East Durham. He had only been a resident of Durham for about three months. His death came as a result of "Flu" and pneumonia. He was forty-seven years of age. He was a member of Christian Chapel Church in Chatham County, in which he had been a faithful worker. The funeral and burial took place there. He leaves to mourn his going, a wife and nine children, four brothers and a host of friends. The funeral was conducted in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives, by his former pastor. May the blessings of God abide with the loved ones is my prayer.

J. S. CARDEN.

STROWD

The Chapel Hill community was shocked and saddened on Friday, December 29th, when it was learned that Dwight, the son of Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Strowd, and a nephew of the late Rev. T. W. Strowd, had been thrown from a mule and fatally injured. No one knows the full particulars of the accident. Dwight was found shortly after it happened, but was in an unconscious condition from which he never revived. Dr. Lloyd rushed to the scene and worked heroically to save the son of his friend and former neighbor. He carried him to Watts Hospital and there the patient lingered under every care that could be given him until just before dawn of the last day of the year, a Sabbath, and his Spirit took its flight. He was 20 years, 4 months and 9 days of age.

In early childhood he professed faith in Christ, and at the time of his death was a loyal member of the Chapel Hill Christian Church. His favorite hymn, "I Believe," was true to his life.

Dr. W. S. Long and the writer conducted the funeral service in the presence of a large number of friends. Interment was made in the town cemetery. A profuse floral offering was among the evidences of the high esteem in which the deceased was held.

Among the bereaved are his father and mother; four sisters, Misses Leta and Annie, Mrs. James Wills, and Mrs. A. L. Creek; two brothers, DeWitt and Thomas.

B. J. HOWARD.

JOSIAH JOYNER.

Josiah Joyner was born in Nansemond L. Cheek; two brothers, DeWitt and his home, January 26, 1923, age 86 years and 25 days. He was married to Nancy M. Pruden February 15, 1866, and they had lived happily together 56 years, 11 months and 12 days, and in the home where he died over 50 years. This is a great commentary on real married life. There were born unto them five children, all living: Willie James, married Addie Smith, with three children living and two dead; Jesse E. married Josie P. Rawles, two children; Richard H. married Mollie M. Nelms, four children living, 1 dead; Joe Bob married Etta M. Nelms, seven children living, 1 dead; Effie married John V. Hargraves. Children living 5; grandchildren living, 16 and four dead; great-grandchildren, 3, making a total of 24 living and 4 dead.

He was a faithful member of Bethlehem Christian church for many years. He entered the Confederate army under Captain T. G. Williams in 1862, went through the entire Civil War; was wounded in the right hand and the bullet remained in his hand to the day of his death. He was in the surrender at Appomattox April 9, 1865. He had been sick only two weeks, and passed away like he had lived, quietly and in peace with God and all men. A good man, a good soldier, a good Christian, a good husband and father, a good neighbor and friend, passed over the river to rest under the shade of the trees.

Burial services at Bethlehem church, Sunday 3 P. M., January 28th, in the presence of a very large congregation, conducted by Revs. W. W. Staley and T. E. White; H. H. Butler being absent at an appointment at Crittenden. Singers from Suffolk and Bethlehem sang "Rock of Ages," and "Nearer My God to Thee."

The venerable Benjamin C. Roberts, of Windsor, Va., who was in the army with Mr. Joyner, was present as the solitary veteran.

W. W. S.

BEAHM.

Benjamin Franklin Beahm was born September 24, 1846, and died January 6, 1923. His age was 76 years, 3 months, and 12 days. It was the writer's privilege several years ago to receive Brother Beahm into the church at Whistler's Chapel. He attended church as faithfully as health would permit after uniting with the church, and frequently expressed himself as ready for the Lord's call. Funeral services were held at Whistler's Chapel, January 7, 1823, and interment at Cedar Grove cemetery. He is survived by his widow, and three children. He was a kind husband and father, and a good neighbor.

A. W. ANDES.

BROY.

Virginia Showns Broy, wife of George Broy, near Woods' Chapel, was born June 30, 1855, and died December 28, 1922, making her age, therefore, 67 years, 5 months, and 28 days. She is survived by her husband, five daughters and two sons. Sister Broy was a faithful member of the Woods' Chapel Church, and a splendid Christian woman. During the last few years of her life she endured much suffering, but bore it very patiently. She expressed herself several times to the writer as ready to meet her Lord. Funeral services were conducted at Woods' Chapel, December 30, 1922.

Complete Your Task.—

Labor-unions are paying fines (amounting to $9,800) of railroad men who left trains stranded in the Arizona Desert during strike troubles last year. There are tasks that cannot be dropped half-done.

The Collapse of the Near East Conference.—

The Near East Conference has collapsed in spite of herculean efforts to make it gain its end. The Turks fail, or rather refuse, to sign the pact which was offered. Now what comes next? Only He who is the God of Nations can tell. The Nations of Europe are almost like a boiling cauldron and the balance of the world is in a simmering condition, and we are standing on tiptoe, not knowing what to expect next. Some one is boldly predicting that Europe will go into barbarism and ruin.

Old Turkey and New Turkey.—

Turkey is playing a bold game when she claims to be a new Turkey and refuses to be responsible for the debts of old Turkey. That is, as we understand it, Turkey, under its new Government, refuses to be responsible for the debts of the Turkey which belongs to the Central Powers. They have debts, debts of honor and justice, which should be paid, but the Turkey of today refuses to be responsible for the Turkey of yesterday. The Near East Conference, which was recently held at Lausanne, made a desperate effort to keep the New Turkey responsible for the debts of the Old Turkey, but they failed. What sort of people are these that are contending with Turkey and allowing the brutal crowd to dictate their own terms and to have things all their own way? Is it possible that the smallest nation, or practically so, which surrendered to the Allies in 1918, are now permitted to dictate their own terms to their conquerors? That is what the Near East Conference recently held at Lausanne, practically means. That is surpassingly strange, since every one knows that Turkey is above all others, if possible, the one criminal nation of modern times, and she is allowed in her defeat to dictate terms to the great world powers. There must be a black cat in the bag somewhere, or the conquerors would never submit to such demands of a vanquished foe.

They Cannot Do It.—

The "wet" forces of the United States are acting as if they think they can destroy the Eighteenth Amendment and make it mean nothing. But they are undoubtedly counting their chickens before they hatch. It required the approval of thirty-six States in order to make that amendment effective. Not only thirty-six States made it effective by approving, but all the States of the Union approved it, except three and they were the three smaller States, and now for the "wets" to think they can reverse the situation so thoroughly as to destroy the amendment seems quite ridiculous. Prohibition has come to stay. These same "Wets" are continually crying out "Prohibition does not prohibit," but if it does not, why should they be so disturbed over it—that is just what they wish were true, for then they could carry on their business without danger of paying fines and serving terms in prison. They say that the amendment cannot be enforced and so it is a failure. That is what they wish it might be, but the facts show that their claim is not true. Listen: The records show that since July, 1921, violators of the law have been imprisoned, aggregating 2,000 years and fines have been imposed on these violators till the whole sum for one year and a half amounts to more than five million dollars, and the Government is just getting well under way at the business of imprisoning these violators and collecting fines from them. There have been 58,862 cases prosecuted in the eighteen months since the work of imprisoning and fining these breakers of the law began; 27,301 convictions have been secured, and there was pending in the federal courts Dec. 1, 1922, 21,850 cases undisposed of, and with these cases undisposed of there are 3,900 new cases developing every month. One gratifying fact is noted and that is that in the States which went dry as States before the United States went dry as a whole, the cases of violations of the law are much fewer now than then. This shows that what the Government needs to make the prohibition law very effective is a little time, for where they have had time the decrease is already very marked. It is vain to hope for further lease of life for the liquor traffic. The voice of the people will forbid such a calamity for our country. The liquor men are saying almost anything that can make a bad case out against prohibition. Do not believe them. Get the facts from Attorney General Daughtrey, and in those facts you may easily read the doom of the liquor business. It is henceforth an outlaw, and there is no place in our country for so great an evil. Not only so, but in twenty-five years from today, we believe we shall have world prohibition, and there will not be one little corner in this wide world where liquor can stand up and claim the right to force itself upon the people. They may as well stop talking of destroying the Eighteenth Amendment—they cannot do it.

The North State in the Front Ranks.—

Another fact shows how North Carolina is passing to the front lines of progress, and that is in the matter of taxes. The following will show that North Carolina is producing more wealth as shown by her taxes than most of the States in the South, if not in the Union. The following will open the eyes of THE SUN readers to the revenues the Old North State is producing: The News Letter, published by the University of North Carolina gives the following facts bearing on the tax-burden North Carolina is bearing:

One hundred twenty-two million four hundred thirteen thousand dollars is the total collected in North Carolina in 1921-22 by the Internal Revenue Bureau, mainly as taxes on profits, incomes, capital stock and inheritances.

Only seven states of the Union paid more federal taxes, namely, New York, Pennsylvalia, Illinois, Michigan, Massachusetts, Ohio, and California. Since 1919, we have moved ahead of New Jersey and Missouri, and our rank is now eight instead of tenth.

Fifth in crop-producing power, and eighth in federal tax-paying power— that's the record of North Carolina in 1922.

As for the South, our rank is first. The table is as follows for the year ending June 30, 1922.

1.	North Carolina	$122,413,000
2.	Texas	52,348,000
3.	Virginia	46,596,000
4.	Kentucky	33,122,000
5.	Louisiana	22,754,000
6.	Tennessee	21,795,000
7.	Georgia	20,989,000
8.	Oklahoma	18,402,000
9.	Florida	14,320,000
10.	Alabama	11,464,000
11.	South Carolina	11,447,000
12.	Arkansas	6,979,000
13.	Mississippi	4,640,000

Texas and Virginia are our nearest competitors in the South in federal tax totals paid in 1922, but North Carolina paid more than both of them together—twenty-three million dollars more.

We paid more than the rest of the South Atlantic States combined—Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida—twenty-nine million dollars more.

We paid more than the five Gulf States all put together, Texas included—seventeen million dollars more.

We paid enough taxes to the federal government in one year to keep our State government going for ten years.

And the people who are paying the bulk of these tremendous federal taxes are the people who are bearing the burden of State taxes. They pay more State taxes to the State at present than all the rest of us put together; and, as Governor Morrison says, they are doing it without a kick or a whine anywhere.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Are you a tither? If not why not?

Read the advertisement of McCall's Magazine in this issue of THE SUN.

If you are not a tither, suppose you settle the question now by turning to your Bible and seeing what it teaches on the subject.

Bro. Flory what is the matter with your pen? Tell us what your field is doing, what is it undertaking to do the present year?

Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va., seems also to have gotton a good case of the "dry ups" of late. We should like to hear from your field, brother.

It would be a good thing if every subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN would resolve to get one new subscription to the paper. Will you be one to make this resolve?

Our pastors are finding it pretty hard work to do much pastoral visiting now, as in many communities the roads are almost impassible. There is not much chance for relief till spring opens fully.

Do you do your part to introduce THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the people who do not take the paper in your church. If you will just try, you may work much good for the cause. Try it—you may succeed well.

Are you doing your best, Brother Pastor, to encourage the members of your congregation to discharge their moral and spiritual obligations in paying promptly their Men and Millions pledges? That also is vital.

Will the pastors of churches take it upon themselves to appoint one or more solicitors in their congregation. The subscription list of THE SUN during the months of February, March and April should be increased another 25 per cent.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., has spoken on The Church and the Movies. Extracts of what he had to say appear in this issue. Read what he says and then say if you agree with him.

The Christian Church at Urbana, Ill., has of late completed a handsome parsonage, costing $12,000. It is said to be the handsomest parsonage in the denomination. The new building was dedicated in January by Rev. F. G. Coffin, D. D., President of Palmer College, Mo.

They tell it that Rev. W. H. Garman of the Old Zion Christian Church, Lambert's Point, Va., is doing things in his field, but we never get a word from him. Surely after he does good work he ought not to be ashamed of it, and we are quite sure his people would like to hear from him through THE SUN.

How many subscriptions have you gotten in your field this year for your church paper? There is certainly room to try. Do you not think you wrong your people when you do not give them a chance to subscribe to their church paper. Try it, Brother Pastor, and see if we are not right in this suggestion.

We hear only good words of the work Dr. Parry is doing in our First Christian Church, Raleigh, N. C. Dr. Parry, there is space in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for your pen to use when it may suit you to do so.

Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., is getting the name of a "stayer." He has been in his present field for a good many years, and so far as we know, he has no notion of looking for a call from elsewhere. He has spent most of his entire ministry in his present field. He lives in Suffolk, Va., and has a field of fine country churches in adjacent territory.

The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN desire a number of canvassers in each church or community, and have an attractive and remunerative plan. Confer with your pastor, he can advise you. Send in your name and address. Do this now and begin work forthwith. Address THE CHRISTIAN SUN, 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., pastor of our Richmond, Va., First Church, seems to feel very hopeful of the work in his field. The new and handsome church building is going up right along, and the people as well as the pastor, are hoping to get into it for regular services during the present year. We are always glad to hear good news from our Richmond work.

Say, Brother Pastor, what are you doing to get THE SUN into the families of your charge? It can be done, far in advance of what we are doing, if only we make the proper effort. Hard work will make it a success. Perhaps you do not feel like giving it hard work. Well, that is your business, no doubt, but without it, the work must lag. Are you willing to that?

Rev. John Roach Stratton, D. D., who was once the pastor of a Baptist Church at Norfolk, Va., is now pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York City, and he is doing a piece of brave work in standing for the fundamentals of the Christian faith. He speaks right out in meeting, and, of course, he has made some enemies, but he goes right on standing for what he believes to be truth, regardless of what his enemies may have to say or do.

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., pastor of the Elm Street Church, Portsmouth, Va., is pressing on with the work in his new charge. A number of members have been added to the church membership since he took charge last November. They are hoping soon to occupy the new parsonage. Dr. Harward is a man of real pulpit ability and the Elm Street folks have as good a preacher as any of the churches in their section of the city. We look for real progress in that field for the present year.

A question is never settled until it is settled right. That is what some dear people have believed and taught, and yet there are some very clever people who think it is the safe thing to do to cover up the head of error and call it all right. We doubt if that is wise. We do not believe it should so be done, not even for the sake of peace, for peace which is purchased at any such price, you may be sure will not stand and fill the place of right. If you leave error in the work, you may be sure it will fill the place of error, and error which has been whitewashed in an effort to make it look like truth, will not be truth, neither will it do the work of truth. It may be very silent about it, but its work will go right on, giving comfort and help to error—not to truth.

Elon College in the hour of her great loss and calamity now needs sorely its percentage of Men and Millions. That is why the Trustees in session at the college, while the ruins were yet smoking, called upon all who had pledged to Men and Millions to please pay their pledges now. In this way all can help both the college and all our needy enterprises and institutions.

The Methodists are meeting their Centenary obligations. The Baptists are paying their 75 million pledges. The Presbyterians are paying off the debts of their New Era movement. And the churches and enterprises of their denominations are feeling the quicken life and added power that their kingdom efforts bestowed. We Christians will not let our Men and Millions go by without realizing the harvest of that heavy sowing.

We begin in our next issue the reply of Simon Abe to the recent letters of Rev. T. E. White. Bro. Abe's letters to Bro. White promise to be fully as interesting to Bro. White as were Bro. White's letters to Bro. Abe. As for the people we dare say that they will be much interested to see just how Bro. Abe looks at the things in himself which seemed to Bro. White to be worthy of rebuke. Bro White has greatly interested our readers, and we believe Bro. Abe will do likewise. At any rate for the next few weeks our readers may expect some interesting reading matter from Simon Abe.

It is that angels served God and ministered to men when they proclaimed the fact that Christ had come. That is a happy thought, for there are many spheres in which men can and do two things at one time. They can serve God and in doing so minister to men in a way to bring them nearer to the throne and nearer to their life work. In many instances serving God is ministering to men also. Let us be more thoughtful in serving God, knowing that at the same time we may be ministering to men, and if so, then we are engaged in a double way in the highest service that belongs to men.

Our Baptist Brethren are working hard to make good their great drive for seventy-five millions in five years. During the first three years they collected $38,400,000 plus. Now they have only two years remaining in which to collect $36,000,000, and they are doing everything that makes it seem possible. Can not the people of the Christian Church do as well for our Men and Millions in porportion to our members and wealth as the Baptist people are doing? Let us see. Dr. Atkinson is doing his best—let us help him in every way we can.

If you have men in your work who are "modernists" in fact, it will do little good, and may do much harm, to call them conservatives, for they are not. We do not believe in calling them "modernists" if they are not in fact such, but if they are, it will do no good to call them conservatives, and try to make it appear that all is lovely and that there is no trouble in the camp. Better come out with the facts and let every man stand on his own foundation and teaching. If a man believes in, and teaches, Evolution, it is better to let him be known as such, rather than to leave the people to think that he is a conservative, when in fact he is a radical. Whatever you do in matters of religion, or belief in it, let a man be known as what he really is. It is unwise to camouflage, or to whitewash, or to keep the truth hid. Let us be open and above board. If we are in the wrong, let it be known, and if we are in the right, let that be known also.

The Christian Church must be missionary if she would be true to her great commission. The one thought of the great commission as Jesus gave it, is to go. When a church stops its work to sit down to have a good time, or to play, or to spend itself on itself, then she loses her larger chance of usefulness. We must go and live, or stop and die. Which shall it be, life or death? In the past the church, which has chosen to stop its missionary activities has died, while the church which has been truly missionary has lived and flourished. And that is the divine order. Your church will be one way or the other—which shall it be? Missionary and live and fruit? Or shall it be non-missionary and die and rot?

We undoutedly show our highest appreciation of Jesus Christ when we do our best to bring others to Him that they may have part with us in this so great salvation. Only men who are true character and life can be used to tell the good news of salvation. Bad men may tell the story of redeeming love to man, but it at best will be a sort of parrot-talk that has no power in it. If you wish to get a share in this part of gospel service, then see to it that you walk worthy of the vocation wherewith you have been called into life yourself. Do not encourage any bad man to enter the gospel ministry, for bad men make poor preachers of the gospel. A bad man sometimes tells the story of redeeming love with the ease of an orator, but it has little or no effect, and for the reason that such an one is not a vessel unto honor. Whatever you do, do not put such a man into the ministry of the gospel—the calling is too high for a man of bad character. A pure hearted man is God's messenger to the lost. Surely we ought to keep Matt. 9:37-38 in mind and heart.

Here is something worth thinking about. The Editor of The Moody Bible Institute Monthly quotes from Mr. Fred B. Smith these words: "Any one who will now plant a Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, Episcopal, or Congregational Church in China, Japan, or India ought to be choked at the dock before landing." To this the Editor of Moody's Bible Institute Monthly replies: "We wonder if those utterances really represent the sober thought of church leaders today? We wonder if they indicate a serious revolt against denominationalism? We do not mean sectarianism, of course, which is denominationalism gone mad, but wholesome Christianity as represented by different forms of worship and church government and different interpretations of specific articles of faith." We think Dr. Gray has much the saner view of the matter under discussion. A denomination can be unsectarian, and an unsectrian denomination can be as useful in the spread of the gospel as if it were undenominational. It is not denominationalism, per se, which does the harm—it is rather sectarianism that puts a fly in the ointment and so retards the progress of the gospel. We should always distinguish between the two.

Notice to the Ladies.

Owing to the continued illness of my husband, who has been down sick for about a year, with tuberculosis and an abcess on his lungs, with little hopes of his recovery, it devolves on me to try to make us a living, through I am in a low state of health myself. Therefore I am offering the celebrated, New Perfected, Parisian Art Embroidery needle, the ladies favorite, at half price fifty cents, instead of one dollar the regular price, by parcel post, prepaid, Agents Wanted. Address, Mrs. Rachel V. Thomas, 3260 River Road, Columbus, Ga.

This is a day when a Christian is expected to know what he believes. The Biblical Recorder says, The Baptists of North Carolina believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, the Diety of Christ, His virgin birth, His atonement, His resurrection and His Second Coming. Good! We can say that much. But Bro. Recorder, do your men who believe in and teach Evolution believe that the Genesis account of creation was inspired of God? What say you, Bro. Recorder? Let us have the facts, plain and simple.

YOU REAP WHAT YOU SOW.

Perhaps you do not believe this, as a fact, but as we see it, it cannot be otherwise than true. If a man sows wheat he will reap wheat. You cannot sow wheat and then reap cow peas from such a sowing. This is not merely true in nature, but it is true in the moral and spiritual life. Jacob practiced deception on Isaac. Then later Laban passed Leah off on Jacob for Rachel. Haman made a gallows on which to hang Mordecai, but Haman finished his career on that gallows. Sow duplicity and then reap duplicity. Surely. That is a most reasonable outcome of our work. Then be careful what you sow, for it will come back to you as apples of Solomon. There is an old proverb to the effect that chickens come home to roost. Certainly—where else might they go?

NOTICES TO BE GIVEN OUT FROM THE PULPIT.

Have a care for the sort of notices made from the pulpit on Sunday. The pulpit should be no bulletin board for every trivial notice, or a place for the free advertisement of all kinds of wares. Even railroad stations and United States post offices are protected from such rubbish. Should not the church have some protection from the things that, if not unclean, are common.—The North Carolina Christian Advocate. Let it be so—the church should not be bothered with such notices. We go a step further and say that we do not believe any notice should be given out from the pulpit unless it has some vital connection with the Lord's work. The pulpit was made for instruction and worship. Keep it to this line of work.

JESUS OUR IDEAL.

Man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Jesus came to seek and to save the lost. Let us by our example try to help somebody else and let us strive ever to do our best. We want to be ready when Jesus comes.

The writer wishes to say that both the Sunday School and the congregation of the First Christian Church of Richmond are growing. Our pastor Dr. Walters and his wife are active in the services of the church and fine workers. We have some of the most loyal workers I ever saw. We are working and praying that we may go into our new church soon with a fine congregation. Our Master lived his life here on earth as a man of prayer. By his deeds as well as by his teachings he placed his divine approbation upon the prayer-life of the Christian. If Jesus Christ in his days on earth felt the need of communion with God his Father, how much more do we need to talk to our heavenly Father and ask his guidance and help in our lives. The disciples had come to Jesus with the plea, Lord, teach us to pray, and may we ever live the prayer-life. The word says pray without ceasing and in everything give thanks.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

A TREACHEROUS QUICKSAND.

And what is a quicksand? It is a deep mass of loose sand, mixed with water, in which if one steps and remains in it long enough to begin to sink, it at once becomes very difficult to extricate himself from it. It often costs the victim his life, unless help, and good help, is near at hand. We have given this definition to enable the reader the better and more readily to understand the meaning of the author we are about to quote.

Sir F. W. Barrett, who in speaking of spiritualism, says:

"It becomes a treacherous quicksand upon which to build a new religion." We suppose that his reference is to the fact that since Sir A. Conan Doyle and Sir Oliver Lodge have accepted Spiritualism, there has been an effort to make a new religion of the cult and so build up a new sort of faith, looking to that end, but so far these hopes have failed and are likely to continue to fail. It is quite strange how much confidence men have in men and how little they have in the Infinite God of Heaven and earth. Although God has made a revelation of Himself to man, yet man, left to himself in the unregenerate state, he will most likely turn and accept the ipse dixit of a man, and follow him more readily than he will the Everlasting God. That is proof of the weakness of the man. Hence when Mr. Lodge and Mr. Doyle tried to make people believe that they had discovered proof of the reality and truth of Spiritism, there were men and women who readily believed what these two men said rather than what the Bible itself says, as to the facts involved. Sir Barrett, quoted above, also made another very wise remark as to the worth of Spiritualism, when he said: "Neither ancient nor modern spiritualism has added to the intellectual or moral advancement of the race, and that the objection of Christian theologians to the cult is largely justified." We believe that is true, and in that event, Spiritualism is flat on its face—it cannot look up and command the confidence of the good people, even of modern times, and that being true, it does seem that other peoples might look before they leap. The high standing of Sir Oliver Lodge in the world of Science and of Sir A. Conan Doyle in the world of letters seem to give them weight thus qualifying them to be strong leaders of such a cult. They did become leaders of this cult but they lead quickly to the place where such things drop out of sight. Spiritualism—a veritable quicksand in human society!

AN UNFORTUNATE DIVISION.

One of the great missionary societies of modern times is what is known as The Church Missionary Society in England, working through the Church of England. It has been established over one hundred years and has done a great work in the spread of the gospel and in the building up of the Kingdom of Christ in the world. Its history is full of interest because of its great achievements in the field of missions.

It is said that there were twelve events, taking place in the year 1786, which led to the formation of this society and to the awakening of a great and far reaching missionary interest in England. Three of these events may be named here as (1) William Wilberforce dedicated himself to the abolition of slavery. (2) Granville Sharp planned to settle the liberated slaves at Sierra Leone. (3) The Eclectic Society, which was founded for mutual improvement, in 1873 by a few clergymen and laymen of the Church of England became very much interested in Foreign Missions for the first time. This led to a very earnest discussion of missions in the foreign field. In 1789 this society again discussed the work of foreign missions, but no great advance was made. In 1791 Charles Simeon again brought the subject of foreign missions to the attention of the Eclectic Society. Out of these seventeen people who were present, it is believed that only three were favorable to foreign missions. These were: Charles Simeon, Thomas Scott and Basil Woode. An abiding interest was kindled, but not much beyond this was accomplished, as it seemed at the time. Years later it was declared by one who was present that the meeting in 1791 proved to be the foundation of the Church Missionary Society. It has done great things in the missionary field till this day. Now after 137 years the missionary ship of this society has struck a snag in its work and it is divided into two parts. The new wing is led by Dean Wace and a number of other men, who because of excessive modernism felt they could not work with the parent society. Sixteen missionary bishops are appealing to the people to stand by the old society, meantime the new branch is going forward. The new society is called The Bible Churchman's Society. Its name seems to indicate that there is a lack of loyalty to the Bible on the part of the leaders of the old society, and the new one is seeking to serve that part of the Church of England Society which believes in the verbal inspiration of the Bible and its inerrancy. The old society reaffirms its unwavering faith in the supreme authority of the Holy Scriptures in all matters of faith and doctrines and in the evangelical doctrine of Christ's person and work. This does not satisfy the members of the new society, and hence the division of the people over the long established missionary work of the society. The division is much lamented, but so far there seems no way to get the factions reunited. What the outcome is to be we cannot forecast now. Something like ten years ago we predicted (and we make no claims to the gifts of prophecy) that just such divisions will come in the several denominations sooner or later, and that it will come as a result of this lack of faith in the Bible on the one hand and a demand for full faith in it on the other hand, and between the two we shall see the various denominations shifting not a little. The Conservatives in all the denominations will drift to one another, and then the radicals in all denominations will drift to a single organization, and then we shall see what will come. Most likely it will be the praise and glory of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is to be greatly lamented that such divisions are inevitable—inevitable because the one side contends for the Bible as the authority for all we have in the Christian life and teaching, while the other is rapidly tending to repudiate all authority, except every man is to be governed by his own mind, and that is the beginning of religious anarchy and ruin. Anarchy refuses to recognize authority and desires to have everything done as it may be pleasing to each individual in his own sphere. We are now beginning to look upon this sort of thing in the Church of England, but it will not remain in the Church of England. In less than twenty-five years most of the evangelical denominations will be splitting up into groups of Fundamentalists and groups of Radicals, and when the smoke of battle has cleared away we shall have two great bodies—the Fundamentalists and the Radicals. What next?

GOOD AS FAR AS IT GOES.

Dean Inge of St. Paul's Cathedral of London has been considered a liberal in his theological views. Recently, however, he has spoken in a direct way as to his personal beliefs. His confession has startled many of his friends who was counting him as a "modern." The moderns no doubt feel a degree of chagrin because of the loss of such a strong man from their ranks, if indeed he was ever one of them. A good many people like to take things for granted, especially when the things taken for granted are on that side which they support.

Dean Inge says in his Outspoken Essays, in the essay on Confessio Fidei: "I have made the whole weight of my theological position rest on a certain conviction about the historical Jesus, namely, that He was the Incarnate Word, Logos, of God." Then it is said that for Dean Inge, as for all orthodox believers, the Christian name stands for the acceptance of the divine word. Then he adds: "If I felt that I had lost it, I should not think it honest to call myself any longer a Christian, or to remain in the Christian ministry." He further accepts unhesitatingly the testimony of the great cloud of witnesses to the truth and power of the Christian revelation. Then he adds: "The evidence of the saints to me is absolutely trustworthy." Dean Inge thinks "the incarnation and the cross are the central doctrines of Christianity." So it seems clear that whatever may be said of Dean Inge and his views of Christian doctrine in the future, it cannot be truly said that he is a modern. It is intimated that he is a heretic, but along some other line of thought. That may be true, but as we see it, if Dean Inge is true to the divine revelation of the Scriptures and that Jesus was the Incarnate Word, or Logos, of God, we do not see how he can go far astray as to the great fundamentals of Christianity, and for the reason that these two points on which he seems to be as sound as a dollar really cover so large a space in sound doctrine that he can hardly go very far astray without being brought face to face with his own convictions, so that out of respect to his own acknowledged faith he must stand true to the great fundamentals as Jesus taught them. We hope this brave stand of one who has been counted a modern may stimulate many of the young men who are now in the ministry to straighten up and take a stand for the truth of Christianity. We believe Dean Inge is right when he says: "If I felt that I had lost it (the truth of the Incarnation of the Word of God) I should not think it honest to call myself any longer a Christian, or to remain in the Christian ministry." That has the ring of a true man in what he says, and we commend his thought and example to any who may be tempted to repudiate the Incarnate Word of God. We see how some men might give up some, or all, of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, but we do not see how they could remain in the Christian ministry and accept support from a Christian Church, or other institutions, while they should thus renounce their allegiance to the cause of Christian truth.

We are glad to know that Dean Inge takes such a bold stand for the truth as we have it in Christ, not only for his own sake, but also for the sake of many a young man who though the influence of his teachings might be induced to repudiate great truths which are fundamental in the Christian Faith.

Dear Young Men, you who are thinking of entering the Christian ministry, let us beg you to adopt the sentiment of Dean Inge, so that if you should come to a point in your life when you could not accept the great fundamental teachings of the gospel, then with him say: "No longer do I call myself a Christian minister and no longer will I remain in and draw my salary from a Church, or other institution, with which I cannot agree in its fundamental teachings." Surely no honest man can do less and maintain his honesty. While there are still some radicals in the gospel ministry, we are glad to see the tide of hetrodoxy has reached most probably its highest point, and is now most likely receding, and we wish it may be the decision of every true man of God that though he may be orthodox or hetrodox, he will at least be honest and take his place where he belongs and where he ought to go. We hope that the tendency, so apparent in recent years, of renouncing one's real allegiance to the Bible may disappear from the ministry, once and forever.

HOW SHALL WE SECURE PEACE AMONG THE NATIONS?

Since the beginning of the world war in 1914, there seems no sign of peace coming back to this world. We say, coming back, for it was in 1914 that peace among the nations seemed to take its flight, and from that day till this, its abiding place is known no more to men. Go where you will, or get the news from any part of the world, as you may, and it is all the same—it is strife and turmoil everywhere, and the nations cannot rest because of the absence of peace from the earth. Even private homes, communities, Counties, States, and even the Church itself, seems to be looking for peace, but they find it not. We wonder why. There must be a reason why it cannot be found in any sphere of human society. There must be a reason for this state of things, but who can point it out, or who can show the way to a condition of human society which every one seems to so much desire?

Every unit of human society seems to be seeking peace, and yet it is not found. During the last four years, or since the close of the world war, when peace was supposed to have been made among the nations, we have had conflict between the nations and the struggle still goes on. The world leaders have been crying peace, peace, but it does not come, but the prospect for war gets bigger each day to the dismay of every lover of peace. Since the close of the world war twenty-nine peace conferences have been held, not one of which has seemed to bring real and lasting peace any nearer to a war-mad world. The twenty-ninth peace conference has but recently closed its labors, and as it closed, it was agreed that as a peace messenger it had failed and the world is standing in dismay, not knowing what to expect next, meantime France and Germany seem to be making ready for another great war. The whole world, or nearly so, seems to be at war and cannot make peace. Why? Well, there must be a reason. Selfishness seems to be in the saddle, and the nations cannot agree on terms of peace because each one desires to get the best of the situation. The good of all seems never to get a place in the many peace conferences which have assembled during these last four years. —assembled only to adjourn with the peace problem unsolved, and the outlook no better, so far as peace is concerned, and may be not so good as it was when the Versailles Conference met. In the closing of the late conference at Lausanne, Switzerland, the conference adjourned abruptly, Premier Bonar Law and Premier Poincare agreeing that agreement was impossible, and so another conference seeking peace adjourned without it. Who can tell us why agreement was impossible? There is an Old Book, written about seven hundred years B. C., which tells us just why this state of things exist among the nations of earth. Turn to Isa. 59:8, and read:

> "The way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment in their goings; they have made them crooked paths: whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace. Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us; we wait for light, but behold obscruity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness. We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes; we stumble at noon day, as in the night; we are in desolate places as dead men. We roar all like bears, and mourn sore like doves; we look for judgment, but there is none, for salvation, but it is far from us. For our transgressions are multiplied before and our sins testfy against us: for our transgressions are with us; and us for our iniquities, we know them. In transgressing and lying against the Lord, and departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood. And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth, and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey; and the Lord saw it, and it displeased Him that there was no judgment"—Isa. 59:8-15.

We think there is an explanation of the unrest of the earth. Read it again and see if it does not apply in the present situation of the nations. May it not also explain why it is that all of the twenty-nine peace conferences have failed, giving us no peace. The offence of the nations is more against God than it is against each other, although we have no doubt offended against our fellows, but we have too largely left God out of our thoughts and plans; and without Him, we cannot make peace. Let us get right before the Lord, and then we may get the spirit of righteousness and make peace with one another. We must turn to God for peace, or we shall not get it. Leaving God out of our plans and purposes is the secret of the failures of our twenty-nine conferences, and here we are yet without peace.

SCIENCE VERSUS SPECULATION.

Science is knowledge; known facts; not speculation, conjecture, theory, nor guesses.

Speculation may end in science, knowledge, but speculation is not science.

A glance at Webster's International: "Science, from 'scire, to know.' I—Knowledge! knowledge of principles and causes; ascertained truth or facts."

There are other definitions given, but none contradicts the one here quoted, and all others are embraced, or included, in this one.

But let us look at "Speculation," from the same authority.

"Speculation: A conclusion to which the mind comes by speculating; mere theory; view; notion; conjecture."

But what is it to speculate? "Speculate; from 'specere, to look.' I—To consider by turning a subject in the mind, and viewing it in different aspects and relations, to contemplate; to theorize."

So we see that the difference in real science and speculation is world-wide. The one is real knowledge, the other conjecture, theory, guess. That there is a planet called Mars is fact, knowledge, science; but that it is inhabited, that there are angels on it, is speculation. Nobody knows. So all this leads to the irresistible conclusion that a whole lot of "junk" is being dumped off on the people in the name of science, that is mere conjecture, theory, guess—speculation. And he who does not swallow the whole unscientific, factless jumble without question is dubbed an ignoramus, old fogy, moss-back, or back number.

It is an insult to one's reason to have the evolution theory of the origin of man "dished out" to one in the name of science. Where is the proof? Where is the evidence? Where are the facts? Give us the facts—proof—not speculation, and we can but accept them, or it. But until that is done, please excuse us when we demur. A thing begun in conjecture, continuing in conjecture for half a century or more, could not be labeled science. It is an insult to man's intelligence, and an imposition on the superficial and credulous.

Christian Science is a misnomer, but no more so than to call the conjectures and speculations of evolution in reference to the origin of man science. The Adventures of Baron Munchausen are as well authenticated as the vagaries of evolution as to the origin of man. And when we ask for proof, we are met with a frenzied reply about "scholarship." But this is old. It is threadbare. It cuts no figure. But it continues to be "trotted out" with all the cocksureness of a mathematical demonstration, as if by some kind of mental jugglery twice two could be made to equal five. This evolution crowd who have rejected the Bible for human speculation, seems to become so obsessed with this infatuation that they remind us of Don Quixote, Sancho Panza and the windmills.

Ask for proof and we are met with a string of words only about "science," "scholarship," and "assured results," but no proof. If this crowd has all the scholarship, wisdom, and knowledge in the world, it is passing strange that if they have the proof, they cannot make it so simple and evident to all, that all controversy would be at an end at once.

We are not unaware of some of their so called proofs, but the proofs are like their theory, sadly in need of proof, leaving the whole thing in the field of conjecture and speculation—not science.

It is tiresome, to say the least, the way some of the papers try to poke fun at W. J. Bryan. Men, some of whom, perhaps have never read the Bible through, much less studied it, but accept, unexamined, and unquestioned, the extravagant claims of pseudo-scientists.

Paul speaks of a class of people who "receive not the love of the truth that they might be saved," but "believe a lie that they might be damned." And God through the prophet pronounces a woe against those who put "darkness for light, and light for darkness." Who "are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight." Is. 5:20,21.

Please cease labeling conjectures and "unproved hypotheses" science. And instead of proof, raising a "smoke screen" and camouflaging the subject by noisy talk about "scholarship." You "can't fool all the people all the time."

—J. F. Dosier, in Exchange.

Are you a tither; That is the same as asking this question: Have you ever studied your Bible carefully on the subject of tithing? One who will study the Book with open mind will be convinced that tithing is God's plan of financing His Kingdom and of a asserting His sovereign ownership over all possessions.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The loss of the Administration Building at Elon College is the greatest calamity that has ever befallen the Institution. It should awaken sincere sympathy and renewed loyalty in every member of the Christian Church within the Southern Christian Convention. It should do more: it should inspire voluntary gifts to the college to aid in re-building, and generous donations in this time of need. Men and women of means should count it a privilege and an opportunity to give to the more permanent structure which the new day and the growing Institution require. The new Administration Building must be greater, a fire-proof structure has been planned, and other buildings will be necessary to fully equip the college.

It should, also, revive the interest in Men and Millions pledges and stimulate the payment of these pledges up to date, and, when possible, to pay such pledges in full. All the Departments need the money subscribed, but Elon needs her part as never before. The Mission Board has made pledges based upon Men and Millions pledges, and that Board needs every cent as it becomes due. That Board gets 40 per cent of the total sum paid into the Men and Millions Fund. Education receives 40 per cent, too, but this 40 per cent is divided between Elon College, Bethlehem College, and Christian Education. Elon receives 18 per cent, Bethlehem College 12 per cent, and Christian Education 10 per cent. It is no time for excuses, or delay. The emergency has arisen out of the ashes of a great fire and heroic effort should be made by all subscribers to pay all that is due, and for those who can to pay in full. Thomas Carlton of Burke County, North Carolina, illustrates the spirit that should inspire subscribers to Men and Millions pledges at this time. He was an old man during the civil war. He not only gave goods to sustain women and children, but gave his fine sons to the cause; one by one they fell, until at length a letter came telling that the last and the youngest, the blue eyed, fair haired Benjamin had fallen. He made no complaint, uttered no exclamation of heart-broken despair, but called his delicate son-in-law, who had been discharged by the surgeon, and said, his body trembling with emotion and tears rolling down his cheeks, "Get your knapsack, William, the ranks must be filled." When we think we have done all we can, we can still do more, the best experience in service is often that final thing we do under the compulsion of unexpected conditions. This is one of those times, and every subscriber, large or small, should be moved by a Christian impulse to pay the pledge at any personal sacrifice. The thing that counts most in the history of Jesus Christ is His self-sacrifice. The cross is the pivot on which the gospel turns. Had He failed there salvation would have been unknown. Do not shrink from the hardest task. Parturition means new life. The payment of your pledge may help to transmute ashes into a building, a great loss into a great gain. Try it.

ELON LETTER.

The Alamance County Campaign for $100,000 is on in full blast at this writing. Mr. W. E. Sharpe a leading business man and layman of the M. E. Church, is heading the movement up. Ministers and laymen and the woman leaders of the county, irrespective of denomination, are aiding whole-heartedly in the work. The weather and sickness have added to the difficulty of the work, but seemingly it has also added to the enthusiasm of those able to work and to their determination to help the College in its crisis.

The ladies of the Christian Church on Monday evening preceding the campaign gave a splendid banquet in the room used by the American Christian Convention. Mr. Sharpe was toastmaster. Several excellent speeches were delivered. Though it was a wretched night outside, all was cheer and hopefulness within. More than seventy-five workers sat around the banquet table. Mrs. J. M. Fix was chairman of the committee on arrangements and did her work well.

On the eve of the Alamance County Campaign the governor of North Carolina voluntarily did a magnanimous thing. He sent a telegram to Mr. Sharpe and issued an appeal to the people of the State. I am printing both in full as inspiration to our people.

The Governor's Telegram.

"W. E. Sharpe, Burlington, N. C.,

"I hope Alamance will rise to its full duty in raising funds to rebuild Elon College, that noble institution of learning which is one of the beacon lights of education in North Carolina. I am today issuing an appeal to the people of the State to contribute to its rebuilding.

"Cameron Morrison, Governor."

The Governor's Appeal.

"Calamity has befallen one of the State's most honored and efficient institutions of learning. Elon College is in ashes: but its spirit lives. The call for funds to rebuild the destroyed Administration Building has gone forth; and to this appeal it is my pleasure to add a word of exhortation to our people. I hope that every North Carolinian who can do so will contribute liberally to the rehabilitation of this beacon light of learning, which has gained and most creditably maintained the standard of a Class A College. Contributions may be addressed to Dr. W. A. Harper, President, Elon College, North Carolina.

"Cameron Morrison,
Governor of North Carolina.

This voluntary interest on the part of the first citizen of North Carolina in our stricken college will bring inspiration to many a heart in our brotherhood. In our sorrow and affliction, sympathy when it is sincere stirs our hearts to new resolves. We of the Christian Church shall endeavor to make good Governor Morrison's high opinion of us during the future years.

Seriously, beloved, we must make good. Our friends expect us to do it and so does our Heavenly Father. Every affliction is a challenge to the sincere, devout Christian to relieve it. Suffering has its place. Elon is suffering now. But our hope in the Christian Church is unabated. We believe in the Christian Church and its people. If there were any in our church who for any reason were lukewarm toward our college, this disasterous fire has burned away every barrier. Am I mistaken in the expectation that our church shall arise as one man and put our college on the most solid foundation it has ever had? I cannot believe that I am. In sorrow and suffering our hearts ache together and forgetting the things that are behind we shall press forward in a united effort to build a bigger and better Elon. I know our people and they will assume their responsibilities in this crisis in the spirit of united sacrifice and God will crown them with enduring success.

BROTHER ABE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PASTOR.

Dear Brother:

I am very glad to tell you that I have reached a very satisfactory answer to one of your very puzzling questions; namely, Why you never had a pastor who would report anything from your church to the paper. It used to be very humiliating to me to hear your sharp criticisms, for you placed the blame entirely upon your pastor and actually charged him with inefficiency and laziness. You gave as a reason for not subscribing to our paper that you never had a pastor that wrote a line in it about your church.

I have taken much time and great pains to go to the bottom of your question, and have emerged not only with the correct answer but also with plans whereby your church will be helped, and your pastor will be compelled to write about you. I found, strange to say, that you and your church and not your pastors, were to blame. There is nothing a pastor likes to do better than to report progress in his field, and a non-progressive church forces its pastor to be silent. Here is the real reason why none of your pastors ever reported anything from your church.

To illustrate take the long term I had with you as a pastor: Whenever any of the members died, they were buried before I knew anything about it. I could find no reason for writing the obituary of a brother, telling his birth, marriage and death which would concern nobody but the relatives, and as these did not subscribe to the paper, why should I write about it? When the young people got married they invaribly sought squire Johnson to perform the ceremony, why should I tell about it? There was a great need for painting the church, but it was never done, I couldn't get you interested in any forward step to the place where you would begin. You all wanted a revival, but we couldn't agree about the time. Some said July, others August, others September. Some wanted it in the day, others said it would be better to have it at night. You know I tried to get your church to move forward, but it just wouldn't, and this is the reason why none of your pastors ever wrote a line about your church to the paper.

I took notes from many pastors and churches and I found this to be the rule: that the church that was busy making improvements, supporting our enterprises, organizing the women and young people into societies that its pastor would be found reporting such things to the paper. And when I found a non-progressive church, I had to hunt to find the pastor. The church, therefore, makes the preacher as well as the preacher makes the church. They ought to grow together. Did you know at this very time you have it within your power to greatly enlarge the usefulness of your pastor, and to force him to write about your church to your paper;

Let me suggest a few ways how you may do it: Your church needs remodeling. You are well able to do it. Try it and see if your pastor does not write about it.

Your people made some pledges to Men and

Millions, get busy and be the first church to redeem its promises, and see if your pastor doesn't tell about it.

Plan to have a revival, pray for it, work for it, stop for it, and see if you do not read about it.

See that your finances are kept in good shape. Remember our orphanage, and see if you do not hear about it.

Pound your pastor after the fashion of Rev. J. Lee Johnson's churches, and note what happens. Of course you know I was never very enthusiastic about pounding preachers. Sometimes it appears to be an apology for not paying a living salary. But your church may indulge in it for once. Get your folks together, get a good supply of good things for the pantry, crank your Fords and go to the parsonage. The next thing that will interest you in your paper will be something from your pastor about as follows: Last evening there was a gentle knock at our door, and on opening it, there were, to our surprise about forty of the good people from Pine View Church, headed by Brother Simon Abe, who informed us that (But your pastor will say the rest.) Try it, and if you don't get a hearing from your pastor about your church, then I will confess that I am wrong and that you are right.

Very sincerely,
T. E. WHITE.

PIEDMONT CHRISTIAN MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

The above is the name of an association of Christian ministers of the Piedmont section of North Carolina, which was organized in the pastor's study of the Christian Church of Burlington in December last. The meetings of the association will be held monthly, on Tuesday after the first Sunday in each month, for the present and perhaps for the remainder of this year. The association has as its object an occasional season of fellowship among our pastors as will be afforded in these meetings from time to time. It is also the purpose of the association to discuss from month to month various problems affecting our work. It is felt that the association will be a source of help and inspiration to its members and a blessing to our work in general throughout this section of North Carolina.

The second meeting of the association was held this afternoon (Tuesday, February 7) at the place of its organization and where its meetings are to be regularly held. The writer was in charge of the discussion for the afternoon on the subject which had been chosen for the occasion, as follows: "Evangelistic Work in the Rural Church." It was voted to ask the undersigned as leader of the meeting to prepare this notice for THE SUN.

A list of ten questions was submitted for consideration, as follows:

1. State some problems that enter into rural evangelistic effort.

2. Is the opportunity for rural evangelistic effort improving?

3. Are our rural sections adequately churched? If not, to what extent should we undertake to establish new churches in rural communities?

4. Why is the "annul series of meetings" in the rural church inadequate? How can these meetings be improved? What preparation should be made?

5. What can be done throughout the year along evangelistic lines? Would it be practicable to undertake week-day Bible study groups? Group meetings for prayer? Soul-winning study classes?

6. Why are trained workers needed? Who should they be? Why?

7. What contribution can the pastor make toward increasing the number of life-recruits for the ministry and the mission field?

8. How can we pastors better fit ourselves for doing evangelistic work?

9. To what extent should home talent be used in local evangelistic services? Is it usually best for the pastor to do the preaching in his special meetings?

10. In what way can rural and city churches co-operate to the advantage of the church in general?

It is almost needless to say that only a part of the questions proposed received attention, for it would be impossible for a group of preachers to discuss ten questions in one short afternoon. Since time prevented discussion of all these questions, it was necessary to start somewhere and end somewhere. This was done. Really and truly the discussion did end, at least for the present. The discussion centered around the thought of the problem of evangelism and the solution of that problem.

The suggestion was made by one speaker that it is more difficult now to do evangelistic work than formerly, and this speaker thought that the difficulty was due in part at least to the tendency of the present day to substitute that which is superficial for that which is fundamental in life. Another felt that the emphasis that is being placed upon "religious education" is hindering real evangelism. At this point a third speaker interjected the remark that it was his opinion that the lack of religious education (in the home) explains the difficulty of reaching the unevangelized with the appeal of the gospel. Just here one member stated that he believed firmly in the place and power of evangelism in life, yet he expressed it as his belief that religious education should accompany evangelism and as a vital element of it. In this all were agreed. While feeling that Christian nurture has its place, and a worthy place, in the work of the kingdom, there was unanimity of thought that no substitute can be had for "conversion" and "saving grace" although these terms are relegated by some as antiquated and unworthy of a place in modern speech and life.

As to the type of evangelistic service which will adequately meet the needs of the present, it was decided that the method to which the Master resorted, rather the method which He originated and instituted, that of the personal, spiritual touch with His own life and power, cannot be improved upon and, in fact, is the only solution of the problem of evangelization of the unevangelized. It was urged that every minister should strive earnestly to know the secret of Christ's success in winning men, and in knowing that secret and in following His example that failure would be superceded by victory in turning the hearts of the multitudes toward the way of life.

The substance of this discussion is mentioned that those who may chance to read these lines may get an idea as to what may be expected in the association from month to month. The meeting this afternoon was instructive and inspirational, and it is believed by those who were present that this fellowship will be conducive to greater things in the work of our several fields.

WHAT SHALL WE DO AT THE CONVENTION?

With the meeting of the Southern Christians, in extraordinary session this year; there comes the problem of what shall be done. All officers and boards are elected for two years. The reports made to the regular session are to be bi-ennial, if we are to spend the time in reviewing the work of the year and then go on in the same channels, it is hardly worth while to take the time and go to the expense of holding a meeting. What I want to say it this: I believe we should put on a constructive program. We should look forward to enlargement and cohesion in our work; and should correllate our forces and activities toward a definite end to be reached in a systematic and economical way conserving both energy and finances.

There should be a Finance Committee for the Convention to consider the calls for money sent out by all the departments and make recommendations for securing and distributing funds.

We have two secretaries in the field. Their work might be arranged so they would help each other and save overlapping and also save traveling expenses.

The denomination should not plan for just one or two years at a time, but should plan for twenty-five or fifty years in advance.

A committee on policy or plans or a steering committee, or by whatever name you wish to call it, might work this out in consultation with the convention officials and the various boards.

Our Home and Foreign Mission work, our educational and religious educational work and our orphanage should be planned fifty years ahead now.

It is possible to make a program at this convention which can be followed in the main for half a century. A full and free discussion through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, for the next two months, by those interested, would be helpful in working out any definite plans for the future.

PRAYING FOR A REVIVAL.

The people of Third Ave. Christian Church, Danville, Va., are planning for a revival, beginning the first Sunday in April. The preaching will be done by the Rev. J. Lee Johnson. Our people are under the impression that this will be the greatest meeting in the history of our church, under the leadership of our pasor, the Rev. P. T. Klapp. We are making fine progress, spiritually, because he brings us the whole truth just as the Lord laid it down in His word. We are praying that this may be the greatest outpouring of the Holy Spirit that our people have ever witnessed. Brethren, we need your prayers. Pray for us that we may have the greatest meeting in our history. We have got a great field here and there is a great work to be done. There are many people in our community who need to be saved. Our young people have all ready begun to hold cottage prayer meetings, preparatory to our revival, trying to reach the unsaved and get the cold and indifferent reclaimed and all together get right with God in order that we may have a gracious outpouring of God's Holy Spirit. Pray, brethren, pray for us that we may have a great meeting.

JOHN W. DIXON.

Some one has said that God sends His best messages to people who are faithful and busy. Well said! God took a shepherd boy to become the great law-giver of His ancient people. He took another shepherd boy to make a great King for Israel. He took a busy herdsman to make a prophet to give His word to the people. Indeed, He does use the busy and faithful man for the larger things of the kingdom. Let not the lazy and the indifferent expect anything of the Lord, certainly not in the way of high usefulness.

THE CHURCH AND THE TIMES.*

By Rev. T. G. Vickers, Pastor M. E. Church, Henderson, N. C.

(Read before Wilmington Ministers' Association.)

The fact that there is such a large proportion of the population of this country that is paying no attention whatever to the church and its message is the cause of grave concern to every true minister of Christ who is called to labor in these United States of America. It is not only those who are not members of the church that belong to this uninterested class, but great numbers of those whose names are on the rolls of the church and who pay their little dab toward its support but rarely ever attend its services. It is not difficult to understand how the outsider passes by ignoring the church and heedless of its warning proclamation, but that so many actual church members should be found away from the house of God on the Sabbath with only the most trivial excuses and most often with no excuse at all is a cause for serious thought among those who are charged with the "oracles of God". We naturally ask the question, Why does this condition exist, and what is the remedy for it? In a rather interesting, though unsatisfying address to a large audience of men I heard a secretary of the Navy a few years ago go into this matter somewhat at length, stating as the cause for this widespread unconcern regarding the church that there is a giant indifference stalking through our land blighting and blinding the spiritual perceptions of all men everywhere, and that there would not be a revival of interest in the church until that giant is slain. He did not attempt to give the name or dwelling place of the ogress that gave birth to the giant and continues to feed her monster offspring. There is no question but that there is a general indifference to the church and its teachings scattered broadcast over this land, and that people of every walk in life are woefully recreant when it comes to the matter of church attendance, but that indifference is but a symptom of the disease from which the church and humanity are suffering. We cannot be satisfied with this statement, however, for as sincere ministers we want to get at the cancerous growth itself—if there be such—and root it out at any cost. Our question here, then, is What is the cause of this indifference? In its evolutionary processes is human nature getting to the point at which it no longer stands in need of the saving and nourishing truths of religion? There is no evidence that human nature has begun to change materially, so this cannot be the case. Do men no longer desire the truths that have calmed and comforted so many millions of our kind during the last two thousand years? Has Christ's message grown old and out of date in these modern times? The evidence is to the contrary, for they are always seeking the truth and the story of Jesus and His love still grips the souls and controls the minds of many thousands of the brainiest and most profound men and women of our day. If men are still in need of the truth then, and still seek it why do they not attend the services of the church? The question now arises, Do they find that of which they stand in need in the church? Is the church in these modern times ministering to the religious hunger of men in a satisfying way; Is the power and the secret of ministry still to be found at her altars?

This is the question, therefore, that the church must answer. If human needs are no different from what they were in other days of the church's glory and the time has come when men are not coming to the church to be fed is it not incumbent upon the church at least to examine herself frankly to find whether the fault lies in her? Let me put it in the form of a syllogism in order that we may get at it clearly.

The spiritual nature of man requires food. But men are not going to church

Therefore the church is not producing food for the spirit.

The major premise is true. The minor is not altogether so, but there is enough of fact in it to force us to ask seriously if the conclusion states anything of fact, and the issue turns upon the quality and value of that which the church is offering men. Now if we can come to a candid acknowledgement of the nature of the disease and take the blame upon ourselves if we find it belongs there we shall have taken a long stride toward bringing the church into her own again.

Let me say once for all I am certain that the Christian Church possesses enough of the truth to supply all the demands of our day. Whether she has made the message clear and plain is another matter. This much is certain, There are mighty currents sweeping the human race today that could have had their origin in no other source than that of the Christian Church and its truths as taught during the last few centuries. are not among these which can be stamped so certainly as the progeny of that mother, however, though they are for the most part of that parentage. Yet as for the heart of the general movement it could as well have been of Mohammedan or pagan origin. This is one of the things I am incidentally trying to show in this paper.

Dr. Washington Gladden says the trouble with the church is organic, and goes on to say that it has failed to awaken its members to an aroused social consciousness. He defines salvation as the "change of that disposition of the individual to discriminate his own interest from that of his fellows to a recognition of the bond of unity which binds the individual to all his fellowmen and makes him a sharer with them in the good of life." Prof. Josiah Royce defines it as "a transformation of the self, not through the mere destruction of the narrow and currupt flesh which alienates it from the true life, but by the simple and yet positive devotion of the self to a new task—to its creative office as a loyal member of a beloved community." It seems to me that both these definitions are misleading, to say the least. They are just what the church has been teaching for many years, but they are nevertheless not a full statement of the truth. They are a clear statement of the social side of Mark 8:35. "Whosoever would save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it," (which, as Dr. Gladden says, is the law of the church's life,) but those definitions neglect the spirit underlying the letter which gives the law its force and value. This conception has given birth to a humanitarianism which attempts to express its love for man in the social service movements I have mentioned, though Dr. Gladden claims that the church has not taught the social ideal. I believe that it has, but be that as it may, if he is correct in the charge it still remains that the failure is of the nature of a symptom rather than of the disease itself. I say I believe the church has set forth the social ideal and that it is awake as nothing else in the world is awake to a sense of its social obligations. In the last few years it has made its offerings by the million for the relief and prevention of human suffering. She is going into the highways and hedges to do it. Her forces are being related and organized on every side to this end, but still the people are not flocking to her public services and the pastors console themselves and their parishioners who grieve at the situation that it is not merely a local condition, but that it is so everywhere.

But brethren, why is it so? If the church is carrying out the law of her life why is it that she is not reaching the three fourths of the population of this country that are so conspicious by their absence from her altars? Why is it that the increased social activities of the last few years have not brought the unchurched multitudes of all classes to her bosom?

The cause of the continued indifference lies back in the fact that the church has preached this law as the fundamental law of all life, including her own, until men have taken her at her word and gone about this great humanitarian task from a selfish motive! This is why the social movement could have been born of Mohammedanism or paganism. The minds of men have become convicted that there is no other way to enter into life and in order to possess it have set themselves with great organized energy to lose their lives that they may save them! Billy Sunday convinced the manufacturers of Pittsburg by actual demonstration that their men were more valuable to them without strong drink than with it and so they issued an order that no more men were to be employed who drink, and frankly stated that the order was solely for economic reasons, though the church and its teaching convinced them. They are trying to carry out the law, but they are missing the spirit of the law. The effort to carry it out is too conscious.

Now let us set forth the heart of the law of the church's life. P. T. Forsyth strikes it in the center when he says "Christianity is not primarily an issue between man and man, but between man and God. The Christian religion is not a religion of human service, but of divine." He well says "Self-sacrifice may be a subtle form of self-indulgence; while sacrifice for others may be for their bane. It is a question whether the sacrifice serves primarily God, man or self; whether it is a worship, a philanthropy or a self-culture." The church has been and is trying to save herself by serving man. The motive is selfish.

She has caught the vision of a great ideal, but makes the fatal mistake of attempting to realize that ideal by a direct service to and sacrifice for man. In other words, she has lost the sense of God in her sense of man. The fabric has topped over upon her and shut out her view of Him who is Himself her life. The awakening social consciousness has dimmed the God-consciousness and her effort to minister to men are merely to meet her social obligation and save her life.

The grestest thing in Christianity is not the brotherhood of man, but the revelation of God the Father. We have forgotton the latter in our contemplation of the former, which is a corollary to the latter and so is incidental. In the study of Jesus' contract with and compassion for humanity we have lost sight of his intimacy with the Father. The church is attempting to do with her own hands and means what she can only do through God. She is in the world not for work primarly, but for worship, and the first object of her existence is to bear witness of Christ. We have been closing our prayers with the phrase "for Jesus' sake" all these years, but it is more often than otherwise a stereotyped form, a relic of that day when the church rejoiced in being a witness because she loved her Lord and was so glad that He loved her. We have turned aside in the progress of time from the glorifying of God to the glorifying of man. Christ is distinguished among all others in His estimate of the worth of man, but in all His labor for him it was through God that he acted. His object was to reveal the Father, and it was done unto the sick, the lame, the halt, the hungry and the naked according to their faith. His formula was "Thy faith hath made thee whole." In our effort to follow his example we minister to men's bodies and tell them of Him, but they do not hear and the church pew is still unoccupied. Our money goes to relieve and prevent suffering, to cultivate the mind and soul, but we do not convince the recipient of our bounty that we love God, and so he does not come to church. Brethren, we are trying to serve men in order to show our love for them and the effort falls to the ground because that is a selfish incentive. Love for God is the supreme motive that can stir men's hearts. "If a man love me he will keep my words," Jesus said to his disciples, and his words kept from that motive make the kind of service—for Jesus' sake—that brings men to Christ and to church. That is the heart of the law of the church's life and that is the note that must be sounded in order to vitalize and quicken the social message and the social ideal. Otherwise our message is a myth no better than the table of paganism. It leaves Christ out and in its ultimate practice is little better than a benignant atheism. It has driven millions of Frenchmen away from the church and is swelling the ranks of Socialism (which at bottom is as selfish as anything can well be in that it deifies the common good and goes no further) throughout the world.

Men believe in Jesus, but they turn away from the church which more than any other agency lays claim to the ability to hold Him up. He is but little more than a name to multiplied thousands of church people. The world is finding it out and is staying away from the sanctuary, attempting to solve its own problems. The vast underworld of human waste partakes of our bounty, but we are solving its problem only in isolated cases while the great tide sweeps on in its sin and indifference. The loaves and fishes constitute the only attraction. Neither does Labor nor Capital attend upon the services of the holy altars of God. They are struggling together for supremacy and selfishness is at the bottom of both their hearts.

The church herself has unwillingly put this sort of selfishness into the times by her cold-blooded effort to teach the law of life which she has proclaimed from the housetops and in every nook and cranny in Christendom. She has done it by stressing service without keeping the motives of service before the world, and now unless the church can convince the world that it is service to God flowing out of love to Him that is the law of life, it will stand guilty of producing the very condition which it was sent into the world to remedy, namely, the reign of selfishness in the hearts of men. That is a great day in the life of an individual when he discovers God. So it will be when the church rediscovers Him and turns loose the mighty reserve forces of power and knowledge that lie locked up in her benevolent bosom. Church attendance will not be a problem then, and the giant indifference will have been slain, for the church of Jesus Christ will minister to the souls of men and dispense the word of life with a free hand.

One word more. I want to say that there are exceptions, and that those exceptions form the rock that keeps the institution alive and the organism vital, and but for them the day would soon dawn upon us when our Zion would perish from the earth.

*This paper was prepared and read before two ministerial associations, one at Wilmington, N. C., in 1915 and the other at Henderson, N. C., in February 1923. It is a very thoughtful paper and with all most timely for this day, a day when the Church is confronting many obstacles and other hindrances. Surely the theme, The Church and The Times, will interest and stir up every thoughtful reader and lead to a close examination of the true situation of the church as it relates to our Christian life and service. It will also stir up the conscience of the individual reader and induce him to ask himself: "Where am I?" See Gen. 3:10-13. Take your time in reading it and may you get from its vigorous thought a real help for your life as a Christian.—Editor Christian Sun.

"THE CHURCH AND THE MOVIES."

"The Church and The Movies," was the topic used by the Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of The Christian Temple of Norfolk, in the third sermon of the series of four sermons on "The Church."

Dr. Smith took as his text, Ephesians 5:16—"Redeeming the time for the days are evil." He said in part, "Every day brings its opportunities. If we utilize these opportunities we are better and the world is better. If we neglect them we stand in our own way and block the progress of the world.

"When we stand in the face of the complex problems of present day society we hardly know which way to turn. The moving picture art presents a problem, an educational, social, and religious problem. It is our problem, yours and mine. It is your problem whether you are a movie fan or not. Future generations demand of us, and rightly so, a proper solution to this problem. To disclaim this responsibility means to shirk the duty that circumstances have placed upon your heart.

Things Upon Which We are Agreed.

Since this is a common problem there must be a common ground upon which we may stand. There must be certain things upon which we are agreed. We are agreed that the moving picture art is a tremendous educational factor in human society. What we receive through our other senses we may remember, but what we receive through our sight we will hardly forget. Sight is rapid and accurate.

I expect to see the day when history, science and geography rooms in our schools will be equipped with some form of motion pictures. Instruction may be given far more rapidly and accurately than by the present method. And if in these branches, why not in religion?

We are agreed further, that the picture producers are subjected to the most insidious temptation, and from all accounts the majority of them yield. Some of the most staggering crimes of this day have been hatched out of Hollywood and Los Angeles. Then too there are bad pictures, that are vile and vicious that should never be flaunted in the face of a civilized public. And finally we are agreed that the moving picture is here to stay, and that it must be purified.

Things Upon Which We Are Not Agreed.

While there are some things about the moving picture business about which we are agreed, there are other things about which we are not agreed. We are not agreed as to the nature of the picture. A picture that I would call bad you would perhaps call good. You cannot tell what there is in a picture by the name or the bill board. If you could, the Censor Board would only censor the names and not the pictures.

Then too, we are not agreed as to the best way for a Christian to spend his time and his money. If you attend the pictures once a day, you give to this pastime twelve hours a week. Are you a Christian? How much time do you give your church? If you go to the pictures once a day you pay from two to two dollars and a half a week how much do you give your church for the spread of the Kingdom? These matters should be placed upon your heart. Would you give more time and money to the frivolous follies of the day than you do to Him by whose power, yea, by whose blood you have been redeemed;

I have two cases against the moving pictures, their vile, vulgar and insidious instructions by which the minds of the easily influenced are corrupted; and their determined persistency in ridiculing the Protestant Church, the church of my heart and of my home.

Things On Which We Should Be Agreed.

Then it seems to me that there are certain things on which we all should be agreed. First, that the type of picture presented to the public should be clean, pure and wholesome, with good morals and high ideals. Second, that if we are to have pictures they should be graded as all other proficient instruction is graded. What I mean is that there should be pictures especially for children. Would you think of entering your son in college at the age of ten? Then why expect him to receive this form of instruction on the screen meant for adults? Third, that one child should be permitted to see not more than one picture a week and better every two weeks. It is a scientific fact that too frequent attendance at the movies on the part of a child will destroy his power of concentration which is a serious defect in mental development. Fourth, that if a man be a Christian his church should come first, last and always; in his time, his affections and his benevolences. And last, that the church herself should enter upon a determined program to purify the moving picture industry.

The following cable from the Union Church on the Canal Zone, received by the Committee on Religious Work on the Canal zone, is of interest to the Protestant Churches which are concerned in the welfare of the men of the Army and Navy:

> "Combined Fleet arrives Canal Zone February 20th for two months. Can you secure $2,000 from Churches in the States to serve the boys of the Fleet while here? The Devil has unlimited means."

It is a notorious fact that every effort has been made across the border from the Canal Zone, which is under United States control, both in Colon and Panama City, to prepare for the coming of the great Fleet of the United States. Saloons, brothels, gambling dens, have been made ready to prey upon our boys.

The Union Church on the Canal Zone, composed of members of all denominations, and heartily endorsed by the denominations having membership in the Federal Council of Churches, is doing all it can to combat these conditions. This Church is entirely self-supporting, but must have aid from without to do what should be done to serve the men of the Navy. Protestantism is fortunate in having two very capable pastors for the four congregations of the Union Church.

Contributions sent at once to the Committee on Religious Work on the Canal Zone, Room 65, 105 East 22nd Street, New York City, will be forwarded in time to be of service during the next few weeks. Checks should be made out to Mr. Alfred R. Kimball, Treasurer of the Committee.

Subject: The Parable of the Pounds.—Luke 19:11-48.

Golden Text: "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much."—Luke 16:10.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 26:1-7.

Reference Material: Matthew 25:14-30; I Timothy 4:13-15.

"My child, be faithful,
Is the work small? This I require of thee,
Do it with all thy heart as unto me.
My child, be faithful,
Great is thy task? My grace will suffice thee,
In well-doing weary not, co-labor with me."
—Eleanor A. Sutphen.

"Neglect not the gift that is in thee—O Timothy, guard that which is committed unto thee." The apostle Paul in his very personal letters to his friend Timothy urged him again and again to be faithful, to be true to his God, to choose the best in life, and to be loyal to that best. The Paul interpreted the message of the Master, as he directed Timothy in the Christian pathway. Loyalty to our King is one of the first laws of the Kingdom.

"It may not be on the mountain's side,
Nor over the stormy sea;
It may not be at the battle's front
My Lord will have need of me."

But He has need somewhere. Whereever the service, whatever the deed, Jesus Christ approves the faithful servant. The parable of the lesson again emphasizes the eternal truth of the Golden Text: "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much"; and the servant who was rewarded with the Master's "well done" was the one who in his Master's absence was at work. It is often even more difficult to perform the small task faithfully. Too many times it is not regarded as important enough to merit careful thought and action

This story is told by Mr. Cheley that when Phidias was carving the statue of Diana to be placed on the Acropolis, he was working at the back side of the head, and was bringing out with his chisel every filament of hair, as far as it could be done in marble: and it was said to him, "That figure is to go up a hundred feet, and is to stand with its back to the marble wall, and who will ever know what work you put there?" "But" replied he, "The gods will know"; and worked on. Do not hesitate to put your best work in the lowliest places; for if others do not know it, God will.

In the parable of the talents, as related in the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew, men were entrusted with great gifts, and the gifts varied in value. In this story all started alike with one pound, a seemingly insignificant trust. All had the same opportunity. The test was faithfulness to duty. The unfaithful servant was punished not so much for doing wrong, as for failing to do right. Jesus always places great stress on definite results, on accomplishing something. "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples." "By their fruits shall ye know them."

"Lord, thy pound hath made ten pounds more —hath made five founds more." It is not "I made" or "we made." The accomplishments may have been great, but the servants were willing to forego credit for themselves. Their modesty is a Christ-like trait, for the Christ lived and taught humility. "Not unto us, O Jehovah, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory" were the cry of the psalmist. "In His Name" may all things be accomplished.

Jesus and His disciples continued on their journey to Jerusalem. He entered the city riding on the colt, which the owner was glad to send to Him when told "The Lord hath need of him." Are all of your possessions ready for the Lord when He hath need of them? He is calling upon you for that consecration of life and belongings. The disciples rejoiced, but the Pharisees still criticized. Even while the rulers were so hostile to Him, the Christ was grieving over the fate which the city was to experience. The temple was cleansed as Christ drove out the dishonest money changers. And He continued daily to teach in the temple while "the people all hung upon him, listening." Every day was filled with service to the people who needed Him so. He was preaching and teaching that many might know and believe and be saved, that they might go out to spread the gospel, in His service. Only in such service can Christians be faithful. Only so can they win the "Well Done" when the day comes when they may face their great Master and Lord.

"Are you serving Him who died for you?
Are you true to Him, as He is true?
From your glad allegiance never more to swerve,
Are you saved, saved to serve?
—E. E. Hewitt.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

February 25, 1923.

"What are some temptations to lie and how can we overcome them? Proverbs 12:17-22.

Thoughts on the Topic.

Our words are our means of expressing what is in the heart. Do your words show a righteous or a deceitful heart? Words reveal much, and when once uttered can never be recalled.—Verse 17.

"Boys flying kites
Haul in their white-winged birds
You can't do that when you are flying words."

Rash words are often regretted, when the harm is done. "Think twice before you speak" is a good maxim, and might avoid many an untrue, as well as many an unkind word.—Verse 18.

The lie is uttered for the moment to escape punishment, or to gain some end. But its gain is but for the moment, while the real result goes much farther, and causes much harm. "Sin has many tools, but a lie is the handle that fits them all."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.—Verse 19.

Before the lie is spoken, it is in the heart. Christians should pray often the prayer of the psalmist: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."—Verse 20.

The following is quoted from "Bull's Notes," in the book "Short Stories for Talks to Boys":—

"We are a nation of liars—sometimes chaste in body and wanton in words. A little list of liars:

"The Boasting Liar, who overstates his accumulations, his ability, his acquaintances, his activities. Celebrated people—"Oh yes, I know them intimately." He has only a chance introduction. He conducted a meeting where he got a frost, and reports it like a Pentecostal fire. Glorious! Speak straight. Say you have only so much, or you scarcely know the great man, or the service was a drag.

"The Malicious Liar, who tells us unkind things—plus the poison of his own personality.

"The Cowardly Liar, who, from fear or reproof, will stand from under a responsibility Tell the truth and take it like a man.

"A Petty Prevaricator, who explains that he failed to keep an engagement because he was ill, or out of town, or thought it was Tuesday when it was Wednesday. Say, 'I am sorry, but I simply forgot it.'

"It takes the power of God to make a liar truthful. Chastity in conversation, brethren. 'All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire.'

This gives many of the temptations which led to untruths, and suggests the way of successfully overcoming them—seeking the power of God, and "they that deal truly are his delight."

"Mine honor is my life; both grow in one;
Take honor from me and my life is done."
—Shakespeare.

Plans for the Meeting.

Try a "Leaderless Meeting." The Prayer Meeting Committee will plan the program, and write it on a chart or blackboard in front of the Society, and the meeting will proceed without a regular leader to offer prayer, several to read the Scripture and make short talks on different phases of the subject.

A Bible reading on what the Bible says about lying will be instructive and helpful. The following passages, with others if desired, may be used:

Lying an Abomination to the Lord—Proverbs 6:16-19.

Debars from Heaven—Revelation 21:27.

Established but for a moment—Proverbs 12:19.

Forbidden—Col 3:9.

Produces hatred—Phoverbs 26:28.

Produces disrespect—Ps. 40:4.

Punishment for lying.—Ps. 5:6.

A righteous man hateth lying.—Proverbs 13:5.

The wicked man hateth lying.—Ps. 62:4.

Suggested Hymns: "Yield Not to Temptation;" "Jesus Calls Us;" "Love Divine;" "Nearer My God to Thee;" "Stand Up for Jesus;" "Take the Name of Jesus with You."

"He said likewise
That a lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies,— That a lie which is all a lie may be met and fought with outright,—But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight."

ELON CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

July 30th-August 5th.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Southern Christian Convention will be held at Elon College, July 30th through Sunday August 5th, under the direction of the Board of Religious Education. The Board is glad to announce that the college authorities have given assurance that the recent fire will make no change neccessary in the plans for the Chautauqua, and arrangements will be made for carrying on the work. Details of program are being worked out now by the Program Committee, which consists of Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of Richmond, C. H. Stephenson, of Raleigh, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary of Richmond. The program will include a morning devotional period, class and lecture periods, and an afternoon recreational program, and musical and lecture features at night. Definite information regarding teachers and speakers will be announced in the near future.

Elon, during Chautauqua week, is suggested as an ideal time and place to spend a vacation week. A time of rest and recreation, combined with the opportunity to mingle with people of your own church from various sections, and to learn more about how to meet your local problems, will give a week of profitable and enjoyable vacation time. In planning for your summer, don't fail to cinsider Chautauqua week at Elon. Besides the special program of the Chautauqua and School of Methods, an opportunity is offered to come in personal contact with the college and orphanage of your church. Your college, and your orphanage, joins with the Board of Religious Education in inviting you to your Chatauqua and School of Methods.

"A word to the wise is sufficient." Chautauqua Week is July 30th to August 5th!

LOOKING AHEAD!

The Daily Vacation Bible School.

The Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention last October took a long look ahead. They had been hearing the reports of the last year's work, and were using the accomplishments as stepping stones to a greater year's endeavor. Four Daily Vacation Bible Schools were held last summer in churches of the Southern Christian Convention, at the Bethlehem Church in the Valley of Virginia; at the Pleasant Grove Church, near News Ferry, Virginia; at the Holland Church, with Holland and Holy Neck Churches united in the work; and at Elon College, in connection with the Chautauqua and School of Methods. The work of these four Schools convinced the members of the Board of Religious Education that the work was eminently worth while and that it offered an opportunity for Christian Education which could not be overlooked by our Southern Christian Churches. They voted that the number of these Schools in 1923 be at least ten, with as many more as possible. Now we are looking ahead to find the ten and the others. To find them, we shall have to answer some questions:

1 What is a Daily Vacation Bible School?

It is a school conducted by the church during the children's vacation from the public school for Christian and moral teaching and training. It originated in New York City about twenty years ago under the leadership of Mrs. Robert Boville. It has spread to many cities, towns and country sections until now every summer thousands of children enjoy and profit by these Vacation Bible Schools. The Daily Vacation Bible School is held because the Sunday School hour does not give enough time for the instruction of youth, and during the summer time they have the time to come to such a school.

What does the program of the Daily Vacation Bible School include?

The program may vary, according to the wisdom and ingenuity of the leader, but the following elements should be included:

A definite period of worship, with hymns, Scripture, prayer, and offering.

A period for Memory Work, when hymns and Bible passages may be learned.

The Bible Story time.

A time of good fellowship, when songs, cheers, announcements help to develop loyalty to the school, and the things for which it stands. This with the recreational period, which every well-organized school recognizes as of value, carries out the "Vacation" idea of the Daily Vacation Bible School.

Handwork, giving an opportunity to give expression to the story told, or to make objects which will help in our mission work.

Health talk, Training in Christian Citizenship, through flag drills or salutes.

A Missionary Story, or Object Lesson.

These elements combined by a leader whose heart is in the work, aided by consecrated teachers, make a program that cannot fail to attract the interest of the children and the community. Usually they are the ones to demand that the School continue longer!

When, where, and for whom will this School be held?

The best time for the Daily Vacation Bible School has been found to be soon after the close of the public school, before the boys and girls have lost the school habit, and before "visiting time" comes around. The most successful schools are usually in the early summer.

The best place for the Daily Vacation Bible School is in the church and Sunday School rooms. This connects the work with the church as it should be, gives opportunity for training in reverence, love for the church, and wins boys and girls to the Sunday School and church. It is the work of the church, carried on in the church, to accomplish the most good.

For the boys and girls, is the school planned and carried on. Local conditions determine age limits, if such are necessary. Little Beginners of three and four years, up to their big Intermediate brothers and sisters have all been found enthusiastic members of Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

How can we have a Daily Vacation Bible School in our Church?

This is the question which we hope that many of our workers will be asking personally, and very seriously. Realizing that it is a needed and important work, desiring its blessing upon their church and community, eager that their children shall have the opportunity it offers, we should have scores of inquiries as to how the work can really be put on locally.

1. Learn all you can about the movement. Talk about it. Pray for it. Write to the Field Secretary for information along any line which you are in doubt about. Read "How to Conduct a Church Vacation School" by Gage.

2. Call together your Sunday School Workers' Council, or a group of your leaders to discuss the matter. Have the best person possible to explain it. Make a thoughtful survey of available workers, as Sunday School teachers, public school teachers, college students on vacation. In one of our most successful schools last year, every teacher and worker was a busy woman, keeping house, with many duties to do every day. One woman came every day, with her three children, all under six, and taught a class. Workers can be found, if the interest is there. Financially, the cost will depend upon whether the workers are volunteers, or paid workers. Other expenses would be for teachers' books of Bible stories, missionary stories, handwork materials, and the like, and would be small.

3. After facing the matter fairly and squarely, decide what you will do about it. Determine whether you can afford not to undertake the work for the children of your church. When you decide to do it, advertise in every possible way, by personal visits, posters, letters, etc. Give your best to the work, and be assured that the best will come back to you.

Lastly, Will you have a Daily Vacation School in your church this summer?

This is the important question. It is vital to know what the movement is and what it stands for. It is essential to know what its program includes. It is necessary to face the question as to how it can be done. But the task is not finished, until you say; "Yes, we will undertake the work, with God's help."

During a conference of a group of teachers in a summer church school, one of them told this experience: "I was visiting one of the members of my school who had been away a few days. It was a hot afternoon and I was wishing for the cool breezes of my home. Anyway, I wondered whether it was any use trying to counteract the influence of those awful tenements. I came to the fourth floor of the tenement where the child lived. It was so dark I had to feel my way and positively I could not see my hand before my face. Just then I heard a voice from the fifth floor singing:

Hark, hark, my soul, angelic songs are swelling
O'er earth's green field, and ocean's wave-beat shore;
How sweet the truth those blessed strains are telling
Of that new life when sin shall be no more.

"When I heard that song, which the child had learned in our school, of green field and of a life that is sinless, sung by a child who perhaps had never seen green fields and who lived amid sin, I felt that if that was all I had accomplished that summer, it was much, indeed, to carry that sweetness into the fifth floor of that tenement."

The children in your church may not be living in dark tenements. But their lives will be made brighter by knowing the beautiful hymns of righteousness, by hearing the stories of Jesus, by learning to do things for others. And these very children are the grestest argument for a Daily Vacation Bible School in your School. Are you looking ahead and planning to give them the opportunity of attending a Daily Vacation Bible School this summer?

This is the age of work, both in the church and out of it. Given its right place work is a great thing, but when we give it a wrong place, then it will not accomplish what good work ought to accomplish. The first kind of work for the people who constitute the membership of a church is that mentioned in John 6:29. In these modern days we are most liable to forget the main work that believers must do and the work of secondary importance first. Jesus said in the passage given above (John 6:29): This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent."

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS AT BETHLEHEM.

A Diary Leaf 2

Wednesday morning, January 10th.

Rev. W. P. Fletcher, Toronto, a member of our Mission Board joined our company this morning and shared with us the joy of an early morning bath. I presume he was glad to get into the United States. He evidently took it for granted that it was spring time with us, as he ordered fresh strawberries for his breakfast. Canadians are so accustomed to real winter that even though we have snow on the ground they think we have perpetual spring. I was glad that the Bethlehem Hotel could accommodate him both to strawberries and radishes. Our country is so large, and yet so well connected, that even in winter, summer time vegetables may now be enjoyed in any part of our Republic. We had a delightful breakfast party, which makes any day begin well.

The great Conference met in the assembly hall of the hotel promptly at nine A. M. There are present three hundred and five delegates, representing fifty six denominations who have missionaries in all parts of the earth. Under the supervision of their delegates and their Boards there are working even in the uttermost parts more than ten thousand missionaries, at an annual expenditure of nearly forty million dollars. The first item after the opening was the China survey. There are now one hundred and thirty Christian societies doing missionary work in China. The survey of China recently made was to prevent overlapping of workers and expense and also to find out how workers, schools, churches and the hospitals may best be distributed in the future. The survey showed that in recent years there has been a great increase in the educational workers over that of evangelistic workers. This seems to be true in missionary work in recent years, namely, to push and develop the educational work, and from the educational work and through it deliver the message of evangelism. Bishop McConnell of the M. E. Church said that educators in China must empty themselves of any predisposition to think that the Western mind and character are superior to the Eastern mind and character and must seek to get the Chinese point of view. He told us that Bertrand Russell of Cambridge is a pure atheist. Yet on his recent trip to China he was given a great reception. Atheism in fact is on the increase in China and our whole Western civilization is now under fire in China. China, said he, has identified industrial America and manhood with Christianity, and many Chinese are prefering atheism to American industrialism. Recently a distinguished soviet Russian made a tour of China and was given ovation after ovation throughout the Chinese Empire. In brief, anything radical now goes in China. If Christianity is to save China from itself and the wave of atheism now sweeping over it, it will certainly have to be more aggressive and persistent in proclaiming the gospel of the Son of God and in teaching it to the Chinese youth. China, as well as many other nations, is in the crucible and its testing time has come. Will we Americans with our means and our men carry the saving knowledge of our Christ to this land now in upheaval, in doubt and seemingly standing on the very brink of the abyss?

Dean Russell in speaking of Training Teachers for China said the strange thing to him was that a college president or school teacher, and not a chemist, had given the slogan "Day by day in every way we are getting better and better." For no teacher is teaching more poorly this year than last and every college president has a school that "day by day in every way is getting better and better." But in spite of this, better trained teachers are needed in China if we are to cope with the native teachers in their equipment for teaching their ancient dogmas and doctrines of idolatry and atheism. It is a fact, said Dean Russell, that America has the most poorly prepared and least trained teachers of any country of the civilized world. President Butterfield of Massachusetts Agricultural College, who has recently been in China says that China is well launched on the sea of industrialism, that there is a mighty drifting to towns and cities, though China is in reality an agricultural people. Eighty-eight per cent of the Chinese people live in the country or in towns of less than 10,000 persons. China cannot be won by winning the cities alone. Christianity can abolish and is gradually abolishing famines in China. The Chinese farmer knows nothing of seed selection and improvement. He is subject to insect and plant diseases, and without help, in destruction of field and farm. We Christians by helping enlighten the Chinese farmer can abolish flood and famine in that vast empire. Through all ages the farmer has been either exploited or neglected, and now he needs teaching. Enlighten for righteousness the farming population of China and you uplift the whole Chinese people, said President Butterfield. And I wonder if this is not true of America also.

One speaker said if we could conserve the evangelistic results in the higher educational institutions we would be building a Christian empire within the Chinese empire—in other words the colleges were the leaven which are to leaven the whole lump in China. Educational institutions should become evangelistic centers. And that is true, too, of our country so far as the "should" is concerned, but do they?

The whole morning of the Conference was given to discusssing China. Here is the world's greatest problem, because it is the most populous empire. China is waking up and terrible indeed will be the awaking unless controlled by Christian ideals and principles. Dr. F. H. Knubel in closing the morning session with devotionals said that the Great Commission gave assurance of a supernational Presence. This has a tendency to give us a feeling of self-sufficiency. We must get away from this. We must realize our dependence on Him who said "ye must be born again". The authority in missions and the supreme manifestation in missions is the Christ. We must exalt Him, and not our methods, plans and programs. He is the truth, light and life. And the church has no other mission on earth than to make Him known—to make real and effective His presence in the world. In Him is our fullness, as Paul said, and the world's fullness, if it can be brought to Him.

We had a delightful lunch together—Milton, Denison, Fletcher and I. We never get really acquainted with one another in this life until we share each other's fellowship in the breaking of bread. Denison cannot eat (or should one say, drink) tomato soup; but he can eat cheese enough to cramp some of us for a whole night. Minton still sticks to his ice cream and Fletcher calls for fresh radishes. Verily the old Latins were right "Non disputanudum est de gustibus" which interpreted means "There is no accounting for the other fellow's taste."

At night Dr. Berry discussed Japan. "Japan is in a state of chaos." And when Dr. Berry said that I wrote in my diary, "Yes and this whole world seems to be in a similar or worse state." The impact of the East on the West has produced a congolomerate civilization in Japan. There is upheaval in Japan in art, literature, (we also have an upheaval in dress in this Christian country of America) educational and religion. The old landmarks have been swept away in Japan, and the real tragedy of it is the moral and spiritual chaos that now obtains everywhere in Japan. "Japan is losing her soul." Our task is to give to the chaos of Japan new ideals, a new civilization based on the teachings of Jesus.

Rev. Allen E. Armstrong talked on India. The Christian Church in India is making headway and is trying to become indigenous, self-governing, self-propagating. "It is the Christians' Bible that will save India."

The principal address of the evening was by Dr. C. Y. Cheng of China. My! but he is a scholar, a thinker and—a man. He has nothing new to offer about China, but says that China has aspirations, ambitions. China is suffering from the pains and pangs of growing. China is yet in darkness, but she is suffering over it. China is suffering from lack of the church, a real church that will carry to its heart the only power that can save it, namely, Jesus the Christ. Dr. Cheng is one of China's big men and is a Christian statesman. His weight in China for Christ and the church will prove of unspeakable worth. He says the heart of China is crying out today to the heart of Christian America "Come over and help us, or we perish."

At our rooms we discuss our own mission problems and wonder how long before this dear Christian Church of ours will wake up to a sense of its duty, privilege and obligation. We seem to grow timid or cowardly or fearful Christians—those not brave and big enough to face real dangers and great tasks for us on the mission field. We need missionaries for China now, And the cry comes up "Who will go for us?"

THE CHINESE-JAPANESE QUESTION AS SEEN BY DR. GULICK.

Letters from Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, secretary of the Federal Council's Commission on International Justice and Goodwill, who has spent recent months in China conferring with the missionaries, Chinese Christian leaders and leaders in the national life, are filled with observations as to the present relations between China and Japan. In Peking he held conferences with President Li Yuan Hung, Foreign Minister S. V. Wellinton Koo, and Prime Minister C. H. Wang. Dr. Wang, who was one of the Chinese delegates to the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armament, recalled with special interest the reception given by the Federal Council to the Chinese delegates last winter.

Dr. Gulick writes with great appreciation of the Chinese people and great sympathy with China's problems. Concerning the relations between China and Japan he says in a recent letter:

"From the day that I landed in Shanghai until I left Peking the most absorbing subject of conversation was the Shantung Question. Conferences between the Japanese and Chinese members of the two Commissions have been going on continuously. Outside of the members of the Commissions and those in immediate touch with them and the highest official circles, there seemed to be the deepest distrust of Japan and a fixed idea that Japan was certain to put something sinister over on China; that Japan was not sincere in her policy of restoration; that she was forced by the Washington Conference to an agreement that she did not like and that she intended to evade in every possible way; that the so-called restitution of Shantung would in fact be only a form and a sham.

"What Japan has already done in withdrawing troops from Tsinanfu and the railway, from Hankow and from Siberia, the actual handing over of the barracks and the wireless plant at Tsinanfu, and the actual withdrawal of all her forces from Siberia, seem to have made little impression on these doubts and suspicions. All these steps are apparently believed by many to be merely clever steps to the more certain ingulfing of China in Japan's sinister wiles.

"In talking with Japan members of the Commission and others, the desire was frequently expressed that these conferences and especially these objective acts might lead to re-establishment of friendly relations, which all Japanese apparently consider highly important for Japan. Highly placed Japanese expressed their solicitude as to China's ability to take over and administer efficiently the Shantung railway and especially the splendid city which Germany built and which the Japanese have extended in area and construction. In this anxiety practically all Americans shared and even many Chinese also.

"Among the most important Americans with whom I talked, however, those who have immediate access to the facts, the attitude was quite different. They stated without qualification that Japan's policy toward China has fundamentally changed; that at the Washington Conference a new spirit was developed, which is now being put into action; that the various deeds already to Japan's credit are producing a new relationship; and that leading Chinese are greatly relieved and even pleased with the turn of affairs.

"The fact seems to be that Japanese militarists still have considerable influence and are striving in the conferences to make the Chinese pay as large a sum as possible for the properties to be returned; the Chinese delegates on the other hand are seeking to cut the costs down to a minimum. This financial bone of contention is tending to conceal the larger significance of what Japan is agreeing to do, rather has already agreed to. The financial haggling spoils the splendid psychological opportunity of the Japanese in returning the whole area in such a fashion as to arouse confidence and goodwill. Japan seems to have lost the opportunity of doing a dramatically effective thing in winning China's confidence."

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

On the evening of our arrival here a program had been arranged at the church on our behalf. Our boat was a little late and so the folks were waiting for us. Rev. J. N. Cutchin, of Rosemont, who had been supplying as minister at the church for the month of October was in charge of the meeting. He spoke words of welcome in behalf of the church. His address was followed by an address by the Mayor of the City of Portsmouth, J. L. Hutchins. Then Revs. J. L. Kinsey, of the Friends Church, L. J. Phaup, of the Methodist Church, and B. F. Robertson of the Baptist Church spoke very cordial words of welcome. After a few words of response by the new pastor the ladies of the church served light refreshments. Thus ended a very pleasant evening and we entered upon our new work which up to the present has been going quite nicely.

The people have been responsive and seemingly appreciative and we have had some helpful meetings together. The pastor and his wife were kindly remembered about the Christmas time with an old fashioned pounding. The Mens' Bible Class presented the pastor with an electric heater for his study. For all these expressions of esteem and goodwill we are very grateful.

This is a young church but there has been a remarkable growth in membership since its organization, however, we have received only four new members since coming on the field. We have found quite a number of people living in this part of the city, and whose names are on some Christian Church elsewhere, but who do not seem inclined to identify themselves fully with our work here, but some of them will attend the services occasionally. Church loyalty may not mean loyalty to Christ every time but it tells in building up the organization.

CONVERSION OF MY INFIDEL FRIEND.

By a Railroad Engineer.

E. B. was a fireman for me for a long time. He was very skeptical in his views and I used to talk with him about them, but he would always argue his point and quote Robert Ingersoll's books. Finally he was promoted to engineer, and then I only saw him occasionally. After running as engineer for a few years he had a head-on collision one day. He was blamed for it and discharged. It was a long time before he got work again, but finally, through my efforts he was given a place as wedge-setter and engineer on a wrecking crane.

E. B. used to boast of what a strong man he was. He was big and healthy looking, and one would suppose, to look at him, that he would live a long time. One day he was setting up wedges on an engine, in a pit that had water in it. He took a severe cold and had to go to bed. About two weeks later the doctor pronounced his case quick consumption.

One day while reading my Bible I felt impressed that I ought to call on E. B. the next Sunday. I told my wife about it and asked if she knew whether he was very sick. She said, "Yes, the daily papers say he has quick consumption and the probabilities are that he cannot last long." I asked her to pray for me as I went to see him and she answered, "Go in the name of Jesus, and you will make no mistake." We prayed together before I left home.

Arriving in town I went to his home. In the parlor I found several fashionably dressed women who were friends of E. B's wife. Mrs. B. received me kindly and I asked her to permit me to see her husband for I had come expressly to see him. she consented and I entered his room. He reached out his hand feebly and I could see at once that he was a very sick man. I wanted to talk to him, but the conversation of the women in the other room made it almost impossible. I shot a desperate prayer heavenward that the Lord would quiet them and give me a chance to talk with my friend about his soul's salvation. It wasn't a minute till everything was as quiet as church, and the Spirit of the Lord seemed to whisper to me, "Now is your chance!"

In a calm voice I began. "You are very sick, E—, and the chances are that you will never get better. I have come to talk with you about your soul's salvation. I know all about your infidel views and am not going to argue with you as I used to do when you fired for me. E—," I continued, "if you die and your soul is lost forever you had better never have been born." I wouldn't let him say a word. I did all the talking. I told him I wanted to read a portion of God's Word to him and then pray with him, and he answered, "All right, Charlie." I believed he had confidence in my religion for I had tried to live a true Christian life while we were together on the railroad.

I read a part of the fourteenth chapter of John's Gospel beginning with the words, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." "And now," I said, "we will pray." I noticed that all the women in the other room bowed their heads reverently. I do not know now what I said in that prayer but I knew God helped me and when I had finished I saw a tear in E—'s eye. Then I said, "Good-bye, E—; I will come again next Sunday." I visited him every Sunday after that but one. After he had gone his wife told me he had died a triumphant death. Whenever I met Mrs. B., after that, she would take my hand and weep and say, "Thank God, that you ever came to our home!"

All E. B.'s family finally became Christians—the wife and two daughters aged respectfully sixteen and eighteen. All of them died with tuberculosis but with saving faith in Jesus Christ.

I have always been glad I visited E. B. before he died. His infidel books brought him no comfort on his dying bed. That is the trouble with infidel views—they bring you no help when you need help most. When a man is facing eternity he wants something that can answer his deepest heart hungerings and something that can give light to his pathway as he enters the dark valley. The Bible is the only Book that can do it.

"O Word of God eternal,
Love message from on high,
Men's hearts are all insatiate
Till thou dost satisfy.
Heaven's light to us thou bringest
To drive earth's night away,
And in thy blessed radiance
Death's darkness turns to day."

"This precious Book I'd rather have
Than all the golden gems
That e'er in monarch's coffers shone
Or in their diadems.
And were the seas one chrysolite,
This earth a golden ball,
And gems were all the stars of night,—
This Book were worth them all.

"Ah, no, the soul ne'er found relief
In glittering hoards of wealth;
Gems dazzle not the eyes of grief;
Gold cannot purchase health,—
But here I find a blessed balm
For every human woe,
And they who seek this Book in tears,
Their tears shall cease to flow."

WINTER SUNSET.

Sapphire and Orange are blending with the Gray,
A violet mist veils the far western hills,
But darkest color the near landscape fills,
Where blackness has engulfed the ling'ring day.
A web of cloud in uniform array
Is meshed with hues the dying sunlight spills
In rich profusion, red and crimson frills,—
The matchless strokes the painter can't portray.
The earth is steeped in quietness profound,
The icy wind dies down, gray smoke ascends
In wispy columns, spiral-shaped and round,
From village chimneys, and the workman wends
His weary way o'er byway, homeward bound,
And light of love the deep'ning night transcends.

Christian Orphanage

OUR NEEDS.

Dear Friends:—

In the Orphanage work we always have our needs. The time never comes when we are well supplied with everything. If nothing ever wore out or nothing was ever broken we might reach the point sometime when all our needs would be supplied.

Sheets and pillow cases wear out. Beds and springs give out. Mattresses wear out and it is a constant study just how to keep everything in shape.

We need sheets—two hundred of them. But this need can be easily supplied if our good ladies will get busy. Two sheets from one hundred will make the number. Five sheets from forty will make the number. How easy this need can be met with such a small sacrifice on the part of each one.

We are beginning to refurnish the old building with new beds and springs. Now to make the rooms look pretty and home like we need some pictures. I know we have many people in our church who perhaps have pictures you have had for years and want to get you some new ones. Give us the old ones and they will be new to us and you get new ones for yourself. Perhaps you might see a pretty picture in the furniture store and the thought would come to you of how much joy it would give the boys and girls at the Orphanage to have that in their room to look at. Buy it and send it by parcel post. We will be grateful and the children will be happy. This need can be easily supplied. I believe the good women in our church want to have this opportunity. I have never had a real need in this work since I have had charge and called on the good women in our church but what they have always come to our rescue and amply supplied that need.

Don't forget we need two hundred sheets.

Don't forget we need some pretty pictures to hang up in the childrens' rooms.

We have one other need which I will mention perhaps in a week or two and it is for the good women, too. I know they will be glad to have the opportunity to supply it, too. But let us supply the two above mentioned needs right away.

WE CANNOT BE SPIRITUAL TILL WE ARE MORAL.

The Richmond Christian Advocate tells a tale on the Roman Catholics and points a moral. Here is what it says:

"A dispatch from Rome says the Pope of Rome is giving his aid to the 'Anti-blasphemy Society.' The society needs friends and a lottery has been organized to increase the treasury. The Pope is giving it endorsement and urging the people to patronize the vicious gambling scheme in order to help the Anti-blaspehemy Society, which reminds us of a man we met not long ago on a much belated train. He was cursing in brimstone and sulphur because he would be too late to hear Billy Sunday preach."

The Story of The Bible

is being published in McCall's Magazine. It is the most important and epoch-making contribution ever printed by an American magazine, because here for the first time has a master-writer and master-historian picked out shining thread of the Biblical narrative, dropping away all details from it and presenting it not only in the simplest and most beautiful of English but fixing it also in its exact historical perspective.

"The Story of the Bible" is appearing now in McCall's. We have made special arrangements with the publishers so that you will be able to enjoy this beautiful presentation of the Bible story. For a short time only we can offer our readers this remarkable club—

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

Pray for it. The one great need of our Christian Church today is Men and Millions consecrated upon God's altar to the service of the Church and the Kingdom. If you love the Christian Church then you love also Men and Millions, since Men and Millions is the one Movement amongst us in behalf of the entire Church and all it has, is and stands for. When one pays a dime or a dollar to Men and Millions in that act one gives to all the work and worship of the Christian Church in this world.

Men and Millions is the one Movement which undertakes to cultivate love for, and loyalty to, and support of all the enterprises of the Church.

If we love the Christian Church then let us prove that love by paying our pledges to

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Preach it. Teach it. Pray for it. Undertake great things for God, then expect great things from God.

Victory! Victory! Victory! If all do their duty and meet their solemn obligations.

VICTORY!

MOUNTAIN WORK.

The influenza has been quite prevalent in Carroll County, Va., Rev. E. Bradshaw writes, and in consequence, our school and church work there have been considerably interferred with. Two of our teachers, Mrs. Meredith and Miss Morey have been quite sick and many pupils have been laid up and kept at home.

During December Bro. Bradshaw reported ten sermons preached; 12 prayer meetings held in homes, four conversions and six additions to the church. Brother Bradshaw says we must begin the erection of a church building on the Fancy Gap road at an early date.

REIDSVILLE.

Rev. J. A. Ledbetter reports conditions as flourishing and favorable at Reidsville. An attempt has been made to increase the Sunday school attendance by 100 per cent and this attempt has met with wonderful success. This is another argument for setting a goal in religious activity. Our Reidsville school is among the loyal numbers who made one offering a month to the Orphanage and one offering a month to Missions. They expect a Sunday school now of 200 members and Bro. Ledbetter is of opinion they will reach this number. It helps any school to have something to work for as well as to work toward.

START SOMETING.

There are pastors and churches that drag on in the same old way day by day and year by year. There is no scriptural teaching to justify this. Jesus and Paul and the Apostles were forever starting something. The only justification for going on in the same old way year in and year out in church services is lack of energy, initiative or ideas on somebody's part—John Calvin and Jonathan Edwards and John Mosley and James O'Kelly and Barton W. Stone moved the Kingdom forward, put dynamite into the church, and won the approval of men and angels because they had the daring and the religion necessary to start something. Dr. L. E. Smith our wide-awake and popular pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, has the courage and the energy to "start something" in his church. No wonder his congregations constantly increase and are always delighted and doing things. They never know what is coming next. But they know whatever comes will be in keeping with the teachings of the Book and spirit of the Christ.

HELPING IN A WAY THAT HELPS.

Every pastor in our Southern Convention, and every Captain and woman Leader of Men and Millions, is certainly in a position now to render real service to the church and the Kingdom. The whole church suffers in the loss by fire of the Main Building of Elon College. The Trustees of the College, in order to help repair this loss and meet this emergency call upon every one who pledged to Men and Millions or Standardization to pay up now these pledges. The per cent of Men and Millions that goes to the college is to be used in helping rebuild that which the fire destroyed. How much do our pastors, how much do our Captains, how much do our Women Leaders, regreat this loss and sympathize with this condition? Let that sympathy be expressed practically in urging our people to pay their pledges to Standardization and to Men and Millions, now. Every pastor can help by publicly urging his people to pay their pledges, and every Captain and Woman Leader can help by trying to collect these pledges. And all can help by paying their pledges; or if they did not make a pledge, by making a pledge and paying it.

HOW TO PREACH SO AS TO CONVERT NOBODY.

The following rules were given by Charles G. Finney, a half-century ago. Do they not hold good in our day as in his?

1. Let your supreme motive be popularity rather than salvation.

2. Study to please your congregation and to make a reputation, rather than to please God.

3. Take up popular, passing and sensational themes to draw the crowd, and avoid the essential doctrines of salvation.

4. Denounce sin in the abstract, but pass lighly over sins that prevail in your congregation.

5. If asked, "Is it wrong to dance, play cards and attend the theater?" answer very pleasantly, "Oh, that is a matter for private judgment. It is not for me to say you shall or shall not."

6. Preach on the loveliness of virtue and the glory of Heaven, but not on the sinfulness of sin and the terrors of hell.

7. Reprove the sins of the absent, but make those who are present pleased with themselves, so that they will enjoy the sermon and not go away with their feelings hurt.

8. Make the impression on worldly church members that God is too good to send any one to hell, even if there is any hell.

9. Preach the universal Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man, so as to show that no second birth is really needed.

10. Do not rebuke the worldliness of the church, but fall in with the amusement policy. Instead of meeting for prayer, let the people "sit down to eat and drink and rise up to play."

11. Avoid seriousness, alarm, and earnest efforts to pull sinners out of the fires, and the old-fashioned idea that the church is a rescue mission.—Selected.

Beautiful When Finished.

The following will bear repetition:

A gentleman, visiting a silk factory, was shown throught the various departments, until they came to a loom where an expert workman was weaving a beautiful flower upon an expensive garment. The flower was not visible. As fast as woven, it was rolled up and only the "outside" was shown,—rough and full of knots. The workman had a little book of instructions, at which he looked frequently. When the work was finished the tired laborer sat back, while the overseer opened the loom, around, the visitor and workman were unrolled the garment, and turning it around, the visitor and workman were thrilled with joy at the exquisite flower. Be sure and follew the directions in God's Word, we need not worry about the results. When our little day is ended, we will see things from the right side.

We poor mortals nearly always see things from the "wrong side" in this life, but if we are faithful we shall see the "other side," and there will be something "beautiful."

PEASE

A very useful and highly esteemed citizen was lost in the death of John B. Pease on the morning of February 4, 1923. Seemingly he was in the prime of life and usefulness to both church and community. A leader in his church, in his conference and for some years a member of the trustees of the Publishing Board of the A. C. C. He was a leader in the Farm Bureau work of Niagara County. Whenever he saw an opportunity to help his fellowmen materially or spiritually, it was a pleasure to use the opportunity to the best advantage.

The beautiful floral tributes and the representatives from the institutions with which he was connected bespoke the high esteem in which he was held.

Dr. Martin Summerbell, of Lakemont, N. Y.; Rev. S. I. Helfenstein, of Dayton, Ohio and Ira L. Peek, of Gasport, N. Y., took part with the pastor in the funeral services.

The Coal Question of Concern.—

The coal question has given many of us a great deal of concern, lest we should have to shiver in the cold of another winter, because of the lack of coal. But they tell us that at least an agreement has been reached which will give us a plenty of coal, that is if we have a plenty of money to use in paying for the coal. They have settled it by allowing the coal miners $7.50 for eight hours of labor, or if they are digging the coal by the ton, then they will be allowed $1.08 per ton. This arrangement it is believed will give the people of the country a plenty of coal, but it will almost strip the pockets of a great many people to pay the prices the coal dealers will ask for the coal. While the price for labor has been settled, the price of the coal to the consumer has not been settled. We suppose that will be left to the coal seller, and you may be sure it will be enough, not merely enough to greatly enrich the coal seller, but enough to make it very hard, for the people must keep warm. There is no chance for the price to go down, but rather a good chance for it to go yet higher. Cannot some power be brought to bear on these coal owners to limit their prices to what is reasonable? The present agreement includes a list of 400,000 soft-coal miners, and it will include others soon, it is thought.

Bible Circulation.—

Here are some interesting facts as to the Greatest Book in the world—the BIBLE. It seems that the more the critics criticise the Bible the more readers it gets. It is now claimed that last year the demand for the Bible was so great that 30,000,000 copies were printed and distributed by the various agencies in all parts of the world. That is an unequalled record in the printing and distribution of any book the world has ever seen, so far as we have a record. The American Bible Society now claims that the Bible has been translated into every language under the sun and that it is now read in all the lands of the world. What an achievement. Nothing else like it in all literature. It seems to us that the critics ought to be persuaded to shut their mouths as to their criticism of the Bible, for the more they criticise it, the wider is the spread of its wonderful truths. At the Red Brick Bible House in New York the Scriptures have been published in sixty-eight languages and in six systems of embossed type for the use of the blind. Altogether, and up to 1920, the Scriptures have been published in 725 languages and dialects. The report of the Bible House for the last ten years shows that some complete book of the Bible has been printed in a new language at the rate of one every six weeks. The whole Bible we are told has been printed in 159 languages and the New Testament in 138 more. The American Bible society has issued during the past year, according to tentative figures were 375,227 Bibles. And 749,386 Testaments and 3,730,841 portions, making a total of 4,855,464 volumes. The Society has been in existence for 106 years and in that time they have issued 146,590,521 copies. A true history of the Bible and its spread throughout the earth would astonish even those who are best acquainted with it. Strange as it may seem almost half of the number printed in the last two years have gone to the Chinese. In 1921 the Chinese took 2,362, 730 volumes, which shows an increase of 605,111 over the preceding year, and reports already coming from China give expectation that the demand will be much larger than ever before for the past year. The enemies of the Bible may talk much against it, but it is going forward and reaching the uttermost parts of the earth, and the critics are powerless to stop its spread or to impede its influence. Indeed, the Bible is the great book of the ages.

The World Situation Reviewed.—

The world situation does not seem to improve. The dangers among the nations seem to get bigger and more threatening. France is still holding the portion of Germany which she recently seized in order to collect from Germany what Germany owes France in the matter of reparation. Germany is quite mad because France has got her where she cannot seemingly well help herself. France says her army will stay in Germany till the last dollar of what she owes France is paid. And Germany is almost bidding defiance. They are at the point of war. The only thing that is holding Germany back from war is that she is not certain of what war at this time might mean to her, and so she is taking time to think. Russia, Turkey, Greece, and the Balkans and other countries perhaps, are just watching to see what will become of the situation. They are ready, as best they can be, to take the position which they think will be most advantageous to them. And so the world is on tip-toe to see what will come next. So far the United States are keeping hands off and waiting to see what will come of it all. Many are speaking out boldly that the United States is the only power that can save the world from sinking down into barbarism and going back as in the Dark Ages. With this awful thought pouring itself into the face of the American people even as the hot sun of a July day pours its light and heat into the lap of the earth, our Government seems not sure of just what it ought to do. Undoubtedly the hesitation of the United States in the matter of the Versailles treaty or the League of Nations has brought about the present situation. If the Allies had stood together through it all, in our opinion Germany would have had a reasonable part of her reparation money already paid. But when America backed out and then England showed some hesitation to stand for the full amount exacted of Germany, Germany took heart to hope that something would be done to relieve her of the burden which had been imposed upon her, and then she began to back and delay and "dilly dally" in an effort to save for Germany all she possibly could, and the result is the present world unrest. The war is not over and no one can tell just what may come before the end is reached. We are in perilous times.

The Debt Settlement.—

It seems that an agreement has been reached between the United States and Great Britain as to the terms and manner of the payment of what England owes to the United States. If we recall aright the conditions, England owes more than four billion dollars to the United States and she is to pay it in about sixty-two years. As we understand it both Governments have accepted the conditions. The debt is an enormous one, and yet the leaders evidently think it is better to carry such a debt than it would have been to carry the burden of German domination, as that would almost certainly have come to England and France and Italy, if the United States had not gone to the rescue, not only with her money but with her men as well. The Allies had all and likely a little more than they could carry, till the United States stepped up and volunteered her services. From the time that the United States got its money into the hands of England, France and Italy and our men got into action on the field, the tide turned against Germany. If Germany had only been wise enough not to have provoked the United States to go to war with her, then Germany might have been the ruling power of the Governments of the world today instead of a nation crushed and torn into pieces. Germany was warned, if we mistake not, again and again not to force the United States into action against her. Her proud Emperor laughed at the idea of the United States doing any thing that would give the Allies comfort, and so in his laughter he pressed on till at length he drove the United States to action. We know what that meant, and Germany knows now, but she learned it all too late to save herself from the most humiliating situation into which she had ever fallen.

England is to pay to the United States in settlement of the debt she owes the United States the sum of $188,000,000 annually. Treasury officials say that England will have paid off more than $10,000,000,000 at the end of the sixty-two years in which is allowed to pay off the debt. That is to say the principal and interest in sixty-two years will amount to more than $10,000,000,000. War is the most costly thing in the world even to them which gain the victory and it must be more so to the losers.

NOTES-PERSONALS

You will be interested in the first letter from Bro. "Simon Abe" to his former pastor, Rev. T. E. White, appearing in this issue. Do not fail to give it your attention.

The Editor has two requests in this issue. Please make a note of them. Write to the Managing Editor who will do his best to rectify and accommodate at the earliest possible moment.

The Editor of The Methodist Protestant says: "The mother who wins a place in the world and loses a place in the heart of her child, has met with a catastrophe that will follow her into eternity." Yes, we believe that is true. Mother, have you done that?

Say, Brother Pastor, what are you doing to get THE SUN into the families of your charge? It can be done, far in advance of what we are doing, if only we make the proper effort. Hard work will make it a success. Perhaps you do not feel like giving it hard work. Well, that is your business, no doubt, but without it, the work must lag. Are you willing to that?

Dr. W. T. Walters surely has gotton his eyes open wide—he sees a vision of the work of the Christian Church for the next fifty years, and is arranging in his own mind a program to cover that period. He is a seer of good ability, and if his seeing should come to pass we shall have to admit that he was no failure as a prophet in his day. If you have not done so, read his article in THE SUN, and keep your eyes open to measure the progress of his ideals.

Dr. Harper seems to be going forward with the work at Elon almost as if nothing had happened, only he is busier than ever. The gifts for the new building are crawling upward encouragingly. Let us do our best to help him in the time of misfortune. The Administration Building, which was burned Jan. 18th, must be rebuilt as soon as possible, and should be ready for the opening of the session next September. If you can lend a hand to Dr. Harper, in the rebuilding, do it.

Rev. G. D. Hunt succeeds Rev. R. F. Brown as Financial Secretary of Bethlehem College, Wadley, Alabama. Bro. Hunt becomes Bro. Brown's successor at once, as we understand it. He is regarded by his brethren as the man for the place. We wish him great success in this most worthy undertaking. Bethlehem College is an institution of great promise and will fill a place where such an institution is very much needed. Every dollar given to it we believe will count in the establishment of the institution.

Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga., is the financial Secretary for the Bethlehem College at Wadley, Ala. He is making a brave effort to raise the money we need for the erection of the new building and the equipment of the same. As we understand it, they are planning to open the college work there next September. Give them a helping hand and so forward the work of our people in Georgia and Alabama. Bethlehem College, well established and wisely managed, will mark a new day in our cause in the further South. It is already one of the growing sections of our work. Help now, if possible.

Mr. Marion Lawrence, Chicago, Ill., in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of February 3rd, we made some reference to Bishop William Lawrence of Massachusetts as a brother of our national Sunday school worker. Mr. Marion Lawrence of Chicago. Bro. Lawrence writes to say that he has a brother by the name of William Lawrence, who lives in Boston, Mass., but Bishop William Lawrence is in no way related to him. We beg pardon for the mistake. Our error rests on the fact that some person some years ago told us that Mr. Marion Lawrence was a brother to Bishop Lawrence. We are glad to correct the mistake and thank Bro. Lawrence for the same.

One of our valued exchanges says a very true thing, as follows: "A thousand horses are no better than one if all of them refuse to pull the load. A little church is more acceptable than a big one, to the Lord, if the little church pulls its load and the big church does not. A big church is often a hiding place for lazy Christians." If he had said lazy church members, we should have endorsed the saying, for it is a worthy thought, only we do not know where to find a lazy Christian. As we understand it, real Christians are not lazy—they cannot be, and for the reason that they (real Christians) belong to the body of Christ, and the true body of Christ is never lazy.

The editor again requests our subscribers, when renewing their subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN not to send the money to the editor, but to the Publisher at 1535 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va. If you send it to the editor he keeps no books for THE SUN, and he at once must send it to the Publisher at Richmond. It not only takes his time, but he must go to the extra expense of sending it, and in all this there are dangers of both mistakes and delays. The editor has his hands full with the work for the SUN and as pastor of the church at Henderson. If he can do anything to help you straighten out errors or misunderstandings, he will do it with pleasure, but please do not send your money to any one but the Publisher, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, at address given above.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, now in charge of our Mountain Work, Fancy Gap, Va., has in this paper an appeal in the interest of the Mountain Work. He is a hard worker, economical and worthy of all the needed help our people can give. He is a heroic missionary. If most of us were called on to make the sacrifices he is making, in order to do this work, we think more than nine-tenths would say: "Please have me excused—I cannot do it—can not leave my family hundreds of miles away and then work on a small salary, or even for the sake of giving the gospel to this needy and worthy people." But Bro. Bradshaw does not talk that way. He is doing all that, and doing it bravely, and so far as we know, uncomplainingly, that he may give the gospel to this dear people. He is a faithful and worthy man and he is doing a much needed work in Carroll County, Va. Read his appeal and then do your part, and do it nobly and truly. The work there must go on.

Mrs Helen Bradshaw, wife of Mr. Upshur Bradshaw, Norfolk, Va., a daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Barrett, and a niece of the Editor of this paper, passed away on Sunday morning, January 7, 1923, after a brief illness of a few weeks. She was the center of attraction in her own home and being the first born in a large family, she held her place and filled it well till the end. She lived a quiet and a useful life in her own family and to the very last opportunity she manifested a great desire to relieve others of their burdens, but seemed never concerned about the burdens she was carrying. How simple and beautiful was her character, as she gave it to God in her life and service. She leaves behind her a husband and several beautiful children. In her last illness her faith was strong and her hope was victorious. God's blessings be upon the memory of the first born in the home of her parents. She was, but is not, for God has taken her to live with the angels.

Rev. D. McHowsare, Dayton, O., has become Executive Secretary, of Evangelism and Life Service in the work of The General Convention of the Christian Church. In his announcement he says: "This is a day when added emphasis is being placed upon Evangelism. Among all denominations there is a spirit of progress and constructive programs are being carried out to accentuate this special line of work. Our own people have taken their place beside other denominations. We established a Department of Evangelism and Life Service at the Burlington Convention. A Board was elected and a Secretary has been appointed to carry out the objectives of the Board. Headquarters have been established in the Christian Publishing Association Building, in Room 23, with Rev. McD. Howsare as Executive Secretary. He also says: "Command us at your pleasure."

Many of the daily papers of the United States admit that Mr. Grant, the Episcopal Rector of New York City, has a right to hold to his own peculiar views, as to doctrinal matters, but they are almost a unit in saying that he has no right, morally, to remain the Rector of an Episcopal Church, and draw his salary from it. If he believes contrary to the teachings of the Episcopal Church, all right, let him go ahead, provided he gets out of the Episcopal Church to do his believing of strange and heretical doctrines. He should not stay in the Episcopal Church and believe and teach contrary to its standards. Let him recant, and if he cannot do that, then let him go— get out of the Episcopal Church and go to one which is in harmony with his own views. That is what the voice of the people in a large measure are calling on Mr. Grant to do, but that is just what he does not want to do. When a man holds loose views on some one important doctrine then you may expect his loose views are likely to break out almost any where. Since Mr. Grant holds loose views of the divorce question, you may expect him to question the divinity of Christ, or almost anything else that is vital in the Christian Faith.

Do we forget all His benefits to us? Sometimes it looks much as if we do. But surely that cannot be—it cannot be that after all the good things we get from our Father's Hand, that we then turn aside to our selfish ways and forget the Lord who has given us all we have—He has given it to us in one form or another. You said the other day that you had made all you have yourself and with your own hands. Very well, but who gave you your hands and strength to use them so as to enable you to work for the increase of your income? Oh! surely it was the Loving Father that gave your life and your hands and feet and strength to use them in service and He gave you your brains that you might be able to know how to do and when to do that profit might come to you out of the labor of your hands? And yet you say that you have made what you have in the way of this world's goods. Well, you will do well to think again before you accept that version of how you got your wealth, or you may lose it all and your wealth with it.

The Presbyterian of The South puts the situation this way:

Prosperity certainly seems on the way to drive hard times out of the South. The farmers of this section of the country received last year $1,090,000,000 more for their crops than they did the preceding year. But farmers were not the only people that received increases. Manufacturers and business men of all classes shared in the good fortune. Under these conditions there should be no trouble in raising all the money needed for the Lord's work. Yet the strange fact is that the gifts for this cause in our church have not been as large during the present church year as they were the year before. It would be well if every Christian would take an inventory of his receipts during the year and should then faithfully render unto God what is due Him. If this were done, there would be no lack in the Lord's treasuries, all the goals of the church would be reached and the work of evangelizing that part of the world that we are responsible for would go on rapidly.

A BIGGER AND BETTER ELON.

Here is our opportunity what will we do with it?

Through the unforseen destruction of the Administration Building at Elon we have an opportunity for service and sacrifice, but after all is this not the true purpose of life. The Master taught by life and precept, that until we cease to live for self we have not begun to live at all.

We can never become truly useful to the great institutions of our church until we have learned this lesson. Some think that a consecrated life does not include the whole life; that it does not cover their business, social and financial life but only the spiritual exercises of their lives; when it really embraces the whole of Life.

No doubt throughout the thirty years or more, since the building was erected many of the students, faculty, officers and friends as they went in and out the doors and up and down the stairs; have expressed their desire to have a second chance to help build a more modern and commodious structure.

This wish may be realized in the case of buildings, but not with any past period of time. We live poorly enough at best, even the saintliest of us, and many of us certainly make sad work of it. There are infinitely fewer wrecks on the sea where ships go, than the sea that poets write about, where lives with their freightage of immortal hopes and possibilities sail on to their destiny.

We look with pride on the past record of Elon, the noble characters and bright intellects that have graced its halls, who have gone out to bless our country and the world; but if there should have been one throughout the grand history of the institution that squandered treasures and possibilities, that might have been used to bless mankind, may the memory of such perish in the ruins thereof. Many treasures were destroyed which can never be recovered, but out of the ashes of the old building and its contents will arise a larger and better Elon. Institutions and men may crumble and die, but the power that made them still remains. Our opportunity is here and now. About two centuries ago a great sun-dial was erected in All Souls' College Oxford, England, over the dial were written, in large letters of gold, the Latin words, "Pereunt et imputantur," which mean, "Hours perish and are set down to your account" or better still, they are wasted, and are added to your debt." These words come to us at this time like angels, holding in their hands rich treasures, sent to us from God, if we are laggard or indolent, or if we are too intent on our own little trifles to welcome this heavenly opportunity others will rebuild and bestow on the college larger endowments and we will miss the rich treasures that we might put into the lives of others.

The history of Elon has been one of continuous progress up to the present goal, and she must not, yea she will not prove false to her past record in this tragic hour neither shall we. In the palace of Napoleon at Malmaison there is another clock, with the words on its face, "Non nescit reverti"; "It does not know how to go backward." It is true of the great clock of Time—it never can be turned backward and may it ever be true of our work at Elon.

The privilege makes responsibility, and our responsibility is commensurate with our opportunity. The real problem of living, is how to take what the hours bring. The difference in men is not in the opportunities that come to them, but in the way they use them. The secret is in the man, not in his environment. There is but one thing to do to get out of life all its possibilities of attainment and achievement; we must train ourselves to take what every moment brings to us of privilege and duty. The reconstruction of a new plant at Elon is a God given opportunity—to the immediate community, Alamance County, the State of North Carolina, and the Christian Church at large. It is here and now, what will we do with it? We will all do the best we can. Alamance County, N. C. alone will raise at least $100,000. How will this challenge be met by all others concerned?

S. L. Beougher,

Graham, N. C.

AN APPEAL FROM THE MOUNTAINS.

Will say that the work is going on as well as could be expected under the conditions of the weather and sickness. Will write more about the work later, but turn aside from that at this time to make an appeal for some things that are especially needed at this time.

The first is a church house in which to worship. We have a good church and schoolhouse at Elk Spur on the top of the Mountain.

And where we are looking forward to the building of a strong membership at this place, we have still a greater possibility down the Mountain at Rocky Ford and Sandy Ridge. I have walked, talked and prayed a great deal over the uniting of the people and the location of a place for a church for this people.

We believe we have been successful in this task, and I have on my desk at this time a deed to the land necessary to build upon legally signed, which I shall send to the Board at once. And after getting all the help that I can from the people I shall appeal to the Mission Board for help to build this churchhouse.

Again if any church or Sunday school has any old song books that they are through with we could use them as we have none at Sandy Ridge and not sufficient at the other places. The next appeal is for a Ford Car.

And I make this appeal to every one that is interested in the Mountain Work and the advancement of God's Kingdom. This appeal comes to every church, Sunday school, class, or individual, for this is especially needed for the work to go forward to the best advantage.

Of course I am physically strong and able to make trips that a man not so greatly blessed with physical strength would not be able to make. But it is taking my strength unnecessarily and causing the work to lack in many places.

If a car is furnished I shall take the best care of it possible, and turn it over to whoever succeeds me in the work. Every thing that is received for this purpose will be stated through The Christian Sun and from what Class individual, Sunday school, or church.

I will keep any funds for this purpose to its self, and any thing more than it takes to buy the Ford will be put aside for gas and repairs. Who will be the first to help in this work?

One thing more. I earnestly ask the prayers of all Christian people for the work here.

You will hear from me and the work again soon.

Elisha Bradshaw.

Fancy Gap, Virginia.

PASSING MY FIRST MILE POST IN THE MINISTRY.

One year ago today, February 12, 1922, Dr. W. M. Jay licensed me to preach the gospel. During my first year I preached thirty-eight times, serving as a supply at the following churches: Rosemont, Berea (Norfolk County), Ocean View, Mt. Carmel and Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va. I also preached once at Benn's M. E. Church, Isle of Wight County. It was to me the most joyful year of my life.

In my second service at Berea we had one convert, a young man about 26 years of age, who came forward and gave me his hand and God his heart. At my next appointment I received him into church fellowship, which was a joy to my heart.

I will always remember my first service at Elm Avenue. After the sermon, one of the sisters came forward and shook my hand and began to shout. We had a real spiritual feast. I have not had an occasion to preach since the last Sunday in October, 1922, as there seems to be no vacancies in this part of our work. I am now associated with Bro. B. F. Black in the work at Rosemont, cooperating with him in every way I can. I am still listening for that s ill small voice. Pray for me, that I may be willing and ready to respond when I hear it.

Yours and His in Service,

J. N. Cutchin.

THE MOST NEGLECTED CLASS IN AMERICA.

Has there been a single voice lifted in their behalf? If so, we have not heard it. We refer to a class of boys and girls who have much promise in them, and yet no one has seemingly lifted his or her voice to say they should be helped. We refer to the boys and girls who are the sons and daughters of prisoners—whose fathers and mothers, one or both, have committed some crime and for it have been sent to the jail, or it may be to the penitentiary. These children not only lose the help of their parents, one or both, but they have to bear the shame of what their parents may have done, and then it seems every one feels it is his right to look down on them and make them feel the humiliation which falls to them, not that they are criminals, and not that they have done anything to merit punishment, but because a misfortune, which they could not prevent, has come to them unsought and unbidden, and for that fact for which they are in no wise responsibile, they must pay the penalty of being snubbed, or slighted, or looked down upon. Under such circumstances it is practically impossible for a child to rise in the social and moral scale of a community. He is handicapped and helpless. Who has offered a helping hand to the child of a prisoner—one who has been confined within prison walls because of some bad conduct on the part of his father or mother? The poor child is not responsible and why should he be left to fight his way through life and in the face of unkind and unmerited scorn. Many of these children would make good and useful citizens, if only they had a chance, but no one seems to care for them, and the result is they are made to feel their isolation—that no one cares for them, and that is the sure road, or nearly so to their caring nothing for themselves.

We have made provision for the orphans of the citizen, the soldier, the sailor, and the slums, but not a word of comfort or encouragement for the children which are worse off even than the orphan, for in addition to having no one to care for them, they have to carry the burden of being the child of a criminal, and that without the help of any one. Why should not there be a place for the children of prisoners, a home where they could be trained and reared for useful citizenship. In our judgment the children of prisoners and criminals are the most helpless set of children that we have, and we believe that a Christian community can put their shoulders to the wheels and their hands to the task of helping the child who is more helpless than the real orphan. Most certainly we need to provide for the wise training of these helpless children. Take the child whose mother is dead and his father is a convict in the penitentiary, who can be more helpless than such a child, and yet our Christian philanthropy has done nothing for this class as a class. We favor the waking up of our people as to the importance of caring for this class of children. Church people and non-church people should be interested in a work of this sort.

Emma Gray Wallace has said some good things as to this sort of work for the friendless and helpless child of the prisoner. Writing in The Christian Herald, she says:

Did you ever stop to think that the children of our convict population number approximately 200,000, and has it ever occurred to you in what a distressing situation each child finds itself when society has incarcerated one or both parents behind prison walls?

It is strange. indeed, that with all our enterprises along educational, benevolent, and philanthropic lines, no concerted action should ever have been taken to prevent the indirect punishment of innocent children, who suffer from the direct penalty laid upon their guilty elders. When a parent is taken by the law, the home circle is broken and oftentimes the innocent ones are left to suffer from dire want, as well as from a cloud of overhanging disgrace. In many cases these children are avoided by other children and looked upon with disfavor by careful mothers, so that they soon develop the feeling that every hand is against them, and consequently in self-defense they must be in a chronic attitude of mental resistance.

And so by taking no thought of these little ones and by making no provision for their care, training, and general supervision, we deliberately foster a stratum of society which perpetuates in all too many cases our prison population.

It would even pay each State to engage a competent and salaried officer to keep the records and have a general oversight of the families of convicts. If a federal office could be created to correlate the work of the different States, a long step would have been taken in the elimination of crime, the conservation of young life, the development of good citizens, and the saving of millions of money.

Out of 15,184 persons committed in a single year in one of our States, they had among them already served 96,023 sentences. These figures show that once an individual becomes a criminal, the chances are strong that he will continue in that way. Is it not the part of good, sound business management, all sentiment aside, to prevent the first crime, to keep as many young people straight as possible, and to feel that time and money spent in the effort are used to good purpose?

AN OVERWHELMING AND CRUSHING EVIDENCE.

The greatest religious conflict in this country, so far as we know, is between the Protestant churches and the Roman Catholic. This conflict is almost, and may be altogether, as old as our country. Many have thought it is only the outgrowth of religious prejudice, but to any fair minded person the conflict is based on something which is far more obstructive than religious prejudice—it is in the very nature of the work of the Roman Catholic Church. The fact that darkness seems to be the outgrowth of the Catholic Church is the true explanation. The proof on this point seems indisputable. We think our Catholic friends should change the evidence or give up the question. They have long claimed that the education given by the Roman Catholic Church is the best in the world and a good many people have swallowed that statement as if it were a proven fact. The truth is the opposite has been proven, by unquestioned authority.

The Presbyterian of the South brings out the truth in a way that must silence even the claim of the Roman Catholics. It is done by a comparison of the United States and Mexico and South America. Listen to the facts:

The United States has been largely under the influence of the Protestant Churches through most of its history. The countries of Mexico and South America have been dominated practically altogether by the Roman Catholic Church and they are still under that influence. The Roman Catholic Church has long boasted that the oldest University in this country is the Pontifical and Royal University of the City of Mexico. This university is considered the climax of educational system, and yet the facts show that Mexico and South America are far behind in the matter of education. No doubt they may have a few men of learning, but these two countries are far behind in the education of the people.

Comparing the educational standards in the United States and Mexico and South America, we are amazed at the differences between the state of education in these countries. The United States has been flooded with the incoming of many ignorants from Roman Catholic countries for the last several decades, and yet the illiteracy of the United States is less than 8 per cent. That is to say that less than 8 per cent of our population may properly be classed as illiterate, while in Mexico and South America more than 65 per cent of the population is illiterate, the difference is too pronounced to be ignored, or to be attributed to a mere accident. We do not have accidents of that kind. The illiteracy of those countries is due to some other cause than a mere accident. While this is true, it is also true that the fact that so few illiterates (or less than 8 per cent) of the population of the United States is not classed as illiterate cannot be a mere accident, and must be due to other influences along educational lines. Nothing contributes more to the educational life of a people than the religious atmosphere of a country. This being true, and we think it cannot be successfully disputed, it follows that the religion dominating the life of these countries must have much to do with the difference in the educational life of Mexico, South America and the United States. Much has been said about the value of the Catholic Religion, as compared with the Protestant Religion, especially educational lines. We believe it is in order now to raise these opinions as to the educational influence of the systems of education used by the Roman Catholic Church and that used by the Protestant Churches, or rather the systems used by the countries in which these two Religious Faith dominate.

In the United States less than 8 per cent of the people are classed as illiterates. In Mexico and South America more than 65 per cent are classed as illiterate. That is more than half of the population of Mexico and South America is classed as illiterates. The differences is marked, indeed. Now since the educational influence of the religion of a country is so marked, it seems in the United States and Mexico and South America must be largely due to the religion which dominates the country. That being true, the facts as brought out by the government reports from the two countries, as to illiteracy, tell an awful tale and the tale is against Roman Catholicism and in favor of Protestant Churches.

You may ask: But how is it that in this country the Roman Catholic educational work is well to the front? That is a Proper question and should be answered in a straight forward way. The educational work of the Roman Catholic Church is well to the front in this country because the educational influences in this country compel them to be. With a high state of education in the United States the Roman Catholic Church would stand no chance at all if the Roman Catholic population was as ignorant as they are in Mexico and South America, it would be impossible for that Church to maintain itself—ignorance would drive the people against it. It is undoubtedly because of this fact that in the United States Catholic education is far ahead of any Catholic country in the world. It is also a fact that where Roman Catholicism is dominant in a country there we find education at a low ebb. The opposite is true also, viz.: Where Protestantism is dominant, there we find education dominant and reaching all classes of the people. We therefore conclude that so far as the Roman Catholic Church is concerned it is not friendly to the education of the masses, except when and where it has a hold in countries which are strongly educational, and then it is in favor of higher education from the necessity of the case.

If the Roman Catholic Church were to attempt to maintain itself in the United States under such an educational standard as it maintains in Mexico and South America, it would die of its own darkness—ignorance. Hence the difference between the state of education among the Roman Catholics in the United States and in Mexico and South America. In the United States they must maintain a high state of education among the people, or lose out, but in Mexico and other like countries, where ignorance is so common as to include more than half the population, why there they simply educate the few, but take practically no interest in the education of the masses. These are facts which we believe can not be disputed successfully.

Now who are the friends of education and general enlightenment for the masses—is it the Roman Catholic Church, or is it Protestantism? We dare you to answer and back you answer by the testimony of history and current and official statistics from government sources.

WHAT ARE THE FOUNDATION STONES OF AMERICANS GREATNESS?

We speak of certain great principles as stones. That is why we ask, What are the great foundation Stones of America's Greatness? Some would likely answer: America's hardy manhood? Some would say it is the spirit of thrift in which her people live. Some might say it is the daring spirit which has enabled her to accomplish so much. It might be said by some that real business genius was at the bottom of the foundation stones on which the great American thrift has been built, but that is doubtless a mistake. Others might give the credit to learning as the moving power in the great country we have built, and still others might say the credit belongs to the spirit of economy which America has so long practiced. Others might say that our greatness is the outcome of American energy. Others might say that the greatness of America is due to the bravery of her people in undertaking great things. Others might say it is due to courage in standing for Justice. It might also be said that it is due to the fact that America got a good start under the administration of our First President, George Washington. While all these factors may have had something to do with the greatness of America, yet we contend that these were only influences in the greatness of our country, but that these influences were dominated by something greater than all of them put together and that this great thing which has America great and mighty is God and His Righteousness in Christ.

No man can say how much or how little of God and His Righteousness we have had, but it can be said that whatever we have had of these has been the pillar and ground of the truth upon which America's greatness has been built. You may argue that we have more wickedness and corruption here than we have had of God and His Righteousness, and while that may be true, yet we are sure that wickedness and corruption can never build a great country, and so in the face of all the facts we still maintain that the foundation of our country's greatness is God and His Righteousness. We know that God is mighty in the midst of any people, and if we had given Him a larger place in our affairs, then might we have had a far greater country—greater in real power and righteousness. To the extent which our people have kept God in our midst, to that extent He has been mighty in the building up of our great country and in giving steadiness to our people. Whatever is a power for Good in America is the outcome of the presence of God in our midst. We could have been a greater people, a more fruitful people, and a more useful people had we been more devoted to God and more concerned to keep Him in our midst.—See Zeph.3:17.

Alexis de Tocqueville, the famous French historian, had a pretty accurate view of America's greatness and its foundations when he said:

"I sought for the greatness and genius of America in her commodious harbors and her ample rivers and it was not there.

"I sought for the greatness and genius of America in her fertile fields and boundless forests and it was not there.

"I sought for the greatness and genius of America in her rich mines and her vast world commerce and it was not there.

"I sought for the greatness and genuis of America in her public school system and her institutions of learning and it was not there.

"I sought for the greatness and genius of America in her democratic congress and her matchless constitution and it was not there.

"Not until I went into the churches of America and heard her pulpits flame with righteousness did I understand the secret of her genius and power.

"America is great because America is good, and if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great."

And Alexis de Tocqueville was doubtless right, and while it may be truly said that we have much in America that is great and good, we also have very much that is not good, but that fact does not destroy the other fact that America's greatness is based on her goodness and her goodness is the direct outgrowth of God in her midst—God in our midst is mighty in the good that we enjoy. Only God in our midst is the explanation of our goodness and righteousness. If He were not in our midst at all, we should have nothing but bad, because goodness is the outgrowth of God, and therefore all that is truly good in our country is the outgrowth of His presences. Let us undertake to keep Him in our midst that we may be blessed with His presence and enjoy His goodness always. That is America's greatness.

THE PREACHER'S FIRST AND SECOND TASKS.

There are many duties which claim the time and attention of the pastor, but we are persuaded that the two great tasks of the preacher are—

1. To get himself fully in touch with God through the Spirit and so be ready for his many and important duties. With his own heart and soul fully alive to the spiritual touch of God is so very essential, because without that he is at a standstill in His work, and when a pastor is at a standstill, he might as well, and better too, be with Moses in the backwoods learning the way to God, for that way must be learned, or the work of the pastor will come to nothing. In other words, get right with God and then undertake the work He has given you.

2. Having gotton yourself fully awake to the demands of the work before you, then undertake to get your church right—get it fully aroused as to its opportunity and responsibility. A dead church is almost useless in the Lord's work. The church must be awakened and put to its task in good earnest. Do you wish to know how to get your church fully awakened and aroused and facing its great task? Well we cannot tell you how to do it, but we can tell you how to find out how to do it. You need more than human wisdom to enable you to get your church fully awakened, and therefore instead of sending you to some brother minister, older it may be than yourself, I must send you to enquire of God as to how you can best awaken your church. It must be done, if you are to bring it to fruit-bearing, and no one can so surely do it as the Lord God of Heaven and earth. Get all good possible from the experience of your brethren, but depend only upon the Lord for having the work done, of truly awakening of your church that it may arise and do the work God has given it to do, and then do it as He may wish it to be done.

I commend to your attention the following from The Western Christian Advocate as to the importance of getting the church or churches to which you preach to be fully awake:

One of the chief conditions of a genuine revital is an aroused church. God does not often work without the zealous co-operation of his people.

There are exceptions to this rule. Once in a while the indifference of the church may be ignored. Sometimes the sight of people flocking to the altar will warm up a cold church. But is it usually the warmth which comes from temporary exhilaration at the sight of success, rather than deep and genuine spiritual life?

A Methodist pastor, who afterwards became a bishop, was once sent to a dead church. When he became acquainted with the situation he was in great distress. After the special interest which always accompanies the arrival of a new minister subsided, matters resumed their old sluggish course. It looked very much as though the year was to be a failure. But the pastor determined to launch out into revival meetings. The attendance was small. Many of the official members remained away. Those who came were dull. Some were even stubborn, and refused to cooperate in the pastor's plans. At length he said: "Here is a multitude of people of this town without God. They are indifferent to the interests of their souls. They must not be lost because the church is indifferent. I shall begin at once to preach to the unsaved." And he did this with extraordinary effect. Seekers came to the altar, fourteen at the first invitation. Before long seventy persons were converted, and nearly that number joined the church.

"Now," reasoned the pastor, "the new blood will warm the old blood, and in that way I shall get this dead church waked up."

But it was not so. Before three months had passed the cold blood of the dead church had chilled the warm blood of the converts, and the latter could scarcely be distinguished from the former. It is nearly always so. Our conviction is that very rarely is a minister justified in proceeding with a crusade for souls until the membership of his church is alive to the meaning and importance of the undertaking. It is almost a crime to put the warm, glowing converts into a church full of doubt and death. The last state of such persons is often worse than the first.

Get the church awake!

SUFFOLK LETTER.

God bestows gifts upon men, but the keeping and development of gifts is with men themselves. Faith is the gift of God. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Eph. 2:8. Eternal life is the gift of God. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6:23. Special gifts by the Holy Spirit. "Stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." II Timothy 1:6. "Keep yourselves in the love of God." Jude 21. It is plain teaching that God bestows gifts and men must keep them. All talents are God's gifts; but the development and use of talents is man's own work. One might inquire how a son can keep and use what he inherits from his father. It is by diligent and careful investment and development of what he has received. An estate will not take care of itself. If land, it must be tilled; if a business, it must be operated; if money, it must be invested. Religion is the gift of God, but it will not take care of itself. It must be cultivated. It must be protected. It must be kept in use. How can this be done? By prayer; by worship; by service. "Men ought always to pray;" and Jesus set the example. "Let us worship and bow down." "Serve the Lord with gladness." The religious life requires association and cooperation with others. "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." Religion can no more be maintained by the individual alone than business could be maintained by the individual apart from others. The House of God is the place for fellowship, praise, inspiration. Habitual neglect of church attendance will chill the ardor of any Christian, and such habit continued will render the Christian useless. It may seem a simple thing to go to church, but it is the only way to keep alive the sense of salvation and Christian obligation. Church attendance is the surest way to keep the Sabbath. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it Holy." The nation that does not keep the Sabbath cannot keep its religion. The same is true of the individual. "Keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called. "It is much easier to get religion than to keep it. The giving is of God, but the keeping is of man. God gave us the Sabbath, but we have to keep it, or lose its benefits. "Pray without ceasing." "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the House of the Lord." It is a sad day for a Christian when church attendance becomes irksome, and worship gives no pleasure. The church member who has the hardest time, is the member who seldom prays, goes to church irregularly, renders no real service, and does not keep the Sabbath.

ELON LETTER.

"The first public appeal for funds for the institution (Elon) was made at Berea, Nansemond County, Va., and resulted in the raising of $635.05, of which Deacon Willis J. Lee, a trustee of the college from its foundation and whose generosity to it was abundant from that day until the day of his death, May 20, 1919, gave $250." I quote from the Elon catalogue, page 13.

Brother Lee's final gift to Elon was $5,000 subscribed only a few weeks before his death. The subscription was to have continued over a period of five years, but his wife, equally yoked with him in devotion to the college, paid it all at once, even before the first payment was due.

Mrs. Lee, tenderly known to her intimate friends as Aunt Jennie, has been deeply touched in heart by the recent disaster to the college. It was in her home that the decision was reached prior to the extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention in September 1888, to go ahead with the erection of a college, Dr. W. S. Long, Col. A. Savage, Brother Lee, and others being present. The rough plans of the building that now lies in ruins were drawn by this prophetic group. She had therefore a personal as well as a denominational interest in that structure.

As soon as the tidings of our disaster reached her, she wrote me a letter of beautiful sympathy. But Mrs. Lee is not one whose sympathy exhausts itself with words. Deeds must complete the circle of her devotion to any beloved cause. And so she has voluntarily sent a check for $25 for the library and a subscription of one thousand dollars for the rebuilding program. In writing to a friend of her gift, I described her as "the salt of the earth." Her kind is also the light of the world. What could this Christian Church not do with a thousand such members!

But I am thinking now of the joy of Deacon Willis J. Lee as the consequence of this generous act of his life-companion. In the spirit world I know his great heart has shouted anthems of praise that the good work he and his wife began in unison is now carried on by her in this moment of dire need on the part of the college which never called on him without response. Marvel not that I say this, beloved. The spirit world is all about us. They who dwell in it can see us, though we cannot see them. They are interested in our every experience.

They rejoice in our happiness and grieve over our sorrows. Whenever we perform some gracious act, their hearts pulsate with joy. Death is but transition and the unshackling of life. We pass into another room as it were, and are in intimate association with all that goes on in the places once inhabited by us. Such is death. What satisfaction it is to the spirit-land dwellers that the causes their lives were given to advance now prosper in the hands of their successors and loved ones! I am glad for Deacon Willis J. Lee's joy in his good wife's generosity to Elon.

A HOME MISSION PROGRAM.

What territory shall the Southern Christian Convention occupy fifty years hence, and what sort of churches shall we have and where shall they be?

These are questions that will be answered in a large measure, by our Mission Board. We have a good Board and an energetic and enthusiastic field secretary. The progress of missions within the bounds of the convention during the past ten years, has been marvellous, and this has been mainly due to the efforts of Dr. J. O. Atkinson our field secretary.

The Board has practically fixed its foreign mission program for the next half century, by deciding to enter China and build educational institutions in connection with its other church work; therefore the home problem is the one that needs to be considered at this time, among the causes open to the Board for our home work, are the following:

1. Financial aid to churches and fields already established. Since there are no large commercial gains without new churches, to carry this policy to its limit would mean stagnation.

2. The second step would be to build churches within the territory already occupied and thus strengthen existing fields. This has in it an element of growth and should be followed where the conditions are favorable. Charlottesville, Harrisonburg, South Boston, Roanoke, Winston-Salem and other cities are either in or contiguous to our territory.

The building of additional churches in cities where we are now located would come within this plan.

3. To build in our large cities and thus introduce our church to the people. A large per cent of the population of this country know little or nothing about our position as a church. We need to make ourselves acquainted.

It is the belief of the writer, that the suspension of our work in Washington, D. C., should be only temporary and that at an early date we should enter the field again and consider the fruits of past efforts. Lynchburg and Roanoke, Charlotte, Rocky Mount and Wilmington, Atlanta, Jacksonville, New Orleans and Galveston are all centers in which we might begin fruitful operations.

I have faith in the principles of the Christian Church to believe that the work done by Dr. L. F. Johnson, who built a membership almost entirely out of new material, in Brooklyn, New York, can be duplicated in almost any city in this country. Few cities are over churched and with a growing population there is always room for new churches.

4. Another phase of work that might be planned, is the covering of new territory, for instance the unchurched oil towns in Texas and other Southwestern territory.

I am not tied to any one of these policies though I believe the last two would mean more to our development

What I want to see is a program of expansion that is commensurate with our position and resources.

OUR WORK IN NORTH ALABAMA.

From year to year the efforts towards building up our mission work in the northern part of Alabama are bearing evidence that are encouraging. There are continuous signs of improvement. Some other points we have begun to work, years ago, were pretty well churched; it is not so much that way there. And when we are successful in convincing the folks that we are not followers of Campbell the way is much easier.

On entering this field I went first to Liberty Grove. This church has a small membership They have a house not complete and a good Sunday school. The members, though aware of some difficulties that confront them, are determined. In this way they are winning the confidence and respect of the people and are looking encouragingly into the future. From here I went to Bryan's Chapel.

This church was received into the conference last year. It is located near the town of Arab. They have no building but are fortunate to have the privilege of worshipping in a building of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They take part in Sunday school also. Their membership is small but plucky; and, expect to have a house ready by summer.

Rev. J. D. Dollar is pastor of these churches and there is that warm, congenial fellowship between pastor and people that insures the best of efforts. Bro. Dollar assisted me in working these churches and everyone we could reach subscribed to Men and Millions.

I had been to Pisgah before and to meet Rev. J. W. Elder and the good people there was a real joy.

Bro. Elder told me that there are two other points, not so far from Pisgah, that are anxious to organize and build. This he expects to do at an early date.

Rev. W. C. Carpenter, whom many of THE SUN'S readers will remember, tells me of many urgent calls from many sections. Some of them are large towns and educational centers. We have heard of "the field white unto the harvest," I think this is one. The land is fresh, fertile and easy to cultivate. It is a most desirable location for one who would want to farm, teach school, or preach. He might mix it a while if he would like.

The Mission Board of our conference (Alabama) is indeed grateful to the Southern Christian Convention for the assistance in this field. And, just here, let me add a like expression to those who subscribed to the North Alabama Fund at conference. You may make payment to J. W. Payne, Wedowee, Ala., or to the writer.

CAMPAIGNING FOR A COLLEGE.

The Trustees of Bethlehem College met at La-Grange, Ga., Wednesday, February 14th. There were present Dr. T. H. Denny, Wadley, Ala., President of the Board; Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala., Secretary; Bro. J. J. Carter, Wadley, Ala., Treasurer; Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.; Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga., Financial Agent; Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., proxy for Bro. O. O. Mitchell; Rev. J. D. Dollar, Roanoke, Ala., proxy for Bro. J. W. Payne; J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., as proxy for Dr. W. A. Harper. The following were present as visiting and interested brethren: Rev. W. T. Meacham, Roanoke, Ala., Rev. E. B. Flory, Norfolk, Va., Rev. C. W. Harrison, La Grange, Ga., Rev. R. A. Whitten, La Grange, Ga., Rev. G. H. Veazy, Wadley, Ala., Rev. H. L. Smith, and Bro. M. J. Holman, La Grange, Ga. This proved to be the largest and most enthusiastic and progressive meeting of the Trustees yet held according to Dr. Denny. They were in the midst of their simultaneous campaign for funds and despite the very disagreeable weather and well-nigh impassable roads the reports of the canvassers were sufficiently encouraging as to inspire all with new zeal and a larger hope.

Tentative plans and drawing for the initial building were submitted by the Secretary and were approved by a unanimous vote. They are to be submitted to and drawn by an architect, and the Building Committee was instructed to proceed at once to go forward and have the building ready for opening the college next September.

Rev. G. D. Hunt was elected Financial Agent to carry forward the campaign for funds, in place of Rev. R. F. Brown who has resigned and goes to Pleasant Hill, Ohio, March 1st. Bro. Brown has done good work in keeping the matter in the minds of the people and in carrying on the campaign thus far. The Board felt very happy in securing the consent of Rev. G. D. Hunt to undertake the great task of Financial Agent, since all realize that his acceptance assured success. In accepting Bro. Hunt made a talk that moved every one present mightily and made all realize that if there had existed any doubt about raising the funds to put up the building that doubt was expelled. Bro. Hunt has the absolute confidence, devotion and esteem of the entire constituency, and his unswerving devition to the college added to his sincerity of purpose and power in public address, will sweep all obstacles aside and the money will be found, gladly given to carry forward the building without interruption or delay. He voiced the sentiment of all present when he said that men and women, some already in glory, had prayed for years that this day might come and this college be built, and now there could be no failure.

In all my canvass of ten days for funds I met only the most loyal cooperation and support. Bethlehem Christian College already lives in the underlying devotions of hundreds, and will soon take form in brick, mortor and timber. A beautiful two-story building with basement is the initial structure. A committee of three was appointed to secure and recommend to the Board, a President of the College.

Rev. E. B. Flory of our First Church Norfolk, secured a release of two weeks for the work, and gave this time to the canvass for funds and pledges. All of course were delighted with Bro. Flory, and our brethren of the far South would if they could lay violent hands upon him and make him the first President of Bethlehem College and their educational leader. He completely won their confidence and esteem and rendered in valuable aid in the campaign and in their councils. Rev. R. A. Whitten is also in the campaign giving it all his time and helping greatly in the good and glorious task.

The writer greatly enjoyed the work and in seeing again and working with his dear friends and fellow-laborers of Alabama and Georgia Conferences. To have any part in establishing Bethlehem College is a privilege any one would rejoice over.

January 1, 1923.

Dear Brother Barrett.—

On this happy New Year's Day, I am thinking of many things I ought to do, and among them I feel I ought to write to THE SUN. So here comes a little message. My family had a nice and enjoyable Christmas. We were well and kindly remembered. Bro. Buchanan of Ambrose, Ga., sent us a box of good things to eat. Several others there had a part in this gift. We also had a treat here for the children of the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. We had Santa Claus to give the treat to all present. We also had several recitations and songs, which were greatly enjoyed. At the close of the program Old Santa Clause wanted to express their appreciation of the services of the pastor and five men went out and brought in many of the necessities of life and laid them down at the pastor's feet. I wanted to say something, but did not know just what to say, but my first resolution was that I would try to be a better preacher and pastor. Then several young friends from Kitt, Ga., sent me a check through Bro. J. S. Stephenson.

For all these expressions of love, I bow my head and give thanks to God and man.

I had the happy privilege of spending the last Sunday of the year, 1922, with Bro. H. M. Gray of Lanett, Ala., Bro. Gray has wrought a great work at Lanett. They have two prayer meetings a week. One is on Wednesday night and the other is on Saturday night. I was at the Saturday night meeting. They had about 150 present, and it was like being in a great revival. They have nearly one hundred in their choir, and they certainly know how to sing. On Sunday it rained nearly all day, but they had 215 at Sunday school and a house full for the preaching service and we had a great service. They must have a new church building and they are now planning to build. May the Good Lord open the way speedily for this new edifice. I go to Vanceville and Enigma, Ga., this week. I have some other things to write about later. Wishing the editor and all who help to make THE CHRISTIAN SUN a happy new year. Good people, let us do our best to make this the greatest year in the history of the Christian Church.

In Service,
H. W. ELDER.

THE WORK AT REIDSVILLE, N. C.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

It is so recently that you were pastor at Reidsville, N. C., that it seems to me that a few words from here may be encouraging. I entered the work here December 8th, looking over the field Sunday, December 10th, was my first Sunday in this pastorate. The Sunday school numbered 237, or 135 per cent increase in sixty days. We must take into consideration the fact that the weather has been most unfavorable and we have had much sickness. Every body seems willing, even anxious, to work. I am looking and hoping for 300 in our Sunday school soon. The Mission Board is helping some here, and the Board can rest assured that their money is not being wasted. I wish to have my work in such condition that if any of the pastors can use me in their special meetings, I will be only too glad to help. I am now with you all in the work, yet I have a personal acquaintance with such men as Morgan, Williamson and some others.

Yours Fraternally,
J. A. LEDBETTER.

We take off the hat to you, Bro. Ledbetter, as our successor, and rejoice with you and the dear people of the Reidsville church and community in what has already been accomplished since you began your work there. That increase in the Sunday school is wonderful. Under the blessings of God, the pastor is the key to the situation and we rejoice with the Sunday school. I rejoice with the church, too, since what they thought was their loss in my leaving, turns out to be the best thing for the church and Sunday school.—Editor.

The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN desire a number of canvassers in each church or community, and have an attractive and remunerative plan. Confer with your pastor, he can advise you. Send in your name and address. Do this now and begin work forthwith. Address THE CHRISTIAN SUN, 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS AT BETHLEHEM LEAVES FROM A DIARY.

Leaf III.

Thursday A. M., January 10, 1923.

We had a pleasant breakfast party this morning—Fletcher, Denison, Minton and I. Fletcher is hopelessly English. Where we Americans say "I will take oatmeal, or cream of wheat,' Fletcher says "I take a porridge if you please"—and leave it to the waitress to decide on the kind. But I think oatmeal is as much better if you just call it by that name than to be calling it "porridge." The English inherited this dislike of oatmeal. I recall that in old Sam Johnson's first English dictionary his definition of oatmeal was, "a porridge, a food for horses and Scotchmen". (Johnson had no love for Scotchmen and less for oatmeal). Minton surprised us all by not ordering ice cream for breakfast; and Denison lived up to his reputation of ordering a full supply of cheese. Breakfast is my favorite meal, so I ordered all that was in sight and took all that was coming to me.

The great Conference, after the opening song and prayer, was opened with a thrilling address by a distinguished layman of New York, Mr. Mames M. Speers who has recently been on a trip around the world. His topic was "Foreign Missons as Seen by a Layman." Mr. Speers, though engrossed in business, is a keen observer of world conditions and world needs. He paid a glowing tribute to the usefulness, the heroism, the intergrity, wisdom and good sense of missionaries. He declares the missionary task is one that requirs the strength, energy and acumen of strong young men and women. Mr. Speers says the Boards ought not to appoint a missionary for but three years; and that a missionary should go out only on a three years appointment. Then at the end of that period both missionary and Board could tell as to fitness and qualifications. "Recruiting for the ministry or as missionary is a question of world-wide interest. We at home are just' 'muddling along" and are not realizing the real need in mission fields. If one will go visit the mission fields, one may not think much on the subject, but one will certainly rearrange his prejudices.

The missionary should have the very best possible physical conditions and surroundings in which to live. The romance of missions soon wears off, and the missionary needs the best to keep him going and at his best.

There is a great loss to the whole cause of missions because of the splitup denominations. While many churches are trying to cooperate it would be a wonderful saving to Christianity if the denominations would not only cooperate but unite in all missionary endeavor. The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. are very popular in the far East because they are undenominational and seek no issues, but that of making Christ known and improving citizenship. Sin is not divided, but is a common disease. It can be handled only by a united agency and attack, This western hot house which breeds so many varieties of denominationalism is awful. How much longer are we to bring men and women to John Wesley, or Luther—and not to Christ? There is universal heart-hunger for Christ, and Mr. Speers hears in the far east the cry "Oh, that I might find Him". "The old gospel is the only hope of the world." Mr. Speers' talk was so convincing that it was ordered printed at the expense of the Conference.

Dr. A. L. Warnhuis said that while we were not in the "League of Nations" we are influencing legislation in world issues. The governments of the world are now influenced by the missionary. Christians now sit in high places in the councils of Japan and China and Korea and India and Africa. Christianity has done more than win individual converts to Christ. It has influenced governments in their law making and in their court decisions. Missions are necessary both to the life of the church and to the right policy of governments. Missionaries talk, work and live in terms of love, and governments are influenced by them. We are today members not of an American, but of a world-wide church. In Sweeden missionary education is compulsory in the public schools and universities. Why should it not be in all Christian countries—for missions look to the uplift and betterment of all people of all lands. The more missions we have in our educational institutions, the better for the men and women taught and trained there.

One thing I like in this Conference. It matters not how long a hymn is they sing it through. I certainly am glad not to be the third stanza in many hymns as sung in the churches. It is so often omitted.

Bishop J. Taylor Hamilton led the devotionals closing the morning service. He read Act 18:34, and said what we needed was the grace of quiet patience. We need the patience of persistence, even to the end of achievement. Be patient with ourselves, our characters and our capacities, and even with our weaknesses. In our patience we should win our own souls. Hurried impatience defeats results. Results seem to elude us; but we refuse to be discouraged of results. "The harvesting of souls requires time." The Bishop's prayer was wholesome, sweet and inspiring.

We had a fine lunch. Mr. Cavert of the Federal Council joined our party. We discuss church cooperation and the possible union of the denominations. Fletcher ordered a steak for lunch! What do you think of a man that will eat a steak in the middle of the day? Minton had his ice cream and Denison his cheese. I wasn't hungry for lunch and we had company, too,; so I only ate a soup, some spinach with egg, a plate of chicken, a piece of pie with a glass of milk and a cup of coffee. (I prefer breakfast to lunch).

The afternoon session was given to this practical subject, "Should the home churches modify their thinking and missionary activities in order to more effectively help the Christians Missionaries, and their converts, on the field." Dr. Wooley said that the education of the West is not to be adapted by the East, but adapted to it. The biggest business in this world, declared the speaker, is the business of Jesus Christ. The whole educational system of Christendom and of the East is to be recast and rebuilt upon Jesus as the Center and Foundation.

Dr. Joseph C. Robbins declared ours to be an age of "Self-determination." Christians in China, Japan, India, everywhere in the East want the privilege of democracy. The spirit of democracy has spread to all parts of the earth and is especially strong among Christians of all lands.

Dr. Robbins also declared that "No missionary address ought to be made just to get money. It does more harm than good. Missions is, or should be, an undertaking of all good people in behalf of good will throughout the world. The object of missions is to create good will, and a feeling of mutual fellowship amongst all men and women everywhere. Jesus Christ stands out as the one need of all men.

Dr. Samuel Zwemer declared we were living in a time of revolt against all authority, in church, home, State. There is great danger of giving reins of power into hands of babies in Christ too early.

One speaker declared Christianity would never have its way with China until China has had its way with Christianty. That speaker is "off his base."

China has its way with itself and its paganism all these centuries. Hence its present deplorable and idolatrous condition.

Dr. Endicott, the Scotch-Irish brother, who presided said the divinest movement of our times is that young people are asking questions. Quoting John: "I write unto you young men because you are strong and strength abides in you." Young people have the right to ask questions. Dr. Jno. R. Mott delivered a powerful address at the evening hour on "Augmenting the Leadership of our Missionary Forces." He began by defining leadership in terms of the largest unselfishness; unceasing absorption in Kingdom service. We augment the number of missionaries just as Jesus did. He carried forward His enterprise through agents fit to be used. The church today must develop for its purpose agents fit to be used.

Some of the bravest and best souls of all time have fallen on the mission field. We must now pray God to fill up the ranks.

Missionary undertakings now seem more difficult than ever. Problems were never so difficult and never so numerous as now. We need to spend more time alone with God in order to get more power to solve these world problems on the mission field. We must not only augment the number of workers, but the number of supporters. "Money is so much stored up personally and we must engage this personality in this the biggest business ever undertaken by man. It must become a second nature with us to seek out recruits for missionary field and task."

I could fill a whole note book with Mott's speech. My! he does say a mouthfull when he speaks. He is a master of subjects and of assemblies.

At our rooms we talked of denominational cooperation, and of cooperation among ourselves. We sat and talked till mid-night on our Christian Church problems—of what little we are doing, and of what great things we might do if we would all cooperate, as preachers, pastors, laymen, in any definite program for church progress, "And now I lay me down to sleep."

J. O. Atkinson.

(To be continued)

I NEVER HAVE. HAVE YOU?

Here is a very vital question. How many tithers, Brother Pastor, are there in your church? On the answer to that a great deal hinges.

1. I have never seen a tither yet who was not a cheerful giver. Have you? "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," says the Book. Would you not like to change your grouches and disagreeable givers into cheerful ones? Then preach to them the plain, simple, eternal, undeniable truth and doctrine of the Bible that we all owe at least one tenth of all our earnings to the Lord's cause. There is as much justification in the Bible for tithing all our income as there is for observing the Sabbath day.

2. I have never known a tither yet who could not and did not pay all church dues, including pastor's salary, liberally and promptly. Did you? I would rather count on the poor man who tithes than the rich one who does not to carry forward the Kingdom of the Lord, the charity of the community and the benevolence of the world.

3. I have never known a tither yet, one who practiced and tried it, to decide that it was wrong, not according to Scripture or that some other method was better. Did you? It is always the folks who have never studied it through, and those have never tried it, who oppose it.

4. I have never known a local church with even a goodly number of tithers that did not meet all its conference obligations, pay all its pledges, and keep its pastor paid up promptly. Did you?

There are a great many pledges now due on Men and Millions—as just, as deserving, as holy a cause as ever any people made pledges to and assumed obligations for. I do not know a tither who is repudiating his or her pledge, or who will allow his or her pledge to remain unpaid. Do you? Our Men and Millions pledges will be paid when we realize our stewardship and God's ownership.

5. I have never known a tither who turns a deaf ear to any worthy charity of the community or withholds the helping hand from any needy enterprise of God's Kingdom. Have you?

Tithing is of God, born in the divine mind, practiced by the best people of God through all time, approved of Jesus Christ, explained, justified and verified by the writer of Hebrews, nowhere discredited but unmistakably approved and unheld throughout the Word of God, results in cheerful giving, and enables one to "give as the Lord hath prospered." Therefore multiplying the number of tithers in the church is a solemn obligation enjoined on pastors, and a privilege each and all might covet and cultivate with great joy and profit in all things spiritual and eternal.

J. O. ATKINSON.

BROTHER WHITE HEARS FROM BROTHER ABE.

My dear Brother:—

I have read every word you said about me in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which you will admit was a great task for me being only an occasional reader of THE SUN and your letters were longer than some of your sermons. Of course you will think it strange of me when you hear that my animosity was not stirred in the least toward you, but I guess I have more religion than some in your former congregation, being one of your converts. You remember in some of your sermons you made some insinuating remarks, not half so pointed as you have been with me, as you never to my recollection called anybody by name as you have me and aired my failures to the whole church at large, to be sure it is easy to talk about a man when you are separated from him by several hunderd miles, or like Bob Ingersol talking about the mistakes of Moses when he was dead, he would have shut up like a clam had Moses been living, for he would have been too much for him. But I started to say, that after some of the remarks made in your sermons some folks staid at home and they would not pay another cent on the pastor's salary and further more they cliqued together with folks that they would not think of associating with before, to do all the damage to you and your work they could; these are the most contemptible hypocrites we have in the church today, and that is what kept me out of the church for a long time. Now, as I am not righteously indignant about what you have said about me, I know that is just your opinion, and "as a man thinketh in his heart so is he," you know I never stooped that low yet. I always staid through all your sermons however personal or tiresome they may have been and come back the next time to endure what I could not enjoy and I always paid every dollar I agreed to and then helped to make up for those who got mad and would not pay. You will admit that you might have preached better sermons if you had not given so much of your time to calling on folks who did nothing from the time you arrived till you took your departure, but talk about their troubles and gossip about the whole church, such time could have been put to better purpose in your study.. After reading all your letters, I feel somewhat like the man who got up in the morning feeling rather bad and said, "well, I believe if some one would call me a liar today I would tell him I knew I was." When I think of the miserable failure I have made of life I have nothing to say but this, you have only told one side. It is true I came into the church under protest at the eleventh hour, but who is to blame? You have laid it all on my shoulders, and I am too old and broken down in body, intellect and moral vision to properly defend myself. If you had as many gray hairs in your head as I have, and had lived in this community as long, you might have known something of the environment and circumstances in which I was reared. I was just wondering whether you were pursuing the right course to help me in my condition, by pointing out to me my weakness at this late hour and calling me by names. Jesus did not give the name of the dying thief on the cross, or the woman at the well, or the woman caught in adultery, he did not want the world to know who they were, but he wanted the world to know that they had turned from satan to God. Would it not be better to be more charitable and say, is not Brother Abe doing remarkably well since he started, considering his past life. Shall the ghosts of the past be always brought up to haunt us in the present. Give me a vision of the glorious future and not of the dead past out of which I have come. Paul says, "Forgetting the past, I press forward for the prize" and so shall it ever be my aim whatever may be said about me to impede my progress. I would not lay any accusation unjustly at the door of the church, and yet it had a responsibility in my case which at the proper time in my life it failed to fulfill and because of this my capabilities were frustrated for life.

Of course there was a time when I went to Sunday school but my parents did not go with me, although they were members of the church. The church did not seem especially interested in my welfare, as they did not put themselves out of the way to make any provisions for me. All the classes were in one room, and we all had the same lesson and all paid our pennies and went home, taking little with us to build character, because of the nature of the lesson and confusion. Nobody insisted on me staying for preaching, for they thought the children would disturb the preacher, and if we should have stayed we would have gotton but little out of the sermon, as they were all preached over our heads—no children sermons. I atended church services some because I wanted to see what was going on, and I remember on one occasion a protracted meeting was going on, and I felt I ought to become a Christian, and told some of the church so, but they said I was too young—I was twelve years of age. At that time I felt a call to preach, and if I had begun then to prepare myself, spiritually and intellectually, for the work I might have been better equipped and more efficient in the work than some, that are finding fault with me today. When my habits of life were forming the church did not have any use or place for my talents. They did not consider it worth their while, to build a Sunday school room just for me and my class of boys, to have lessons fitted just for us, keeping us in the church services for the good we might get out of them and the habit it would establish in after life, in church attendance. That we were old enough to be of any use to the church, or intelligent enough to know what to do, if taken into the church, much under twenty, or to have the least thought about our social welfare. To develop my musical, speaking, thinking, moral and social life—and so here I am nothing but a physical, intellectual, and moral dwarf. I did not know it then but I have lived long enough to find it out to my eternal regrets, that most of our habits are formed before we are five years old nearly all before we are twenty. If the church does not exist for itself, but for something higher which is humanity, and that my soul was of so immense value that it cost heaven's brightest jewel, why did it not win my soul at all hazzards, and command my attention and whole hearted service before I was twenty years of age. If regrets and lamentations could call back wasted years, I certainly would have life to live over again, but I can only speak to the wind and say, come back, but alas I receive no answer. But thank God I have lived to see a new day for the church although it did not see its opportunity to do its best for me. The church of the future will look after every phase of young life, conserve its energy, and talents to build a super-church for tomorrow. What ever may be said to the contrary, the church of the past stands self condemned, for small financial support, non-church attendance of children and youth, for the young not uniting with the church, for the non-developing of young talents, for the establishing of religious habits and largely for the young sowing their "wild oats" for it has failed to give them in the name of the church the right kind of social environment.

You being my former pastor, I was pleased to learn that you made your trip safe to your new field of labor and that you enjoyed it immensely although you made it alone. After all we come into this world alone, live the inner life alone and go out of this world alone—we do not act or look alike. By the way, I am glad I do not look like you for I always thought I was much more handsome than you. The resolutions you made on that trip were good; to appreciate what the States have done for you, and to be a better citizen in return—some room for improvement here, and to appreciate what God has done for you and to strive to do more for him—here is plenty of room for improvement for all of us. You will remember that the road to perdition is paved with good resolutions while the road to heaven is paved with good performances.

Faithfully yours,
SIMON ABE.

It was decided to again urge each society to have a Mission Study Class during the year, using the two Home and Foreign study books recommended by the General Board.

Miss M. H. Morey of Cana Va., will be asked to speak at each of these Rallies on our Mountain Work, and Mrs. W. H. Denison of Dayton, O., on the General work. Dr. J. O. Atkinson will also speak at each meeting.

The Superintendent of each District will be asked to prepare a poster giving the apportionment of each Society in her District. This poster will be shown at the meeting, and also at the Missionary Conference showing the amounts paid.

The goal for the year remains the same, $6,000.00. The Womens' Special will be $1200.00 for the Richmond work, and the same amount for the China Field as the Foreign Special. The Young people will give $1,000 for the mountain work, and $1,000 00 for the Porto Rican field. The Cradle Roll Department has as its goal $150.00, and this is sent to the Baby Home at Elon College.

The Annual November Thank Offering will be included in the special asked for in the following apportionments:

THE LOSS AT ELON.

The following is the leading editorial in The Herald of Gospel Liberty of a recent date. In the absence of Dr. A. M. Kerr, the editor, who is away from his office sick, the editorial was written by the Rev. F. G. Coffin, D. D., and is republished here on a request to have it republished by Dr. Harper.—Editor Christian Sun.

The disaster and great loss which has recently come to Elon in the destruction by fire of the Administration Building of the college plant will stir the hearts of our entire brotherhood to deep sympathy. The Administration Building was the original building erected on Elon's campus and it was around this ancient landmark that the sacred and hallowed associations of the early days centered. Coming at this particular time after the recent unusually successful financial campaign in which there has been such general participation in the Southern Christian Convention, and the prevailing economic conditions, the task of making good this loss has more than the usual number of embarrassments incident to such catastrophes. Added to this will be the inconvenience of conducting the college work under great handicaps until the building is replaced. The significance of a loss of this kind will be sensed by only a few except those administrators who will have to make provisions to cover its consequences. The struggle of our educational institutions to make possible a normal development with the impediments common to their administration seems at times an almost impossible task under the augmenting demands of the present day. In the midst of these, to be within a few hours thrust beneath an unexpected burden of such huge proportions as this fire precipitates requires stout hearts.

The disaster at Elon is not a local loss nor a loss to a section of our brotherhood. It falls upon the church as a whole and the Kingdom of Christ and "whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member is honored, all the members rejoice with it." We have too long thought of our schools as territorial institutions with resultant obligation upon only that territory in which each may happen to be located. Instead, the educational program of the Christian Church is one and the responsibility for its support is upon the whole denomination. Our colleges are parts of the whole program, not the pet project of different sections. Each is serving the entire church in the particular locality in which it is located. Every member of the Christian Church should feel a personal responsibility to make each of our institutions the best equipped and most efficient which it is possible for them to be made. Need and the size of the opportunity for service, not the location of an institution, should establish its claims upon us. If our schools are to succeed in their several localities, this conception must prevail. It must be held, not as an inoperative theory but as a regulative, dominating principle in our whole educational program. It should be recognized at all times in the distribution of denominational support and with particular emphasis in periods of special need.

It is doubtful if any of our schools have made a larger and more effective contribution to our church life than Elon. Certainly none have done so in an equal number of years of operation. To its influence may be credited the unity and aggressiveness of the Christian Church in the South, while its sturdy influence has spread into every section of our brotherhood, carrying ideals and inspiration without which the whole church would be noticeably less effective than it is. It has given to us and is continuing to produce one of our finest ministerial groups, men who go out with large vision, deep consecration, and persistent industry to bring things to pass under God. Wherever these young men have gone, they have dignified the Christian ministry. In addition to these the consecrated young people of other professions, commercial activites, and domestic circles have by their Christian spirit and effort been forceful factors in their communities. We are all everywhere greatly indebted to Elon.

That Elon's building will phoenix-like rise again, no one doubts. It is characteristic of its management to effect achievements of great proportions. A better and finer building than the one lost will adorn the campus and Elon will be made bigger and better than ever before. Our confidence in this as a certainty may dull our sense of responsibility for its accomplishment, but few will fully measure the weight of burdens and the resources of energy which must accompany the task. The proportions of any work determine the size of the effort and sacrifice by which it is completed. The burden must not be carried by a few. As deeply as we sympathize with Elon in her great loss, a sympathy which ends in a mere sensation is not enough. It weakens us by its very expression and does not help the situation. There is but one thing which will put bricks upon each other to replace the old Administration Building, (and that is money. Both prayer and favorable agitation are necessary antecedents, but there must be more. A consecration of substance will be necessary before the losses of the fire can be made good. Our whole church should be saying, "The God of Heaven, he will prosper us, therefore we, his servants, will arise and build," and as of old, no matter how great the task, it is not beyond the possibility of a speedy accomplishment. Let the church get behind Elon at this time and together score another and greater victory in the cause of Christian education. Let us together pray that the president and Board of Trustees may be divinely guided in their plans for rebuilding and financing, and that the Lord may especially open the hearts of the friends of education and lay upon each one who should assist his part of the responsibility in this crisis.

F. G. COFFIN.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

Subject: Jesus Teaching in the Temple—Luke 20:1-21:38.

Golden Text: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."—Luke 20:25.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 2.

Reference Material: Isaiah 28:14-20;Matt. 7:28-29; Acts 4:1-22; Romans 13:1-7.

Abraham Lincoln, one of America's greatest Christian statesmen once declared: "I am very anxious to know whether we are on God's side." Had he been standing in that captious, criticizing crowd in Jerusalem, the last week of our Lord's life on earth, he would have taken his stand on the side of Jesus. His voice would not have been raised to criticize the authority of the Son of God. He could not have been a spy to seek to betray Him. Where would you have been standing on that day? Where are you standing today? Are you a faithful follower seeking for knowledge, or a treacherous hypocrite yearning to do harm to His cause, while pretending to stand near Him? The question is vital: Where are you standing? How are you looking at the Christ?

The enemies of Jesus Christ were very active these last days of his life. They were eager to put Him out of the way. Their greatest hindrance was the people who loved Him, and whom they feared. So their work had to be by stealth, but Jesus met and answered all of their questions in a way which gives to us some of his greatest teachings.

1. Christian Patriotism.

It is impossible to separate love for God from true loyalty to one's country. Edmund Burke said: "Religion is the basis of civil society, and the source of all good and of all comfort." Paul exhorted his listeners to "Render to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor." Jesus Christ taught: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." The questioning Jews wished to entangle Jesus in politics. They had lost their nationality, and sought to regain it, and so their question "Is it lawful for us to give tribute to Caesar" was a test question regarding patriotism. His answer combined His loyalty to God, with His patriotism to His country—Christian Patriotism.

A nation rightly demands loyalty from her citizens. Loyalty means love for country. Loyalty means appreciation of the principles for which that country stands, and a steadfast effort to see them carried into action. Loyalty means a willingness to sacrifice for the welfare of the whole land. Such was the spirit of Edith Cavell, that martyr nurse of the recent war, but when she came to her death, these were her words: "Patriotism is not enough." Patriotism, without God, is incomplete. What we need is Christian patriots, and true Christians will be filled with loyalty and patriotism, but should the choice ever come between their nation, and their God, God will come first. Certain duties belong to "Caesar" or to the state; certain to God. To recognize and perform faithfully these duties, was the comand of Jesus. This is a fitting time to discuss the opportunities, and the duties which challenge Christian Patriots today.

2. Christian Stewardship.

"And He looked up, and saw—gifts." In the temple Jesus sat watching the people as they brought their gifts to God. The Rich and the Poor were there together. He was watching, but He saw more than the material gift. He was watching them not to rebuke alone, but to give His approval as well. Sometimes His followers are prone to remember the rebuke, and to express it harshly, and to forget the approval. Jesus is still looking, and sees, not only the gifts, but the thoughts and words and lives as well. What is he seeing in your life?

Jesus approved the faithful steward, the humble widow who had doubtless sacrificed in order to be able to bring her two mites to God's House. The two mites, or two "lepta" would amount to about two-fifths of a cent in our money, but in the eyes of Jesus it was a generous gift, even in comparison with the large amounts placed in the box by wealthy men. She was a poor woman, and we do not even know her name, but still the story of her act on that day in the temple has been told for centuries, and her influence is still teaching a mighty lesson. Faithfulness in stewardship pertains to the smallest act in our daily life. We can recognize, or deny God every day. It does not have to be the great, spectacular deed of service. If does have to be faithfulness where you are. The seemingly insignificant deed may exert the greater influence, as the widow's gift. "Brighten the corner where you are" is a real way to spread the joy of Christianity. Giving what you can is the effectual way to serve the Kingdom of God.

Jesus saw the spirit of the gift, and evaluated it according to the motive of the giver. "The Lord doesn't look so much at what you've given as at what you have left." He knows the spirit which makes us give to all of the enterprises of the church. That is the way which we have of showing our interest in His work in a very practical way. The great work which the Church is doing today is made possible by hundreds and thousands of consecrated Christians, "Faithful Stewards" who are glad to give to Him, through the church. The name may be as unknown as that of the widow of Jerusalem, but the gift is accomplishing good, because of the spirit of the giver.

Christian Stewardship includes three forms of service:

1. The Stewardship of Prayer. "Prayer is both a privilege and a responsibility: It is not only a delightful communion, but an exalted stewardship."

2. The Stewardship of Life. "The acknowledgment of God's sovereign ownership of your life, as well as of your possessions, is a fundamental element in Christian stewardship."

3. The Stewardship of Possessions. "One more revival, only one more is needed, the revival of Christian Stewardship, the dedication of money-power to God."—Horace Bushnell.

"If we only had the money
That belongeth to our King,
If the reapers of God's bounties
Would their tithes and offerings bring,
Then the thirsty land would blossom
And the waiting isles would sing,
If we only had the money
That belongeth to our King.
O stewards, get you ready!
Soon will come the reckoning,
When we'll answer for the money
That belongeth to our King."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

March 4, 1923.

Lessons from the Psalms. III. The Refuge Psalm. Ps. 91:1-16.

Thoughts for the Topic.

"Secret place of the Most High" (Verse 1). The old tabernacle was divided into the holy place, and the holy of holies. The temple had the same divisions, with the outer court of the women and the court of the Gentiles. Only the high priest could enter the Holy of Holies, and he only once a year. Here God's very special presence was supposed to abide. The man or woman who trusts Jehovah may dwell in this "secret place of the Most High." What a wonderful joy to live daily in this great presence, "under the shadow of the Almighty." "Jehovah is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid."

The shade of a great tree is a protection from the hot rays of the summer sun. The "shadow of the Almighty" is a protection from temptation and difficulty, and a refuge in times of sorrow and distress.—Verse 1.

The Jews had cities of refuge, to which under certain conditions they could flee for refuge. (Numbers 35:6-24). Jehovah is a greater power, offers a refuge which will give protection, and forgiveness. To trust in God means safety. —Verse2.

David Livingstone, when in a time of difficulty, read Jesus' promise: "I am with you always," and closed the book and said: "He is a gentleman. He will not go back on his word." God has promised to protect and keep His children through terror, and pestilence and danger. He will keep His word.

"He will give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Are we willing to entrust all of our ways to God? Nothing less than our all is enough for God, whose power we need and whose angels may be our protectors and guides.

"Because he hath known my name." This is the reason for knowing that God will be our "refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." Do you know the name of God? Have you given Him your love and your life? Are you pointing others to that name?

"He shall call upon me, and I will answer him." Prayer is our means of calling upon God, and He promises to hear and to answer. The blessing of God's refuge comes when we seek it continually by calling upon Him. Too often, the call comes only when the darkest hour of trouble is reached. God is listening for that call at all times. His blessing and care are for times of joy, as well as for hours of distress.

"In God we trust" is the inscription on the American silver dollar. Is our nation living up to this inscription? How can Christian Endeavor help to teach this lesson?

"Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort, strengthen and keep you,
He is willing to aid you;
He will carry you through."

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

This is the third Consecration Meeting with the general subject "Lessons from the Psalms." The March Psalm is well worth memorizing, and repeating at each meeting during the month.

Bible References: Ruth 2:12; Ps. 7:1; 34:8; 36:7; 40:1, 7, 11; 57:1; 61:3; 62:7; 73:28; 94:22; Prov. 14:26; Isa. 14:32.

During the meeting, sing softly, the old hymn "Jesus Lover of My Soul" after telling the following, concerning its author:

"When he was fifteen years old, Charles Wesley had to choose whether he would be adopted by a wealthy uncle, a member of Parliament, or not. The mother wisely left the choice wholly with the boy and he decided to stay with his fifteen brothers and sisters in the Epworth parsonage. The cousin who was adopted in his place became the grandfather of the great Duke of Wellington, and so has made a name in history. But Charles Wesley also made a great name for himself. He did not grow up to be a fighter; he was a singer and wrote more than 6,000 hymns. One of these was that favorite "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." Two or three stories have been told as to the reason for writing this hymn. It is said that a bird of prey was after a little bird and the little bird, to escape, flew in through an open window at which Wesley was sitting and nestled in his shirt-bosom Another version is, that Wesley was fleeing from persecution and found refuge in an old springhouse, hidden from the pursuers. Whichever occasion was the one which led to the writing of the hymn, it brings to us tonight in song, the lesson of the evening."

Appropriate Hymns: I Need Thee Every Hour; Abide With Me; Safe in the Arms of Jesus; Rock of Ages; The Haven of Rest; Jesus is all the World To Me.

For Discussion. Do we really try to obey every law of God? Does the Christian Endeavor pledge lead us to seek God's help and protection?

Reasons why every member of our Society should memorize the 91st Psalm.

For advertising the meeting, the following poster is suggested:

Run for Shelter!
Where?
Read Psalm 91; 1-16, and then
Come to Christian Endeavor
Time:
Place:

Make the closing minutes of the meeting a time of reconsecration, with hymns sung softly, and a few minutes spent in silent prayer. If you call the roll at this Consecration Meeting, ask each member to be ready with a Scripture Verse concerning God's love or care.

A LIVE SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS.

This class holds a record of which officials of the East End Christian Sunday School of Newport News are proud. Neither the teacher nor any of the pupils has missed a Sunday for sixteen consecutive weeks and the class has issued a challenge to the remainder of the church for 100 per cent attendance at the church services.

Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of the church, states that he, C. D. West, the superintendent of the school, and others are proud of the class and that the class and the teacher, Mr. Baker, are to be highly commended.

Have you a Sunday School class that has a record as fine as that of this class of boys?

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

First Christian Sunday School, Portsmouth, Virginia, observed "Men and Millions Day" Sunday, February 11th. Mr. B. F. Collins, the Superintendent of the Sunday School led the responsive reading, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary, made a short address following the response. This church has a well-graded Sunday school, and three Christian Endeavor Societies, Senior, Intermediate and Junior. Monday night of each week is devoted to classes for study, with a view to doing better work. Rev. W. L. Wells, is the pastor.

Mrs. R. L. Baker is the president of the Christian Endeavor Society at Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth. Dr. Harward, the pastor, is conducting a class in Personal Evangelism each Wednesday night.

Suffolk Christian Sunday school observed "Men and Millions Sunday" on the 11th of February, with Dr. L. E. Smith, as the speaker of the occasion.

There is still a limited number of copies of the leaflet for use in Sunday schools, giving the principles, history and work of the Christian Church, in the office of the Board of Religious Education. These are free, but valuable. Write if you can use them.

A series of Sunday school institutes will be held in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, opening in Norfolk, March 17th, and closing in Richmond April 1st. Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., Field Secretary of Young People's Work of the Christian Church, and Mr. Frank Wilson, of Danville, Va., Field Secretary of Christian Endeavor for Virginia and North Carolina, will be with the Field Secretary of the Southern Convention in these meetings. Details of program and time of meeting for each church will be announced next week.

The question has been asked again: "Will there be a Chautauqua this year?" We are glad to say: "Yes, at Elon College, July 30th to August 5th." The full program will soon be ready for publication. All of the faculty and lecturers have not responded, but the following have agreed to plan to be present; for class or lecture work: Rev. Roy Helfenstein, D. D., of Dover, Delaware, subject Evangelism; Mrs. M. T. Morrill, Defiance, O., Missions; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, Missions; Hermon Eldredge, Erie, Pa., Young People's Work; Rev. E. B. Flory, Norfolk, Va., Rev. James Lightbourne, Holland Va.; Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.; Dr. W. B. Perry, Raleigh, N. C.; Rev. John G. Truitt, Princeton, N. J.; Rev. J. F. Morgan, Winchester, Virginia; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va. The acceptance of these men and women assures us that the 1923 session of the Chautauqua will be worth while. Plan now to spend your vacation at Elon, July 30th to August 5th, and write the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., at any time for information.

What do your read for as a rule? Why, to get information, to become informed and so know things which are going on in the world. Then, be sure to read slowly and with care that you may know what you are reading. We heard a man reading in public once, and the most ordinary words he miscalled so that no one could get the meaning of what he was reading. What is the use of such reading? There is no use for such reading, so far as we can understand. In this particular case, we think the reader certainly knew better, but from sheer carelessness, he simply blundered over the words till we are quite sure that neither his hearers nor himself could form an idea of what he was reading. He knew better but from carelessness he read it in a way that no one could understand it. Do give us better reading and then let us have better hearing.

Do you find Men and Millions to act upon your nerves like music? If so, be happy over the effect, and if not so, then do your best to offer to Dr. Atkinson a helping hand, for now is the time of need. Dr. Atkinson is giving his time and talents to this great work.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:—

I have always wanted to have the pleasure of being able sometime to say to our Southern Christian Convention that every Sunday school in the Convention was on the list of monthly contributors toward the support of the Orphanage. I have worked hard to that end but have not been able to reach it. I have two reasons for this strong desire. One is to secure funds on which to run the Christian Orphanage. The other is to help the church. Every Sunday school that makes a monthly offering to help support our orphan children is helped.

We have quite a number of churches that have enjoyed making the monthly offering so much that they have increased it from time to time. We have one church in our Convention that started making a monthly offering of something like $5.00 per month when the orphanage was first opened. That Sunday school has enjoyed it so much it now gives more than $50.00 per month.

We have in our care ninety-four children. It takes a good deal to feed and clothe them. Your Sunday school surely wants to have a part in this great work in the Master's work. You have a part allowed to you and will you fail to meet your obligation. The Master has said to you. "In as much as ye have done it unto one of these the least of mine ye have done it unto me."

If your Sunday school is not making the monthly offering start now and get your school on the list. Our record book looks mighty pretty when your school has an offering in each monthly column.

Don't overlook the call for sheets, pillow cases, and pictures.

ILLUMINATED CHRISTIANS.

If every Christian of us were illuminated by the Spirit of God, how could we light up the churches! But to have a lantern without any light, that would be a nuisance. Many Christians carry along lanterns and say: "I wouldn't give up my religion for yours." They talk about religion. The religion that has no fire is like painted fire. They are artificial Christians. Do you belong to that class? You can tell. If you cannot, your friends can.

There is a fable of an old lantern in a shed, which began to boast because it had heard its master say that he didn't know what he would ever do without it. But little candle within spoke up and said: "Yes, you'd be a great comfort if it wasn't for me! You are nothing; I'm the one that gives the light." We want to keep in communication with Christ and let Him dwell in us richly and shine forth through us. —D. L. Moody.

The Story of The Bible

By Hendrick Van Loon

is being published in McCall's Magazine. It is the most important and epoch-making contribution ever printed by an American magazine, because here for the first time has a master-writer and master-historian picked out shining thread of the Biblical narrative, dropping away all details from it and presenting it not only in the simplest and most beautiful of English but fixing it also in its exact historical perspective.

IN McCALL'S NOW.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

Pray for it. The one great need of our Christian Church today is Men and Millions consecrated upon God's altar to the service of the Church and the Kingdom. If you love the Christian Church then you love also Men and Millions, since Men and Millions is the one Movement amongst us in behalf of the entire Church and all it has, is and stands for. When one pays a dime or a dollar to Men and Millions in that act one gives to all the work and worship of the Christian Church in this world.

Men and Millions is the one Movement which undertakes to cultivate love for, and loyalty to, and support of all the enterprises of the Church.

If we love the Christian Church then let us prove that love by paying our pledges to

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Preach it. Teach it. Pray for it. Undertake great things for God, then expect great things from God.

Victory! Victory! Victory! If all do their duty and meet their solemn obligations.

VICTORY!

TRUSTEE MEETING OF BETHLEHEM.

The trustees of Bethlehem College met at La Grange, Ga., Feb. 14th. Those present at the meeting were: Dr. T. H. Denny, J. J. Carter, H. W. Elder, R. F. Brown and E. M. Carter; Dr. W. A. Harper was represented by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, O. O. Mitchell, by Rev. G. D. Hunt, J. W. Payne, by Rev. J. D. Dollar. Others who attended the meeting were Rev. Edwin B. Flory, Rev. W. Hanson, Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. W. T. Meacham and M. J. Holman.

The most vital question for consideration was that of a president for the institution. After spending much time in discussing the matter it was decided to leave it in the hands of a committee. This committee is composed of Dr. T. H. Denny, E. M. Carter and Dr. W. A. Harper. It was the opinion of the trustees that a man for this place should be secured as quickly as possible that he might work out the details incident to the opening and a number of other duties that might come before him.

Rev. G. D. Hunt was elected to succeed Rev. R. F. Brown, and will finish the campaign for the building funds.

An outline for a plan for the first building was submitted and adopted. The building committee was instructed to present the plan to an architect for specifications and to proceed at once with the building.

The trustees in session voted to extend thanks to those who assisted in the campaign; and, to the first church Norfolk, Va., for their pastor. Bro. Flory's work was very highly appreciated, though hindered by the rain and mud, and will be glad for him to come again. Dr. Atkinson is always welcomed in our section. In fact we would be glad to have him just any time.

After the business was over a number of inspiring talks were made by members and visitors of the meeting. The meeting was harmonious throughout the session as the problems of this great cause were considered.

E. M. CARTER.

AUBURN.

People often think of small churches as ones existing just for namesake. They exist because people love God and this cause. They have a purpose and people must stop to give them credit for the noble work they are doing. Auburn is a faithful church, though the membership small, and is aiding in the Spiritual life of this, God's world. There is a sweet Spiritual congeniality which one must feel when associating with these good people. Our Sunday school there is active because the people realize that they must function to win and keep won men, women, boys and girls, if the world is ever to set that day in which men will stop to proclaim Christs' Purpose and Success. The Sunday school also has charge of the prayer services of the church and is adding to the spiritual inspiration of the community.

The people are very loyal to their church and attend services faithfully. Preaching services are held on the second Sunday morning of each month at eleven o'clock.

May God give new vision and aspirations for this splendid work and add spiritual strength to all those who love Him.

WM. T. SCOTT, Pastor.

BEREA.

Seasons bring different affects on church work, but for the winter seasons at Berea both the Sunday school and church have showed signs of real permanent work. The bad weather has had little effect on the attendance. The people show signs of determination for a better and bigger work in that field. At our last quarterly conference the church voted to light the house with gas lights, which will improve greatly our oil lights. There will be a driveway graded, by the church, leading to the highway which will add to our splendid location. We are very proud too of the lead that our young folks are taking in both the Sunday school and church work. We are determined as a church to go forward along unity of Spirit, purpose, and organization.

JOBS AND CONTENTMENT.

Henry Ford recently told a delegation from the International Labor Office of the League of Nations that what the world needs to end its unrest is a job for every man. He finds in the day's work his panacea and scouts the necessity for equalizing the money-exchange rates or any other economic solution of our present-day problems.

If Mr. Ford were a farmer, he would talk differently. He is a manufacturer, and has hold of the long end of the lever. Every farmer has a job. It is a steady job, frightfully steady. It occupies all his time, his strength, and his mind. But the farmers of our country are in a state of unrest because for three years they have not been making expenses and have been getting farther and farther into debt.

Economic and social reforms are needed, and great moral reforms like prohibition, before the world can know contentment. And far beyond all of these must come the new heart, the peace with God that only Christ can give. While sin rules, the world will be restless; and a job for every man, even as good a job as Mr. Ford gives, will prove only a little step on the pathway of peace.—Arrow.

TRANSFORMED.

It was a piece of marble which somebody had hacked and marred and cast aside as worthless. It had lain for years in a rubbish-heap, soiled and half buried in dirt. But there came a great day when the man saw it who was a great artist. A real artist is one who can see what nobody else can see—in a flower, a stretch of beach or a piece of stone. And this man saw something in the rejected block, and with the artist-key, which they call a chisel, he set to work to bring it out of prison.

For many days he labored; now making the marble chips fly as he hammered with fierce eagerness, now working slowly, with delicate touch, and often stepping backward to see the figure afresh. And one day the prisoner came forth, radiant in white. man, eager to serve the God Whose voice he had heard. It was David! standing with his sling in hand, ready to meet Goliath.

That was more than 300 years ago. The statue stands today in a great gallery in Italy.—Rev. Frank T. Bagley.

Called Home

DIED

Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Pond was born April 3rd, 1855 and died January 28, 1923, age 67 years, 9 months and 25 days. She was married to Conley M. Pond December 3, 1874. To this union were born seven children, Guy Phillips, Sallie Lee, Olive Virginia, Robert Hurley, deceased, Hugh Butler, Bessie May and Lizzie Conley, deceased. For many years they lived near Spring Hill Church, their home was one of the old time Southern homes, where much of the church and comunity activity was seen in the young life as gathered there. She was a motherly woman not only to her own children but to many others.

Sister Pond lived a high type of the "Old Virginia Christian Womanhood." She presided in her home after the death of her husband, with ease and dignity, making her guests feel comfortable and happy. She was loyal to the church till death, and faithful in attendance as long as she was active. She suffered greatly for many years. She was confined to the house for about four years, and in the bed for two years. She was buried at Spring Hill Cemetery January 30, 1923, in the presence of a large circle of relatives and friends. The many beautiful flowers spoke the silent virtues she had lived so long. It is a loss to any church or community where one of these splendid women quit their earthly house and go to abide in their heavenly. Peace to thy long resting place and as from time to time flowers are placed there, so may the virtues of your life live in the lives of these whom you have known.

The burial services by the pastor and writer.

Jas. L. Foster.

OBITUARY

Butler Willie Pierce departed this life December 23, 1923. He was nearing his 70th year. He joined the church years ago at Christian Chapel and later moved his membership to Catawba Springs where he remained a loyal member till his death. The immediate cause of his death was influenza, followed with pneumonia.

Brother Pierce leaves a widow and several children, all of whom are grown, and grandchildren, and a host of friends, who will miss him. May our heavenly Father bless and preserve these who linger on the shores of time waiting for their summons, and bring these together again where parting will be no more.

The burial services were conducted by Brother Myatt Sorrell.

J. Lee Johnson.

OBITUARY

On February 3, 1923, Charlie Langston, son of the late Jim Langston, died suddenly about 9 o'clock P. M. He was a member of Catawba Springs church and had gone in the evening to the regular Saturday quarterly service. It was touching to have him back at the church the next day (Sunday) cold in death. So far as I recall it was the first time I have spoken to a man from the pulpit one day and about a man from the same pulpit the next day. "There is but a step between me and death."

Charlie leaves a wife and six children, from 15 to about 3 years of age, a mother, brothers, sisters, kinsfolks, and many friends to miss him. May our gracious Father comfort the bereaved and care for the helpless and guide them all till they shall unite again in a better world.

J. Lee Johnson.

LILES

Martha Etta Brady Liles was born May 15, 1885, died January 28, 1923, age 37 years, 8 months, 13 days. Was married to Henry Lester Liles December 28, 1920. She leaves a husband, an infant son, 15 days old, an aged mother, four step children and many relatives and friends. She had been a member of Pleasant Grove Christian Church for more than twenty years.

Sister Liles was one of the best women of the community. Truly it might be said of her: She was steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the works of the Lord. 1 Cor. 15-58.

She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pleasant Grove. Funeral by her pastor.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Well Put, Isn't It?—

The Christian Advocate puts the case in this way:

Has the Turk had a change of heart? Gen. Ismet Pasha is quoted to have said recently: "Turkey is dedicated to liberty and does not believe that people should be held in bondage against their wishes." Since when has the Turk believed thus? This claim is something new in a changing world. How happy the world would be to see some evidence of the truthfulness of the statement!

Oh, Yes, Getting Better All The Time.—

Somebody asked a Jewish Babbi this question: What is wrong with America today? The Rabbi answered: "Craze for money, dislike of work, lust of self-indulgence, desire to live by one's wit rather than by one's brawn, disregard of moral and legal restraints, profanation of the Sabbath, disertion of home, violation of the marriage vow, indecency in dress, speech, and bearing, scoffing at things sacred are infecting today every stratum of society and every city into which large masses of the lawless and godless have gravitated." How far wrong is the rabbi? To what extent is the church responsible for the evils named? Suppose we ask ourselves: "What can I do to help in correcting these evils?"

The World's Protestant Population.—

The whole population of the globe, according to the latest figures available, amounts to 1537 millions. Of these Roman Catholicism claims 265 millions and Protestantism 202 millions. The totals for Europe are 191 millions of Roman Catholics and 109 millions of Protestants. Contrary to the general impression, these figures compare not unfavorably with those of fifty years ago, when there were in Europe about 71 millions of Protestants as against 147 millions of Roman Catholics. In the United States the Roman Catholic population is 15 millions as against 81 millions Protestant. The Protestants have increased in Great Britain, America and in Switzerland in a greater proportion than the Roman Catholics. The percentage of Protestants to the whole population of the world has risen from 7.9 in 1872 to 11.7 in 1918.

Paganism, however, still outnumbers Christianity. 850 millions of people are still in heathen darkness.

A Brighter Day for The South Industrially.—

Since the Civil War many have been the burdens of the South, Socially, Politically, Educationally, Financially, Religiously and Industrially, but at length a brighter day is dawning from the industrial standpoint and henceforth a brighter day seems to be dawning, viewed from the industrial standpoint. That our cotton mill industry is getting ahead of the same industry in New England seems to be pretty sure, if we may judge from The New York Journal of Commerce, which says the mills of New England have twenty-one million spindles, while the mills of the South have only sixteen million spindles; but the mills of New England ran only seventy-four per cent of normal last year, while the mills of the South ran one hundred and ten per cent normal. The mills of the South are handicapped only by a shortage of spindles. The Northern mills are handicapped by several things. The matter of labor is a frequent source of difficulty. That has affected the Southern mills but little. The claim made for some time that the South could never compete with the North in the textile industry for lack of skilled labor has been disproved. But there are other things in favor of the South that are of a more permanent nature. The short haul from the cotton fields to the mills, the advantage of water power, and lower rates of fuel are advantages that are bound to count more and more. New England's tremendous lead has disappeared, we think, for all time to come."

Roentgen is dead.—

Millions of people have had good cause to rise up and call this name blessed, for William C. Roentgen was the owner of the brain which saw what the X-ray might be to suffering humanity. Hertz and Lenard had already shown that the familiar cathode ray could penetrate metals and other opaque substances; it remained for Roentgen to make use of the discovery to see the shadow thrown by a bone upon a fluorescent screen, when illuminated by X-rays.

Roentgenology has made long strides since that day, thirty years ago, when his discovery was first flashed to a startled and incredulous world. Today no hospital of any pretensions is without an X-ray apparatus; no surgeon operates without an X-ray picture to guide him if it is possible to make one; no dentist undertakes any large operation upon the mouth or teeth without the magic picture first points the way.

We have new methods of making X-rays, new and better methods of using them, and we have added the name of Coolidge immediately below that of Roentgen; Coolidge, who made ductile tungsten, and so the Coolidge tube, possible. But no name can stand beside that of Roentgen, a statement with which Dr. Coolidge would be the first to agree.

Roentgen stands among the great benefactors of humanity. He saved countless lives and kept from unnecessary torture countless more. It is a source of great pleasure to all who use, or have benefited by his discovery, that he lived to a ripe old age, and to see his work universally used by all the world.

The Work of a Rich Corporation.—

Surely money can be very useful when kept in right channels. It may do some good outside of strictly religious channels, but of course if wisely used in religious channels more permanent results. We do not so much refer to the quality of the work as to the quantity. The following from The Christian Advocate gives a comprehensive account of the work of the Carnegie Corporation. It will encourage you to take care of your money because of the good it may accomplish when well and wisely used:

A remarkable group of varied activities, together with gifts during the past eleven years of nearly fifty-eight million dollars, is disclosed in the report of the president of the Carnegie Corporation. The major interests at present receiving their support wholly or largely from this Corporation are: The Institute of Economics in Washington, an agency for analyzing and publishing economic facts in popular form; the Food Research Institute at Leland Stanford University, a scientific extension of studies in the production and distribution of foods begun by Mr. Hoover during the war; the National Research Council in Washington, an organization that aims to focus and promote all sorts of scientific research in America; the Potter Metabolic Laboratory at Santa Barbara, Cal., where insulin, the recently discovered specific for diabetes, is being manufactured and perfected; the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, for which the Corporation is paying the cost of a building to house a notable library recently acquired by the school; and comprehensive investigations into the fundamentals of unemployment and into the means of improvement of the law. A total of $5,254,000 has been paid to beneficiaries during the year ending September 30, 1922, of which $2,578,000 went to colleges and universities. Of nearly $58,000,000 expended during the eleven years of the Corporation's existence, $23,415,000 has been given to four Carnegie institutions: the Institute at Pittsburgh, the Foundation in New York, and the Institution and the Peace Endowment in Washington. In addition to $30,000,000 granted by Mr. Carnegie personally for public library buildings, $12,292,000 has been devoted by the Corporation to the same purpose. Schools and colleges have received $9,276,000 medical and health education $3,266,000, and scientific research $1,511,000 chiefly within the past four years. The report explains the policy of the Corporation in discontinuing its gifts of libraries. The assests of the Corporation amount to $130,000,000 which will be increased by about $10,000,000 on the final settlement of Mr. Carnegie's estate.

NOTES-PERSONALS

In the last issue of THE SUN there appeared a list of the Standing Committees of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, sent in by Rev. G. R. Underwood. Better look the list over and see if your name is on the list. You would feel pretty cheap if you should go to the next session of that conference and then learn for the first time that you are on a certain committee, and that after the President had published the entire list.

From a local paper of February 12, 1923, we learn that Dr. D. A. Long, D. D., LL. D., recently gave a lecture in the First Baptist Church of Lake Alfred, Fla., to a very large audience on the Seven Churches of Asia. If his lecture was equal to his theme the Lake Alfred people had a treat on that occasion, for when Dr. Long is in the right mood, and with such a theme as that, not many men can surpass him as a platform speaker.

Do not miss the weekly visits of THE SUN these days. You surely will miss much if you do, but you will especially miss the letters of Simon Abe, addressed to his former pastor, Rev. T. E. White, who had for several weeks been giving Bro. Abe some fine advice. It remains to be seen what sort of advice Bro. Abe will give Bro. White before he gets through. Do not miss a copy of THE SUN, if you can avoid it. If you do you may miss just the thing you desired to see.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., is expected to reach his work in North Carolina some time in March, after spending most of the winter in Florida with his wife, who has been very feeble, but is now better. Their many friends will be glad of their return and of the benefit, physically, they have both received. It must be a delightful experience to spend the winter in Florida, where the chilling winds of winter are not felt as they are in North Carolina. Come home, friends, a hearty welcome awaits you.

The three old North Carolina Conferences, as they existed before the union of them all into one body have been requested by the United Conference to meet in annual session in the summer or fall of 1923, as may have been their custom, taking up their work as usual. The Old United Conference will meet as usual in annual session till such time as all the debts of the said united conference may be paid off. The delegates to this old united conference will be from all of the three conferences, so as to keep the business in legal shape till the affairs of the united body may be closed up according to law. We hope all three of the old conferences acting for themselves may do as Bro. Underwood has done for the Eastern Conference, in appointing the committees, so that the work may be all in shape when they come together next fall

The members of the Society, with some friends, were entertained by Miss Lucy Eldredge, at a Valentine party on February 13th. The rooms were attractively decorated and a program of games suitable to the holiday were enjoyed. Delicious refreshments were served, and the party closed with an invitation from the president to all present to join the society and help with its work. Over one hundred handkerchiefs were brought in at this time, for a handkerchief sale which the society plans to hold in the near future.

February was a month of activity in the various organizations of the Richmond Church. On the 2nd of the month, the regular meeting of the Young People's Missionary Society was held at the parsonage. The program consisted of a devotional period, including two missionary stories, led by Miss Eldredge, information concerning the organization and work of the Mission Boards by Mrs. Walters, and a business session, followed by a social hour. Mr. Marvin Horton is the president and Miss Viola English the secretary of this growing society.

His many friends are congratulating Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the First Christian Church at Durham, N. C., on his marrigae which was celebrated on Washington's Birthday, February 22, 1923. Miss Alberta Boon, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Boon of Durham was his bride. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., was the celebrant, officiating on the occasion. The marriage took place in the Presbyterian Church of Durham. The Christian Church of which Bro. Harrell is pastor, could not be used because it was undergoing repairs and a general renovation. The bride is a grand daughter of the late Rev. C. A. Boon. This item alone will interest many of the friends of Bro. Boon who was for many years a minister in the Christian Church. The marriage scene was one of great beauty and in the presence of a multitude, for the Spacious Presbyterian Church was crowded and many were then left to stand because there was no more room. THE SUN joins the many friends of these dear young people in best wishes for a life of great usefulness and happiness.

We regret to announce the sudden and severe illness of Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Chapel Hill, N. C. He was taken ill after a day of church visitation. He had heard two excellent sermons on Sunday. Sunday night when he came in, he was cool and sat by the fire warming himself. For the moment Mrs. Long had just stepped into an adjoining, or a near by, room. Hearing something fall she hurried back to see what it was, when she found her husband, Dr. Long, prostrate on the floor. In falling his hands had struck the stove and he was burned, not dangerously, but quite severely. He had fallen from a sudden attack of vertigo. The doctor was summoned and everything that human skill could do was done for him. At last accounts he was improving, but still confined to his bed from weakness. Many prayers will be offered for him in his illness and it is devoutly hoped that he may soon be quite himself again. His long service and loyalty to the Christian Church will most naturally awaken a great interest in his condition, and many will be most anxious to hear from him. We will do our best to keep his friends posted at least once a week as to his improvement.

Ladies' Aid Society of the First Christian Church, Richmond, was entertained on Thursday night, the 15th, by Mrs. Lizzie Carr Brinkley in her home on Church Hill. Following the business session, the guests were delighted with musical selections rendered by a mixed quartet, which Mr. Willie Brinkley had secured for the evening.

The Missionary Society met with Mrs. Kernodle on the 21st. Mrs. Rountree, the president conducted the program, telling of the work of various missionaries on the field in an interesting and instructive way.

The Sunday school class of young ladies taught by Mrs. W. F. Holmes, enjoyed a business and social session in their teacher's home recently.

The Richmond Sunday school has recently adopted a goal for larger membership to be reached by the time the new church building is ready. Each class has pledged itself to increase its membership at least 50 per cent, and the number of new members, as well as the splendid attendance of regular members during the past month has been very encouraging.

Spring Hill, $10.00 and New Lebanon, $50 were omitted in the list of Young Peoples' apportionments.

APPRECIATIVE WORDS.

Office of the Brigade Chaplain Marine Barracks, Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti.

February 13, 1923.

MY DEAR DOCTOR BARRETT:

I have had promptings for some time to express to you my delight in the Family Altar page of THE SUN. The power of this page is limited only to its use. It is a fine thing, because I think people of earnest devotional type desire guidance in reading, and prayers as well,—and this will do it.

I would suggest, if I may, that a prayer be included each time, or what is better still, in my opinion, something like the little program of reading and prayer for each day as used by The Christian Herald on its sermon page.

It does not appear that Dr. Sheldon's method can be improved upon, with exception to the prayers. I think they may. This is in no way to suggest to you that you copy Dr. Sheldon's idea; however, I cannot see that a mistake would be made if you should.

THE SUN grows more intensely interesting and I love to tell you that I regard it as second to none. It is a real feast to me when it comes.

Permit me to extend to you my best wishes in your new married life. I am sure you have done the right thing, and in the joy thereof I rejoice with you.

Very sincerely yours,
CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

OUR THIRD AVENUE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AT DANVILLE VA.

Held services six nights during Christmas week. We believe, with good results. This church has a missionary society of more than 50 members, and they are trying to get every member of the church to become a member of it, so that it may be known as a missionary church. This woman's missionary society observed the week of prayer as requested. They made out a program for the entire week. This church is now thinking of planning and praying for a glorious revival. Pray with us. We believe this church is in a healthy condition. We have been preaching for fifty-one years, and yet I am a young man, but in my observation, I do not believe that in all these years, that I have ever seen sweeter fellowship than here. Our congregation is now more than double what is was twelve months ago. I tell you it pays to prune the vine once in a while, and especially when it is done for the glory of God. Let us pray for the fullness of the blessings of the Gospel. Let us give our people a full gospel of good news. Very few of us preach a full Gospel. When we quit the field, we want to feel in our hearts and if possible to say, when our life's battles are finished, with the apostle, thank God that we have neither been afraid nor ashamed to declare the whole command of God, that means good news.

For the word gospel means "good news." The people want to hear good news, for every need of their soul and body as well. We are to tell them that God will heal all their diseases (Ps. 103:3). We are to tell them, "Saying, Himself took our infirmities and bear our sickness (Matt. 8:17. Do we tell them? When Jesus gave his disciples the commission to preach the Gospel he gave them a full commission as follows: "And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease." And he has never changed his commission. Will God help us to be obedient?

A FEW QUESTIONS.

The time is now approaching for the Convention to meet and I note a desire upon the part of Convention officials for a full and free discussion of things of importance. I refrain from any discussion, but desire to ask a few questions that I would be pleased for our editor or some one else to answer.

1. What will be the final outcome of our mission work if we continue to get money and do not get the men and women to carry the gospel to heathen lands? Will God forever be pleased with this program? Is He now?

2. How many missionaries have we sent out during the past ten years? Who are they and where are they?

3. In our college we have a large band of volunteers each year. What goes with this group of young men and women? If they are in earnest about their decisions, and we do not give them a chance, can we blame them for taking other work as a life's career?

4. Can we not, with all our money, our missionary interest, our missionary zeal, and our missionary effort, send two persons each year to teach and to preach to thousands who have never heard the gospel? If this challenge is not too big, let us do it. If it is too big, then our missionary program needs reconstruction and God is holding us responsible for such a task.

THE REBIRTH OF EUROPE—A NEW BOOK.

BY PRESIDENT MARTYN SUMMERBELL, PH. D.

To a group of eager students Emerson once said: "Young men, let not a day pass without at least one half-hour's study of history. All persons, who like Emerson recognize the educational value of history, will welcome Dr. Summerbell's latest publication, entitled "The Rebirth of Europe."

In the brief space of less than two hundred pages this new book gives a delightful, aeroplane view of nearly one thousand years of history, extending from the fall of Rome, through the Dark Ages, to the beginning of modern history. For most people the Dark Ages are especially dark and uninteresting. I once heard Edward Hale say that the reason the Dark Ages are dark is because we have not sufficient light to illuminate them, I think this statement is largely true, and for this reason I regard "The Rebirth of Europe" as a real, and much needed contribution of light and interest upon a dark and dull subject.

I am greatly pleased with this new book, Mechanically it is all that could be desired. The cover is neat and attractive; the binding is good; the workmanship clean; and the type is large and clear. The content of this volume, also is worthy of its author. The book is fact-worthy. It not only gives much history truth but vitalizes it—makes it live. The style is clear, forceful, informing, invigorating, thought-provoking, and will sustain the reputation won by Dr. Summerbell's other books.

This volume is not intended to be a text-book in history for the class-room, but it will serve as an excellent hand-book to go with a text and to be used as an introduction to the history of the period covered. For those who have completed their regular study of history this book will be a delightful means of rapid and pleasant review.

ECHOES FROM NEWPORT NEWS.

On February 18, 1923, at the Junior Christian Endeavor Rally of Newport News, our society won the banner for the third time in succession. The rally met at the second Presbyterian church of Newport News, and we had 48 active Juniors there besides the visitors and preparatory members.

On February 20th, we organized an Intermediate Society with eleven active and two honorary members. Mrs. T. G. Hyatt who has so faithfully served with the Juniors as their superintendent will assume the duties as superintendent of the Intermediate society.

Our Sunday school used the program by the Board of Religious Education in the month of January, and the Junior Christian Endeavor Society made a study of the pamphlet giving four periods to this course. This society has also recently started a course in missions.

Our church work as a whole seems to be moving slowly, but surely, and in time we are praying to realize a "Bigger and Better East End Christian Church." Four members were received Sunday, February 18th, making a total of nine since our New Year's resolutions were made.

A NICKEL FOR THE LORD.

Yesterday he wore a rose on the lapel of his coat, but when the plate was passed today he gave a nickel to the Lord. He had several bills in his pocket and Sunday change, perhaps a dollar's worth, but he hunted about and finding this poor nickel, he laid it on the plate to aid the church militant in its fight against the world, the flesh and the devil. His silk hat was beneath the seat, and his gloves and cane were beside it and the nickel was on the plate, a whole nickel.

On Saturday afternoon he met a friend and together they had some refreshments. The cash register stamped seventy-five cents on the slip the boy presented to him. Peeling off a bill he handed it to the lad and gave him a nickel tip when he brought back the change. A nickel for the Lord and a nickel for the waiter!

And the man had his shoes polished on Saturday afternoon and he handed out a dime without a murmur. He had a shave and paid twenty-five cents with equal alacrity. He took a box of candies home to his wife, and paid a dollar for them, and the box was tied with a dainty bit of ribbon. Yes, and he also gave a nickel to the Lord.

Who is this Lord?

Who is He? Why, the Being whom this man worships as Creator of the Universe, the One Who puts the stars in order, and by Whose immutable decree the heavens stand. Yes, he worships Him, and he also dropped a nickel in the plate to support the church militant.

And what is the church militant?

The church militant is the body that represents upon earth the triumphant church of the great God.

And the man knew that he was an atom in space, and he knew that the Almighty was without limitations, and knowing this he put his hand in his pocket and picked out the nickel, and gave it to the Lord.

And the Lord, being gracious and slow to anger and knowing our frame, did not slay the man for the meanness of his offering, but gives him this day his daily bread.

But the nickel was ashamed, if the man was not.

The nickel hid beneath a quarter that was given by a poor woman who washes for a living. —G. F. Raymond, in The Toronto Star.

A Most Unusual Moment.

Zion's Herald tells in the following language of an extraordinary movement: "A movement believed to be the first of its kind in history is now in progress in Nyack, N. Y. It is an effort for the revitalization of the church, and the unique thing about it is that it was started by non-churchgoers. A canvass was first made of 500 families who had not attended church in years. They were summoned to attend a mass meeting, the summoners being men who had never been known to have any connection with any church. This meeting led to the formation of a permanent committee of thirty persons, selected on the basis of standing in the community. Nearly half of its members have no church affiliations and in the remainder are more or less passibe communicants of virtually every denomination in town. The committee includes some of the largest labor employers in the country, the leaders of the most important labor unions, the heads of the two banks, three of the best-known physicians, and the editors of the two local papers. The idea of this effort originated with Supreme Court Justice Arthur S. Tompkins as the only possible solution of the problems afflicting the community. Its working out will be watched with interest." There must be a master mind and heart back of this. Our guess is that the master mind is a minister of the gospel; but whether that be true or not, these leaders in labor circles, in industry, in finance, from professional life are all showing their good sense in the enthusiasm they are putting into the movement. We hope that other communities will "catch" it and that a regular epidemic will sweep the country.—Christian Advocate.

We see one defect in the movement. It seems that the movement is of man. If that is so, then it is doomed. It is possible that the Lord may choose some one who is not a Christian at all to lead, and for the reason that no Christian would undertake it, and the Master may have put a man of the world in the lead. In that event something will come of it, but if it is of man purely then you need not expect any great results to come of it for good. We wish great things may come to pass at Nyack as a result of this movement let us wait patiently and see what will come to pass as to this matter.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is expecting everybody to do his duty in trying to increase the subscription list. Every new subscription counts one more.

HERE IS YOUR CHANCE.

It is often said that one half of the world does not know how the other half lives, and we believe it is so. That is true here in the United States, where we think we know each other and where we are believed to be able to help the needy—that is the well to do can well provide for the men and women and children who are so poor that they cannot take care of themselves in cold weather. Not long ago the United States Government sent out a number of investigators to ascertain just what is the true conditions of the mountain people in Kentucky, and what they found is enough to make us all feel ashamed of ourselves, even though we are not very rich, for sitting here all these days with a plenty of this world's goods about us to meet our actual needs, at least, and yet we have allowed our poor neighbors in the mountain regions to suffer winter in and winter out, year after year, and yet we have done practically nothing for them in their extreme needs. These investigators went out and got the facts and come back and made their report, and yet we are allowing these people to suffer while we are in our comfortable homes, with at least enough to eat and enough to wear and with sufficient fuel to keep us warm, but what are the facts as to these mountain people? The investigators made the following report when they came back as to what they found:

Only sixteen per cent of the children belonged to families which were clearly able to provide the modest requirements of an adequate living.

A large number of families lived in board sheds, small shanties, or log cabins in bad repair, where the cold in winter made habits of cleanliness almost out of the question.

Only about one fourth of the children were found to have clothing which could furnish adequate protection from the weather.

Corn bread and sorghum, dried beans, fat it "middlings," and—the one redeeming feature—milk formed for a large part of the year the entire diet of the children.

They got fresh vegetables and fruit only for a short period in the summer and fall. They got almost no fresh lean meat at all.

Four fifths of them did not own a toothbrush; 91 out of 104 of those 6 to 11 years of age had decayed teeth.

Fifty per cent had enlarged or diseased tonsils, and many had adenoids.

And did you for one moment believe that such conditions were existing now in the adjoining State of Kentucky? Would you believe it that in your own State such conditions exist? And would you believe it that you have never done one thing to help those people. Now and then there may be one who has given a bit of help for these needy and worthy people, but the great body of our well to do people have never given a penny to help these people.

In Carroll County, Va., the Christian Church has a small mission and a big field in which to work, yet we can hardly get enough of our people interested in this work to keep it alive and in a good healthy working condition. If we can keep the little field about Fancy Gap half way supplied and doing fairly well, we seem to think that we have done wonders, and so we have but not half the wonders we would have done had we had the help of all those among us who are able.

The call to the mountain work is a very loud call and it is very urgent. Men and women and children are in great need—needs for the body, to say nothing of the soul, which is by far the greater and more urgent need. These men and women and children have a claim upon us—they are our brothers and in need. Shall we help them, or shall we go having a plenty for ourselves and caring nothing for them.

Go back and read over again the report of these men who investigated the facts as to the mountain people and their conditions, and make up your minds that they shall have your help the first opportunity, and if no opportunity comes soon, then go and make an opportunity, and give them the advantage of your help, for they sorely need it. If you wish to give this needy people assistance, then address Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Mission Secretary, Burlington, N. C., and he will see that your money is properly applied. we are publishing this appeal without his knowledge, just because that report from men who had been on the fiild showed us the absolute need of that people. Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, Fancy Gap, Va., is the missionary in charge of the work and now on the field. If you will ask him inclosing a stamp for answer, we believe you will get the truth about the conditions and needs of the mountain people who are under our care, and of course, we ought to look after them.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF YOUR CHANCE?

We mean if you are one of the persons who are usually so careless and indifferent to the interests of your own high spiritual culture, what do you think of your chance of life everlasting? What can we hope for when our interest centers in almost everything except that which is vital to the Christian life? Take the matter of the books we read, and there are few things which tell the tale on people, who read, more surely and plainly than the class of books we have in our library. Very few people keep books which indicate a love for truth and righteousness. Go into the home of your neighbor, who is a member of the church, and who has an interesting family of boys and girls, and just look around to see what books you find in his home. You will find the greater portion of the books there are books of almost, or no, value to the Christian life. Often you will not find even a Bible, unless it may be a great big family Bible, so heavy that the young folks do not attempt to handle it for reading, neither do the father and mother, unless they chance to desire to know the date on which one of their children was born—then they may look for that, but you will not very often see them reading the Bible for the sake of religious growth and spiritual culture. Now, do you think a home under such environment can be a truly Christian home? Then how many homes in the country can you find where father and mother keep a careful watch over what their children are reading? How many fathers and mothers do you know in all of your acquaintance who are careful to know what kind of books their children are reading? We fear you do not know of two families in all of your acquaintance, so rare are fathers and mothers who look after the reading of their children to see that only good and wholesome reading is engaging their thought and time.

You may think that we are unneccessarily exercised over this matter, but if so, it is because you do not know the danger to which our young people are exposed. Of course, young people will read—they must read, but who knows what they are reading? Father does not know—mother does not know— and the possibility is that the dear children are keeping their minds full of poisonous thoughts, gained from the reading of such books as not even people of the world should read, and who is to blame? Why father and mother, or guardian—they are simply engaged in other matters and take no interest at all in what the young people in their home are reading, and the result is their minds, in the plastic period of life, are kept full of ideas in which are, to say the least, hurtful to the Christian life, and of course, these boys and girls are led away from truth and righteousness and by their reading they are induced to turn away from the hope that is in Christ. Fathers and mothers cannot be too careful in supplying reading matter for their boys and girls to see that they have the best, not the most costly, but the best of Christian reading matter. If you do not know what is best for them, call on your pastor, or some well informed Christian, and they will be glad to help make a good selection. Just here you need to be very careful, and for the reason that there are a great many books under some religious title that is not fit for your children to read at all. You cannot be too careful as to what reading matter goes into the hands of your children.

To illustrate what we mean we give you herewith the report from the New York Public Library where children, at least young people, can go and get any book they wish and read it. As you will notice not one in a hundred of the young people and others, going there for their reading matter, even take from the library a religious book—about one in one hundred even take a religious book out of the public library. You can see what this means. Not one in fifty even take a religious book out of the library. It is easy to form some idea of what this means in a community where during the year more than nine millions of books are distributed for general reading. If we cannot do something to check this awful outflow of poison among the people, what can we hope to do for the cause of Christ? Certainly every father and mother ought to watch with double care what their children may be reading as the days come and go.

We herewith submit the annual report of the New York Public Library that our readers may see for themselves what the people are reading:

We have recently come into possession of the statistics as to the number of books of fiction drawn from the New York Public Library for a recent year, as well as the books on all other subjects, and we herewith reproduce them for the benefit of our readers:

Total number of books drawn and taken home	9,792,648
Total number of fiction	5,990,002
Total number of religious	106,019

Eight other subjects or titles to books drawn are given, all of which are secular, and all of them but one were drawn in larger number than the religious books, that one being philosophy.

Other statistics gleaned from the same authoritative source disclose the facts that 62 per cent of the reading matter in the 61 general magazines on the market is fiction, and that 70 per cent of the reading public buys fiction magazines.

One recent book of fiction had at the time of the gathering of these statistics galloped through 150 editions and is still going.

Fifty-nine novels or books of fiction to every religious book taken home to read. Is it any wonder that the people know nothing of God?

Besides all this, the religious books include such heresies as Christian Science, Pastor Russell's collections and all the modern higher criticism and so-called liberalism, or rehash of ancient fallacies so that the percentage of genuinely religious books is evidently small.

It will further be found that the books of fiction that are the most salacious in the character of their contents, and they are all largely of that character, will be the ones that have shown the most continuous usage, and the pages upon which the most suggestive scenes of events are described will show the most thumb marks.

Further, the large majority of the persons who draw these books of fiction from the libraries are young people, whose plastic minds need restraint instead of carnal inflammation. The book is carried home and its contents, dripping with lust, is greedily devoured within the secret walls of the bourdoir or other place of privacy. The result are soul-blighting and damning. Evil tendencies are awakened and habits formed, and the bondage is so strong, and the moral and mental results so deteriorating, that when the sublime truths of inspiration are preached to the victims of fiction reading, his mind is not able to receive them, and he or she goes on blindly, and light-headedly to death and a sinner's eternity.

The only remedy for this appalling situation lies in the old Gospel of Jesus Christ, through which and by which the appetite for fiction and all other lies is taken away, and an appetite for things heavenly is divinely introduced in its place.

THE DIVORCE QUESTION.

The American people need, and they badly need, to face the issue of the divorce question. If we do not meet it and handle it properly soon, it will handle the people to the dismay and ruin of our country. The divorce question must be controlled, or it will destroy, not merely the Government of the United States, but it will destroy our homes and the visible church, till we shall be among the most helpless people of civilization. The present evil of divorce is striking steady and powerful blows at the American home. If the homes of our people are destroyed, there will be nothing else left, for without the home neither the church or the State can stand in its visible form, and with the home gone, with the church gone and with State gone, what could we have but anarchy and ruin? It is indeed high time for our people to awake out of their sleep and get busy to stop this evil and so put an end to its awful work. Its work is nothing less than awful at this time.

Little by little, or we might just as well say, much by much, the people of the United States seem to be blindly following the divorce craze to the pit of destruction, and if we do not arise in the might God has given and put a stop to this evil, it will arise in its might and put an end to this great country. It may be that some will doubt and say, "How can it put an end to this great country, now perhaps the richest in the world?" Let us understand that riches will be no barrier to the destruction which the divorce evil will bring upon us, for when it destroys the home, the church and the State, with it all, it will have destroyed our riches, too. There can be no question that the divorce destroys the home. Then it is clear, if we have no home, we can have no church, and we can have no State, and with these three foundation stones of civilization gone, what can we hope for? Nothing but anarchy and ruin, and that is what we are coming to just as fast as divorce can bring us there. There is no question about it, unless the divorce evil is speedily checked, we must, as a country, go down in defeat. We speak not as an alarmist, but as a citizen who has the welfare of our country and the cause of Christ at heart. We must act and act soon, or it will be too late to save our great country from the awful blight of the divorce evil. Little by little the forces of evil are working their way to a state and a condition when we shall have no home, no church and no State—free-love will take the place of all of these and wreck our civilization. We cannot afford this and we dare not permit it if our utmost efforts will prevent it.

Even now there is a bill before the legislature of North Carolina, giving a man or a woman a right to divorce a companion who has lost the mind. A shame for any commonwealth to promulgate such a law as that. Let us have none of it. Inch by inch certain influences are seeking to take from us our homes, our churches and our State. It must not be permitted. As indicating the rapidity with which we are approaching a State of free-love, let us just call to mind this fact: Last year in a single city there were in round numbers 39,000 marriage licenses granted and 13,000 divorces applied for—about one third as many divorces applied for as marriage licenses were issued. That shows something of the alarming evil that is now fastening itself upon the body politic in the United States.

The Presbyterian of The South puts the matter in this light:

Marriage and divorce are subjects that are attracting a great deal of attention in this country. Marriage is the foundation of the family, as the family is of the community, the State and the Church. Leaving out of account their relation to God, there is no more important step ever taken by men and women than their marriage. This being the case, it should only be entered into with the most careful thought and knowledge of what it means. To this end those who enter into this state ought to be of such intelligence that they may have sufficient knowledge to know what they are doing, and sufficient time should be taken to consider the matter carefully. Hasty and unconsidered marriages are the cause of more divorces than anything else. When we hear that there are many girls in this country married at twelve years of age and many boys at fourteen, that there are thousands of girls who marry each year at fifteen, and of boys who marry at sixteen, it is easy to see that such children can know little of the meaning of marriage. But a greater source of evil is the marriage of those who have known each other for only a short time and who have really not become acquainted with each other's characters and dispositions. Oftentimes physical desires awakened, as Judge O. B. Ratcliff of Indiana says, by "familiarity and the fondling of one sex by the other through dances, play parties and auto rides (which) are evils that spell disaster," bring on the desire for marriage, where there is no real love, which should be the basis of every marriage. Such marriages are very apt to lead to the divorce court. These evils can be restrained to some extent by the modification of the laws, so as to prevent immature children from being married, by requiring pubilc notice of intended marriage to be given some time before it can be consummated, making it impossible for a couple to leave one State to be married in another, so as to evade the law of their own State, by punishing officials who issue licenses without seeing that the requirements of the law are met. But the only thing that will remedy fully the evil of unconsidered marriages is for parents to teach their children what marriage really means.

GETTING TOGETHER WISELY.

Oh, yes, we are getting better, so they say! Witness the following from The Michigan Christian Advocate, as proving that we are trying to get better, and that much is encouraging to say the least of it. Let us hope that this movement may bring forth some real good to our common country: M. S. Rice in The Advocate says that "there has been started across this country of ours a movement in which it is hoped the people who appreciate the full value of the meaning of law and the respect for law which is the fundamental principle of government shall band themselves together in sacred pledges to maintain and observe the law, all the law of the land." This is the extent of our information about the "American Bond." That there is need for such a banding together no one will deny. There seems to be so many in our country today who are a law unto themselves, people who propose deciding what laws they shall keep and what laws they shall not keep. In a country where the laws are made by the representatives of the people and with their sanction, as is the case in this country, there is no place for people who imagine they are justified in deciding what laws they shall observe and what laws they shall break. A crisis has been reached. lawbreakers are in every community. Neither property nor life is safe. It is not enough to punish the violators of law, though that should be done much more effectively than it is being done today. Moral fiber, a sense of national loyalty, must be developed in the minds and hearts of all. If the "American Bond" can help to do this, we are for it. At any rate, we shall be on the lookout for more information about this movement.

We think it is time when men and women come to this country to make a home, but are unwilling to support and abide by the laws we have here, they should be shone the way to their original homes, for we need no population here which is not willing to support and abide by the laws under which the people of the United States are living. If we are not mistaken there was a time less then fifty years ago when no man dared to say openly anything against the Constitution of the United States. He was afraid that the authorities would arrest him and punish him for such disloyalty. Now, however, it is a common thing to hear of men declaring not merely against our laws, but also against the Constitution and yet they are not molested. We should like to know why we allow men to decry our Constitution in our very midst and yet we say nothing, at least we do nothing against such unfaithfulness against our common citizenship. If this is allowed to go on unrebuked, in less than 30 years we shall have anarchy in some shape in our very midst. We had better begin to look after our own now—it is easier now than it will be later.

THE RADIO PREDECESSOR.

Broadcast wireless as a news service is merely a development of a plan inaugurated many years ago, in 1893, in Budapest by the establishment of the Telefor Hermode of Telephonic Newsteller, which soon counted its subscribers by thousands, at the rate of a penny a day. News was collected in the ordinary way, printed by lithography on long strips of paper and telephoned by specially trained "stenters." It provided also for advertising. For one florin the stenters would reel off advertisements for twelve seconds, carefully sandwiching them between interesting items of news so that the subscriber would not disconnect for fear of missing something he really wanted to hear.—Montreal Gazette.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On the train the other day Dr. J. O. Atkinson and I were talking with brother Tom Crocker, a knight of the gripsack, and during that conversation, Brother Crocker told us about saying something to a man who did not like what he said. "Then," said Brother Crocker, "I told him I say what I have to say to men, not about you." Then I said to him: "You have expressed wise philosophy in that phrase, "to men" and not "about men." It was much in little. It was the gospel in common sense. It was the philosophy of peace and good will. It was the antidote for gossip; the corrective of misunderstanding; the balm for personal wounds; and the test of courage. It is easy to talk about folks: it is more difficult to talk to folks.

Human society is a network of individuals, and their relation determines the state of society. There will be differences in capacity, in opinions, in possessions, in station. There is no remedy for such differences; but the tongue does incalculable and irreparable damage to human society by talking about folks without proof of what is said. "The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity. Every kind of beasts hath been tamed; but the tongue can no man tame. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not to be." —James 3:5-10. Nothing is so bitter as bitter words, and nothing is so sweet as sweet words. Many lives have been ruined by words spoken by careless or evil tongues. Hatreds have been generated, friends have been separated, character has been damaged, and families crushed by loose talk.

Few people think of the Court House as a pious place, and it may not be; but it presents the ideal for what folks say of one another. The oath taken by a witness is fine: "You solemnly swear that the evidence you give in this case, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." That is ideal for human speech; and if practiced in the social world, would correct many of the evils that curse mankind. It would reduce conversation in volume, elevate its importance, Christianize intercourse, and put the stamp of truth on what we hear. The power of words is almost omnipotent. God "spake and it was done." The serpent said to Eve: "Ye shall not surely die." That settled it. She partook and death followed. The serpent was talking to Eve about God. "God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." He did not dare say that to God. We damage people more by what we say about them than by what we do to them. The average person will say much more about folks than to folks. Any coward can talk about folks in a lobby, or a train, by the fireside, on the streets; but few are brave enough to face people and say to them what they say about them. Some people will throw nails in the road that would not puncture a tire; some people will say they know where you can get liquor that would not report a violator of law. We need fearless men and women who love the truth and speak what they know, and know what they speak.

ELON LETTER.

The Building Committee appointed by the Board of Trustees on January 24th met in Burlington on Tuesday February 20th, and after careful consideration of proposals chose the Joe W. Stout and Co., Inc., Sanford, N. C., as contractors for the Administration Building. They were chosen on an estimated cost plus a fee basis. When the plans and specifications are all in, the Building Committee acting with the architect and other competent estimators will estimate what the building ought to cost including materials and labor, but not supervision. The contractors will do the same. In the event of disagreement, a third competent contractor will settle the matter. On this estimated cost the fee of the Joe W. Stout and Co., will be computed. The contractors are to furnish all machinery and equipment for the construction of the building and to supervise the same, buying the material subject to the approval of the college and on its account.

The Building Committee took this action only after the most careful deliberation and investigation. Several vital considerations induced them so to decide. In the first place we are under compulsion to have the Administration Building ready for the opening of the fall term in September. It will be at least thirty days yet before the blue prints and specifications can be completed. It would take thirty days after that additional to advertize for bids. By this plan we therefore save sixty days. The foundation of the building will be completed under the arrangement that has been made by the time work could have started under any other plan.

Meanwhile building materials that figure largely in fire-proof construction work are likely to advance and in fact are advancing. The contractor has already closed on cement and brick for the building and within a few days can do the same for stone, lime, sand, roofing material and steel as well as heating, lighting, and plumbing materials. So excellent an authority as Roger W. Babson on the day we entered in the contract advised—"We advocate accumulating building material stocks, such as cement, lime, brick, lumber, lath, nails, glass, and structural shapes into the third quarter of this year. Clients not protected should enter the market." Our contract we figure will not only save us time: it will equally save us money and the money saved will be for the college and not for the contractors. Their fee is fixed and any saving will inure to the college's advantage.

The third consideration that influenced the committee is the high character of the firm with which they were dealing. Mr. Joe W. Stout, the head man in the Joe W. Stout and Co., Inc., is a man universally trusted in building circles in this State. He knows his business and has an unsullied record for honesty, integrity, and dispatch. He has never had a suit with any person or firm for whom he has worked and his business annually amounts to several million dollars. He specializes in fire-proof construction and has an organization of experts second to none in North Carolina.

His testimonials from big building projects which he has erected on an estimated cost plus fee basis were overwhelming. I incorporate here a few of them in excerpted form. The Farmers Commercial Bank of Benson wrote—"The Joe W. Stout and Co., Inc., have recently completed for us a bank building which is considered one of the best in this section of the State. These people came to us very highly recommended. In fact, we dismissed from consideration all other contractors but them. Our confidence was not misplaced and we are glad to testify to their high character, morally and financially." They built this bank on a cost plus fee basis.

The Hotel Cherry, Wilson, N. C., a five hundred thousand dollar building, says "After much consideration we selected the Joe W. Stout and Co. Inc., as our contractors, and employed them on a cost plus fee basis. They handled our project in a very efficient and satisfactory manner."

The trustees of the Lenoir Graded School telegraphed that "We are perfectly satified with fire-proof school building erected by Joe W. Stout and Co."

The Wayne National Bank also telegraphed—"We are now erecting a ten story steel and concrete bank building. Joe W. Stout and Co. Inc., Sanford, N. C., are doing the work for us on a cost plus a fee plan. We have found this plan and their service very good. They are able to buy materials and secure labor at good prices. They have a good organization and your building program will be safe in their hands."

Finally, it did not militate against Mr. Stout that he and his firm are loyal members of the Christian Church. The contract was not awarded them on that basis, but the fact that they are our members did not lessen their chances of being the winners in the competition. They have a vital spiritual interest therefore in this project as well as a financial one.

The Building Committee feels that it has acted wisely in this instance and that the whole church will approve its decision. Unless we are sadly mistaken the Joe W. Stout and Co. Inc., are going to do for their college the finest piece of structure work ever done for it. They can do it. It is their cause as well as ours. And they will do it.

BRO. WHITE AGAIN HEARS FROM BROTHER ABE.

Dear Brother White:

I was glad you thought of me on your journey, and especially when the boys pulled in the car for repairs, how hard a job you had in getting me in running condition for the King's Highway. But I certainly appreciate every effort you put forth in my behalf, getting everything in working condition even the horn, it sure got started in good shape and I do not know how to turn it off, so I am just going to let it blow as hard as I can for Christ in this world and he will never hear the end of what He has done for me through all eternity.

That must have been a wonderful sermon you preached at the North Carolina Conference. One thing it was short, and emphasized only two points, which is enough for one sermon and all that any one like me can soak in at one time. The Bible is a big subject within itself. To be a reader of it is a very commendable thing but to be a doer of what it contains is much better. The fault I find with most preachers is, that they preach too much about the Bible and not enough of the Bible. No one should stop short of a College Education, as a part of his equipment to preach the Gospel, but you can not save the world, by preaching philosophy, science, history, language and political economy—the Bible is the prime factor in the regeneration of this old world and the preacher must know it, so he can inspire his people to read it and obey its teachings. I was glad you made that speech about our church papers at that conference, for a lot of casionally that they boost THE CHRISTIAN SUN, those preachers certainly need it. It is only oc- and never say a word about The Herald of Gospel Liberty, which is the leading paper of the Christian Church, many are only half subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and hardly enough to mention, take The Herald of Gospel Liberty at all. I think their sermons would be more acceptable and efficient and their spiritual status more normal if they read both papers and said more to their congregations about them.

That was a great sermon, and it ought to have been great, for you made a great preparation. I heard you tell that Republican and bee story over about forty times and yet I did not loose interest in them, the application of them caused occasionally that they boost THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and that last sermon I think will result in me becoming a whole subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and I am thinking a right smart here lately of taking The Herald of Gospel Liberty. Yes, if we want to get rid of Republicans in the South we have got to quit raising them, but after all they are not a bad sort of folk to have around, they help to keep us Democrats straight. The normal way to get rid of drunkards is to quit raising them; the normal way to get rid of prohibition outlaws, liars, thieves and debauchees is to quit raising them.

The normal way to have queens in the home, community, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, church, benevolences, in the choir, officers of church, ministry in missionary work and college morale is to raise them. Commence feeding them Royal Food as soon as they are born and continue to do so till we wrap their shoulders about them and they leave us for a fairer climb. There was a time when I was a grub and finally grew up to be a scrub, because I was not fed on Royal Food. I never will get away from the thought that I might have been a queen bee had the church fed me on Royal Food at the right time, in place of that I was neglected and grew up to be nothing but an old drone. Now I like honesty as well as anybody but I sure have been stung many times in getting a little. I remember after a sermon the pastor announced, that all the board should remain, I staid with a few others, then one brother came to me and asked what I wanted, I said you told all the bored to remain. Now if anybody was any more bored than I was I would like to see the color of his hair.

Your brother,
SIMON ABE.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

It rained and then it rained some more and though the work which was done in my recent trip to Alabama was hindered, if not almost stopped, by the showers and the mud, yet I am positive that it takes far more than a rain to dampen the enthusiasm of the Christians of Alabama and Gerorgia for this new child of their heart. I am firmly convinced that any smallness of which we as a church in the past have been guilty of, has been because we failed to attempt large things for the cause of Christ. Let no one say that those two conferences can't do it. He needs to go and see their faith and soon he will hear of their works.

It was a privilege to go and meet the men of God who are doing the work, and though I am somewhat convinced that I didn't earn my salt, yet they did me a good turn by letting me see their enthusiasm for God. Hoping and praying for these past twenty years, that they might some day have a college, their dreams are now coming true. And they can do the work of preparation better than anyone else. They are anxious about it and the vision of the Elders, Carters, Hunt, Dollars and all the rest of the saints, will soon become the vision of the people.

Somebody said there is no place in Dixie where there are so many children to the square inch, and I should like to correct it, by adding one word "fine" children. And they are asking for an opportunity. They are holding out their lives to us and asking for a chance. And I saw also those small churches asking the same question. Give us a chance?

If we dream of any foreign people and their call to us, let us listen closely to the call of these, so nearby. They can not go forward unless we give them training and I know of no investment in the Christian Church which holds so much return to the investor as the work of Christian Education in these conferences. It is a new world that we are living in and if our church refuses to recognize that fact it must pay a very high price for its ignorance. We have waited enough in the past. We have stood for our noble principles valiantly enough and long enough. Its high time that we did some moving, working, toiling and sacrificing! If we have been small it has been, because we have consented and been content. If we would accept our share of the Kingdom of God we will need to try a BIG TASK.

The course of land is that all too many young people count themselves favored if they have an easy job and big pay. When every man ought to seek the task so big that he must strain every effort and burst every brain cell to measure up to it. The curse of our church has been churches, ministers, and laymen that have been content with the easiest work and least effort. I pray God that Georgia and Alabama shall accept the burden of this task and nothing in heaven and earth can stop the rapid growth of those conferences. They will grow under sacrifice. Therefore for their own sake, I rejoice that they have accepted the task. I rejoice in the vision and the labor and the persistency of the men there. They have set their heart to this thing and it must be done. A new solidarity has come and the churches are breathing and living in the atmosphere of Bethlehem College. "A College for Christian Culture." No nobler motto was ever penned for a Christian institution.

And they do not know what a noble task they have accepted and what a continual opportunity is placed before them. These churches have moved out with their pastors into new heights. They have not chosen a thing that can be settled with one effort but a growing responsibility with the years. It will demand greater and greater love, larger and larger vision, deeper and deeper service. And this means growth.

I am very happy to have had the privilege of being in Wadley and with the brethren and in their homes. I happened to say "I am getting only what I can eat for this trip's work" and Brother Carter remarked "And I observe you are getting well repaid." True enough, I did consume a plenty, but they thrust it upon me and I could not resist.

RALEIGH CHURCH SOON TO BE ERECTED.

Plans are now complete and it is expected to start work on the new Christian Church for Raleigh, N. C., within a few months. Arrangements have been made for the disposition of the old church auditorium and the work of tearing down and hauling away will be started in a few weeks.

The architects are Nelson and Cooper, of Raleigh, and the new building as designed will cover the entire lot at this location, where the old building formerly covered only a portion of the available space. It is intended to make the structure modern in every particular, and the cost is estimated at from $75,000 to $100,000.

The old structure has been inadequate for years, but it was only recently determined to build as quickly as possible and erect a church, in keeping with the street on which it is located and one that will do credit to the City of Raleigh.

The church auditorium as planned will seat about 650 people, and when both church and Sunday school auditorium are thrown together, the total seating capacity will be approximately 1,000. The second story above the Sunday school auditorium will be given over to class rooms for the Sunday school, while the balcony of the church auditorium will be so divided into sections that it may also be used for Sunday school classes.

The exterior of the church is to be finished in stone according to the specifications. It is hoped to use a native Wake County stone.

It is also expected to have the basement so constructed that it may be used for a community meeting place, making the church a social as well as religious center.

The new pastor of this church, Dr. W. D. Parry, comes here with wide experience in church building. He has been pastor of both big and little churches, but in no case has one of the little churches remained small. Dr. Parry gave his time during the war to Y. M. C. A. work, since then having been on the lecture platform until the beginning of his work here January 1st, of this year. Under his vigorous administration, all members of the church are confident the work will go forward rapidly.

The church building committee is composed of L. L. Vaughan, Chairman, C. H. Stephenson, W. C. Adkins, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, P. T. Hines, and the pastor as an ex-officio member. Work has just begun in raising the necessary funds and will now be carried on without intermission until the necessary amount has been subscribed and paid.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS AT BETHLEHEM—LEAVES FROM A DIARY.

Leaf IV

Room 600 Bethlehem Hotel,
Bethlehem, Pa., January, 12, 1923.

Attending a great Conference is thrilling but exhausting. Too many thrills try one's nerves and consume one's energies. I am beginning this fourth and final day of the feast rather the worse for wear. One feature of this Conference that differs from our Christian Conference is that no one seems to leave till the last. We are all here who were here the first day—and then some.

The opening prayer was for a new sense of brotherhood—a new and vital sense of oneness in Christ. The opening declaration was that there is a divine dissatisfaction at the methods in carrying the priceless message of the Gospel to the world.

Dr. Robbins who first addressed the Conference this A. M. said we must do away with all racial and national sense of superiority and inferiority. We Americans can't win the orientals to Christ as long as we act as if we were superior in race to the yellow race, or the brown race or the black race. He thanked God for seven years in the Philippine Islands for what those black people there had contributed to him. We must, as did Paul, feel ourselves debtor to Jew and Gentile, Greek and Barbarian, bond and free. Only those are superior who render superior service. We are to go out not to work for, but with other men; not as leader except as servants and comrades.

Dr. White of the White Bible School New York said it was not what a teacher gave a student that did him good, but what we can get the student to do for himself. And this is true of building the Kingdom in heathen lands. What we get them to do for themselves is what counts. Dr. White says there is just one way to reach and save the heathen and that is to interpret to them the message of the Bible and the life of Jesus Christ. If we learn to love as others love we will think as others think. The international mind does not eliminate the national mind; but it develops the capacity to think from the angle of the other nations and the other fellow. If the missionary is to win men and women to Christ he must himself have the experience in Christ, the language of Christ in his own heart.

A Syrian spoke a full word when he arose and said: "Yes, America is the greatest nation on earth; but even that does not say that Americans have the best of everything. You can even in your greatness learn something yet even from those you consider the least." And Dr. Wolfe spoke something worth while when he said: "Ours is the duty of interpreting Christ to the world. We can interpret west to east and east to west if we depend on Christ. God is still in His Church. Let's depend somewhat on the omnipotent arm of Him who founded His Church. We must trust Him to solve for us many of the problems we are raising for ourselves. A noted Indian was recently asked how Christianity could be made effectual in India. The reply was "Give India your Christianity and don't dilute it." We condemn Indian's idolatry and that is right. But we can learn much from India's devotion to the sacred. Some Indians going up to worship will not walk or ride, but roll fifteen or twenty miles, taking several days for the performance. They consider themselves unworthy to approach their sacred place of worship walking or riding. They humble themselves that in spirit they may be exalted.

One speaker declared a parable also when he said with emphasis and feeling "What we need to win the world with is not a program, but a Person, even Jesus Christ. We are to challenge the heathen not to put on some social program, but to put on Christ Jesus as their Lord and Saviour.

One speaker told of a missionary—Dr. Goucher—who crossed the Atlantic Ocean twenty-five times, gave $2,000,000 of his own money to missions besides giving himself, and founded, or was at the founding and beginning of fifteen colleges and universities at home and abroad. This man had a vision of world wide service through the Christian College and dedicated his life to that vision.

In the memorial services to fallen Mission Secretaries Dr. W. H. Denison of our company paid a fitting and glowing tribute to our dearly beloved and late lamented Dr. J. G. Bishop.

Dr. C. H. Patton of the American Board of Missions said that the persecution of Christians in the Near East was far away the worst in all history. The persecutions under Nero and all others of former times, however awful they had seemed, were not to be compared with what has taken place and is taking place in our day. The Roman Emperors with all their devices of torture and thirst for the blood of Christians were tame beside the butchery and wholesale slaughter by the Turks in our day. And all this has happened, and is now happening, with all the great Christian nations looking on, but doing nothing officially to prevent or stop it. Dr. Robert E. Speer said there were 10,000 orphan children in orphanages of Bethlehem, Judea, and 7,000 in Damascus. These were all orphaned by the bloody hand of the Turk because their parents were accused of being Christians. He said that Persia with its eight to ten millions of people is pleading for protection and help in a language the pathos of which cannot be exaggerated. It is impossible for those who have not recently been in the Near East to begin to grasp the horrible conditions that obtain there. The Armenian-Turkish tragedy is the greatest ever occurring in human history. The Turks are determined that the Christian missionary shall get out, and that Mohammed alone shall have sway, even at the point of the bayonet. In Constantinople today conversion to Christianity means death. He who in the dominion of the Turk professes Christ in that act courts death and usually finds it.

A Mrs. Timberlake just from Constantinople said she had the care of 6,000 orphan children and 3,000 widows—all orphaned and widowed by the bloody hand of the Turk.

In a Missionary Conference one hears world problems discussed. In coming here I stopped at Washington, D. C., and went into the Senate Chamber a while. I have in my mind compared the Personnel of this Conference with that of our most august legislative assembly. The men in this Conference will equal and for the most part surpass in culture, scholarship, dignity and worth the members of the U. S. Senate. And here too one hears world problems discussed, and how a world may be uplifted and saved. In the Senate they are discussing how some party measure may be carried. And these Missionary Assemblies are to be the saving power of this earth. For these put Christ above party, and salvation of mankind above carrying a political election.

Minton and Denison are now—at 9 P. M. flying toward Dayton, Fletcher has departed for his home in Canada where they do not have strawberries till August, and I shall soon be speeding Southward at forty miles an hour happier because of this fellowship and richer for this Conference. J. O. Atkinson.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS AND NEEDS. NEAR EAST RELIEF.

What the Near East Relief has really accomplished will be of interest to Sunday schools and churches which have sent contributions to this cause. The February issue of The New Near East gives much information which shows that a really constructive work is being done, and that the need is still great.

Among the accomplishments to date are the following:

"The Near East Relief maintains 124 orphanages, already over-crowded with 64,107 children. More than 50,000 others in poverty-stricken homes and refugee camps are being cared for with the bare necessities of life. These wards of America therefore total 115,000 children now in safety zones. The Greco-Turkish disaster, which has already created a new refugee population one of 1,250,000 and threatens to make destitute another 1,250,000 makes imminet another tragic, unprecedented orphan problem. The Near East Relief equips and staffs 54 relief stations, 44 hospitals, treating monthly 148,728 clinic patients, 16 homes for women rescued from Moslem harems. The Near East Relief employs an average staff of 300 Americans, several of whom are volunteer workers. The American personnel organizes and administers the general orphanage work and heads up the various educational, industrial and medical departments, creating a system which gives employment to 100,000 native workers. At a minimum of expenditure, an organization has been developed that aims to restore and conserve the health of the children, to give them elemental education, and train them in self-supporting industrial native to their environment. The total value of Near East Relief's operations to date approximate $73,000,000.

This only briefly states the work of the Near East Relief. Its real accomplishments cannot be expressed in mere words. The efforts of the hundreds of physicians and nurses teachers and scientists who have gone to administer relief have saved many lives, Secretaries, engineers, agriculturaltists, orphanage workers and others have been sent to relieve the desperate conditions. Much has been done, but the present problem is very great. They face 1,250,000 refugees now homeless and without adequate provisions for food and shelter for the coming winter. 1,250,000 refugees are threatened in Anatolia and Constantinople and even now in flight from religions which may witness a greater disaster than Smyrna. 2,500,000 are now homeless or threatened with exile. They are figures beyond our comprehension, but the workers there who must face daily the call from boys and girls, and see them dying for lack of the most common food to keep their bodies alive, realize very clearly what it means. These people, who gave up home and land, rather than to give up their religion, merit our thought and prayers and gifts. No amount is too small to be helpful. Seven cents pays for three pounds of grits and that pays a refugee for a day's work on the streets of Alexandropol.

Eighteen cents was the food cost of rations for each one of 10,585 people in Erivan for a week. Twenty cents gives an orphan food and shelter for a day. Six dollars pays the salary of a native teacher for a month. Six dollars buys a barrel of flour that will make 300 loaves of bread, food for 300 days. No gift is too small. Every gift means a life saved. "Be big or little, something or nothing, so that we serve the best interests of humanity," is the spirit back of all the work done in the Near East.

The children in the orphanages in Nazareth and Bethlehem are boys and girls, just like the boys and girls in our Orphanage. When Dr. Isaac Yonan was speaking to 1,800 of them recently, he said: "Little men and women, when I get back to America, what shall I tell the American people to send you? They have sent you clothes and food and are probably prepared to go on sending these until you are able to provide them for yourselves. Is there anything else for me to tell them that you especially want." "Tell them to send us tools and books!" was the burden of the shouted message. They are boys and girls, eager not only to live, but to prepare to build up their country again, to be citizens of a land that will not have to call for bread. Whether they will be able to realize their hopes or not, depends largely upon how Christian lands and people help them in their hour of need. Dr. Henry Van Dyke says: "These are exiles of Christ in the Near East, driven forth by the Turk, to wander and perish. You can hear them crying if your heart is tuned to the keys of humanity. It is the new Children's Crusade, to conquer by carrying the cross into banishment for the name of Christ. Shall they be kept? Let our country speak and act with all her might to make peace on earth—peace with power. But meantime we, personally, must answer this closer question. Shall these little lost lambs be kept? And how? How near is the Near East to us? That depends on how near we are to Christ?

CHAPLAIN ROUNTREE'S ANNUAL REPORT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

We give below the annual report of the Rev. H. E. Rountree, Brigade Chaplain, now stationed in the Republic of Haiti. We give it to our readers believing it will be interesting reading to many of our people, showing as it does the activities of a chaplain in the Navy. Some of our busy pastors may find it interesting to compare the work of a chaplain with that of a pastor. For instance, Chaplain Rountree conducted during the year 1922, 345 services, being almost a service for every day in the year, besides the many other duties which claimed his time and attention during the same period. Add to this the fact that all these services for the year were conducted in a climate where the weather was almost as hot as our hottest July and August weather, and then you will get some idea of what it means to serve Uncle Sam as one of his chaplains. We personally thank Bro. Rountree for his thoughfulness in giving us this report—it is a treat to our readers, and will give them some pretty comprehensive idea of a Chaplain's work—Editor:

Office of The Brigade Chaplain, Marine Barracks,

Port Au Prince, Republic of Haiti, January 18, 1923.

To The Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

1. In compliance with the above reference, the following report for the year 1922 is respectfully submitted:

(a) Divine Services.

The Chaplain has personally conducted two hundred and twenty (220) religious services, including the Sunday school with a total attendance of seven thousand, six hundred and twenty eight (7628.) These services include the special ones of the New Year, Easter, Mother's Day. Thanksgiving Day, Christmas and Communion. In addition to this, each week (Sunday Morning) Roman Catholic Mass., has been said for Americans at the Chapel of the Hospitale Generale, near Marine Barracks, to which all Catholics of the Military forces are invited. This would increase the number of religious services to two hundred and seventy two and the attendance, approximately, to eight thousand nine hundred and twenty eight. Added to this the number of services reported by the Chaplain of the Second Regiment, we have to report that in the Brigade, consisting of about thirteen hundred men, three hundred and forty-five services were held, with a total attendance of sixteen thousand and forty-three. The summary is as follows:

	No.	Attendance.
Eighth Regiment	272	8928
Second Regiment	73	7715
	345	16043

The special days of the year, as mentioned above, were observed with special, appropriate and impressive services and they were attended generally. There are quite a few men who can render special music and some one takes part in nearly every service. Members of the band also accompany the music.

Sunday School.

Many of the ladies of the American forces are interested in the Sunday school and are rendering valuable service as teachers. The school consists of the children of the officers and civilians of the American occupation, and there are thirty-five in number divided into six classes according to the regular Graded System. There are also a few ladies who are interested in the music of the church services and some one has always assisted at the piano.

(b) Lectures, Addresses and Signs.

The Chaplain has delivered sixty (60) lectures and addresses with an attendance approximated at fifteen thousand nine hundred and thirty-five (15935), and he has also conducted singing fifty-eight (58) times with an estimated attendance of seventeen thousand three hundred and thirty-four (17334). These addresses have been intended to entertain as well as instruct. The singing has always stimulated high morals and it is enjoyed by all.

(c) Libraries.

There are approximately six thousand volumes in the libraries of the Regiment, distributed at the following stations: Marine Barracks, Port au Prince; Pont Boudet; and Marebalais. A circulation of books has been maintained at all the organizations and guard camps of the Regiment, and also those of the Brigade in the vicinity of Port au Prince; and in addition to this eight thousand four hundred and fifty books have been issued personally. About one thousand volumes obselete and unfit for further use were surveyed and about the same number were received replacing them. During the year we have received two thousand eight hundred and five Magazines, representing one hundred and twenty-one subscriptions, fifty-one of which were sent direct to the three stations: Port Beudet, Mirebalais and Lascabahas, and when the latter was abandoned in September, those belonging to it were diverted to St. Michel. The Regimental Exchange paid for seventy-seven of these subscriptions, while the remainder was furnished by the Quartermaster and the Commanding Officer. In addition to this, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-two magazines have been distributed among the smaller organizations who could not have the benefit of a regular subscription, such as, The Field Hospital, The Depot Detachment, The Coral, The Motor Transport unit, and the Guard Camps in the field. Of this number many were contributed by officers and civilians after they had been read by them.

2. Morale Report.

(a) In addition to my regular duties I have served as Morale Officer of the Eighth Regiment and also of the Marine Barracks Post at Port au Prince. The Chief activities engaged in have been: Motion pictures, athletics, and entertainment. Motion Pictures have been supplied by the U. S. Navy Motion Picture Exchange, Brooklyn, N. Y., at the rate of from four to six per week. Athletics has consisted of baseball, and field events, etc., and the Regiment has participated in three Brigade Meets.

(b) Entertainment has consisted in the use of victrolas, smokers, and amateur shows. Every unit and camp is supplied with a victrola, and six new records, ordered from the monthly advance advertisement folders, are supplied them every month. The report of all equipment is supervised by this office, the Regimental Exchange supplying the material. The most of the Regimental Morale equipment is supplied by the Exchange, the Brigade Morale furnishing only Delco supplies, pool tables, et catera, Smokers are held occasionally and shows less frequently. The band here furnished two concerts each week.

3. Miscellaneous.

(a) There have been many professions of faith during the year and two Baptisms. To each Candidate a certificate has been given recommending him to the church of his choice upon his return to the United States.

(b) I have officiated at four funerals and two marriages; visited all stations every month and also the hospital consistently. Visits to outposts have had for their objective; personal touch with the men, singing of a popular character, divine services, inspection of morale equipment, and the repair of the same. The needs of the camps along these lines have been noted and recommendations made to the proper authority.

(c) I was absent on leave from the fifteenth of August to the fifteenth of September, during which time while in transit I acted as Chaplain to the transport Chaumont. One Divine service was held aboard with an attendance of about four hundred passengers and troops. Every night while under way a sing was held aboard and every body participated. While I was on leave, the Rev. Dr. J. H. Clifford, of the Y. M. C. A. New York City, visiting Haiti at that time, volunteered his services cheerfully and performed Chaplain's duties during my absence. This service was very much appreciated, as he is well known among the Marines.

4. The most of the year has been gratifying; while it has had its disadvantages and hindrances, it has been nevertheless encouraging. Cooperation by Commanding officers has been more than nominal and every assistance has been heartily appreciated. This office has been in constant touch with the American Red Cross representative who has cooperated to maintain High Morals, and to him has been referred all Home service items. Conditions in the Brigade have improved gradually and service can be rendered more systematically and with greater efficiency.

"A MAN OF SORROWS AND ACQUAINTED WITH GRIEF."

By Rev. J. G. Truitt, Princeton, N. J.

(Bro. Truitt graduates from Princeton Theological Seminary the coming Spring, and will be available for a pastorate the coming summer as we suppose. Churches desiring a highly cultured man as pastor will be wise if they seek his service early. This sermon is one of the six he has to submit to the seminary before he graduates. He will have no trouble to find a pastorate. We are appending this note, not so much in the interest of the young preacher, as in the interest of our churches in need of a pastor. And we do so on our own responsibility and without his knowledge and consent.—Editor.

"He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief,,'—Isaiah 53:3

Sorrow is our thought today. It is one of the sure things of every life, and often sorrow is a friend. But friend or foe it is with us as one of the great verities of life. In the opening chapters of Genesis we read, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." And in the closing chapters of Revelation we read, "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Thus from beginning to end of Holy Writ, and from beginning to end of life, there is sorrow. Jesus shared our sorrows, for he was "a man of sorrows—(in the plural)—and acquainted with grief." Isaiah 53:4, "Surely He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted." And who could better use the words of Jeremiah in Lamentations 1:12 than Jesus as He hanged for us on the cross? "Is it nothing to you all ye that pass by? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow."

Again it is the story of Jesus—this time with the emphasis on sorrow. Some of us may be filled now with a new sorrow and be cheered by knowing that our Lord bore sorrows while in the flesh; others may be shown how to go to Him when sorrows come; but is the hope of the speaker that the Holy Spirit will instruct many of you in his hour, that "godly sorrow" may arise in your souls which will lead you to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ.

As soon as Christ begins His earthly ministry He meets men and women engulfed in the sorrows of life. Frequently in the Gospels we read of His compassion on individuals and also on the multitudes. But especially in passing I would call your attention to an incident in the beginning of His Galilean ministery. One Sabbath day He went into the synagogue. He found there a group of men, and among them there was a man with a withered hand. In this group of men Jesus noticed him because of his shyness and timidity—a shyness and timidity which comes to him because of his affliction. Perhaps this group of crafty Pharisees had arged him to come, not because they wanted him, but merely because they wanted to ensnare Jesus, whom they knew would be there. In their wicked hearts they had already guessed that Jesus would have pity on the unfortunate sufferer. Being intent on teaching the glorious principles of His Kingdom and also on replacing sorrow with rejoicing He calls the man forth as an object lesson, and to make the withered hand strong like the other. But the jealous, murderous, hard-hearted hypocrites are obstinately determined to believe not, to see not, and not to understand. Notice that the Scripture does not say that Jesus was grieved because the man had a withered hand; that word was reserved for a vastly more terrible thing. "He looked around on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." Here then is the first recorded statement of Jesus's grief. Grieved not because of physical infirmity but because of hardness of heart. Grieved because men's souls were shrivelled up in their bigotted blindness until they would not feel the power and personal persuasion of the Son of God. Thus has it ever been; many of the wisest have failed to know the unbounded love of Jesus. This made Him sad. This finally broke His heart. John 1:11, "He came unto His own, and His own received Him not." "A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."

"And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, healing every sickness and every disease among the people. But when he saw the multitudes he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd." Matthew 9:35-36. What a world of meaning these two verses have. Fully yet briefly they tell of Jesus's outward activities and His inward concern. What streams of mercy and blessing followed in His wake! A triune greatness accompanied Him wherever He went,—His personal presence, for to touch even the hem of His garment was to be healed; His matchless teaching and preaching, for He spake as never man spake; and His actual healing of "every sickness and every disease among the people." Think of it! What goodness and bounty and blessing from such hands! But He realized His departure would soon come. The personal, physical, demonstration of His infinite love must cease. "And when He saw the multitudes"—saw how they crowded the cities, seashores, gateways, roads, and mountain-sides, there was great pity and sorrow and compassion within. He saw—and His eyes could see the suffering hidden beneath the outer surface. He saw the poverty of soul, the hunger of heart, yea, even the secret sins which weighed men down. "They fainted." They were tired, giving up, losing in life's battle. Without a shepherd, without a person to fill their spiritual voids, so that they should not want. Seeing that condition caused Jesus to have compassion on them, which is the Latin way of saying he suffered with them.

I would not have you linger at the tomb of the brother of Mary and Martha, but I would pull back the curtains for just a moment in passing, that we may see in the heart of a multitude and between two sorrowing sisters, a bowed figure, and hear that shortest of all verses, "Jesus wept" (John 11:35). Here Christ showed Himself to be a man, "touched with the feeling of our infirmaties" (Hebrews 4:15); and demonstrated the truth that He was God,—or the Son of God in its infinite sense. Since He was man and the tenderest of men, He wept; and since He was almighty in His power, and, that the world might know Him as its Messiah He raised the dead. But here, it is the tears of Jesus that attract our attention in this discourse. "We never read that He laughs, but more than once we find Him in tears. Those that sow to the Spirit must sow in tears." Jesus did not begin the custom of weeping and He has not yet caused it to cease, but someday in His New Heaven and New Earth He will wipe away all tears and there shall be no more sorrow nor crying. Weeping is not in itself a sign of weakness. Resurrecting power followed the tears of the Son of God. Paul says, "When I am weak then am I strong." Hezekiah wept once and Jehovah saw his tears; He said: "I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears"—II Kings 20:5. Jesus said once "She hath washed My feet with tears." How He commended her you know full well! Tear marks are recorded on the pages of Paul's letters. "I wrote unto you with many tears." Oh! Jesus. Thou hast given us our triumphs; Thou hast shared with us our tears!

I come now to the scene described in Luke the nineteenth chapter and forty-first verse. "And when He was come near He beheld the city and wept over it." Jesus is arriving at the city of Jerusalem to make His formal, triumphant entry. This entry has been prophesied, and the Jews for many centuries have looked forward to it. He was the great Son of David entering the City of the King. Holy memories have hallowed this city from the days of Abraham. Melchisedec was once its king. Saul had made it powerful. David had made it mighty. Soloman had made it glorious. And David from this same vantage point, beholding the old city, had wept over it. But Jesus sees with His prophetic eye its early destruction, and He loves it so—it is His own, "and He came to His own and His own received Him not." In spite of all its misery, murder, wickedness, and sin, He would still gather her children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but they would not. Yet, and no doubt there are wandering wayward hearts here tonight who are rejecting Jesus just as they did. And Jesus loves you so—And you belong to Him and He should be yours.

All about Him as He journeyed toward the city there were hossanas and shoutings. Jesus was silent. Eloquent in His speech He was, if possible, more eloquent in His silence, but "the eloquence of His tears was beyond description." One man has described His tears as "the most beautiful pearls in His crown of glory." In the midst of His earthly triumph His face is full of tears. In all the glory of it He knew that primarily Jerusalem had rejected Him and in her blindness would shortly force Him out of her gates with His own cross, and when well "with out the camp," would crucify Him. "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."

He wailed aloud. I quote Dean Farrar: "And well might He wail aloud! Was not the city of Jerusalem the most religious city in the world? Was it not wholly devoted to religion, or at any rate, to religionism? Could not the Temple Service number its white robed array of forty thousand priests, and its endless army of attendant Levites? Did not the blast of silver trumpets announce daily its morning and evening sacrifices? Did not the Hight Priest enter its Holy of Holies every year with the golden censor and blood of atonement in his hands? Were not some two million pilgrims, from every region of the world, with Gentile proselytes among them, streaming on that very day to its Paschal Feast? Ah, yes! there was sumptuous ritual enough, but no righteousness; abundant externalism, but no religion pure and undefiled; and to His eyes the city was but as a glistering sepulchre, a hollow show." Such a condition in person also, must cause them too to come to naught.

Let us review finally the closing sorrows of our Saviour's earthly life. Out of that upper room leading the eleven we see Him coming away from the celebration of the Last Supper. The hearts of all are sad and silence reigns. The hour is rather late, but the disciples follow Jesus, drawn by the awfulness of the hour and by the Saviour's ever-increasing agony, which strikes them dumb.

Out through the city they go eastward, crossing the valley of Kidron. It is an old, old road. David in his flight from his son Absalom had gone the same way. "And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered and he went up barefoot; and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up."—II Samuel 15:30. Tonight the Son of David, pursued by His own people, Judas and the Jews, follow in his trail! The gloom deepens and the need for human sympathy grows. He asks eight of His disciples to tarry, but Peter and James and John he takes with Him. Oh! How Jesus suffered that night! His soul was breaking! The sins of all the world for all time were being heaped upon Him! Oh! what a contrast, Peter and James and John, and Jesus. They could not fathom Him! They could not understand—"No one knows the Son but the Father." He must be alone. He has the three to tarry, bidding them pray. And He went out under the myriads of little olive leaves that hovered thickly over Him, making the midnight darkness of Palestine darker still. And He fell upon His knees and agonized as mortals have never done! "It is nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow." Oh! great world today, marching by unconcerned, ye know not what ye do! While you pass He is saying, with blood upon His brow, "Not my will, but thine be done."—The Father's will? His will was that although Jesus was His only begotton Son He should die that we might be redeemed. Out of this sorrow came victory, an inner peace that passed all understanding, Pilate was nothing compared with this; the cross had lost its stigma; death had lost its sting. Here in the Garden of Genthsemane the battle was fought and won!

The awful tragedy of the cross was a world spectacle. It was for you and for me. Jesus went the rest of the way for us. He suffered the final pangs sin-bearing Saviour of the world, and cried out "It is finished." Yea, and our redemption was sealed by His resurrection, and is being applied today to all who will believe by the Holy Spirit. Oh! Saviour, I will believe, "I do believe, help my unbelief." How many now looking over Jesus's great redemption, procured at such a cost will say the same tonight? How we thank Thee, O Saviour, that Thou art "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Amen.

"THE HIGHEST SCHOLARSHIP."

BY REV. WILLIAM T. MCELROY.

The phrase that heads this article is one that is much in the mouths of the destructive critics and is seen often in public prints. The highest scholarship, we are told, accepts the evolutionary hypothesis as established fact. The highest scholarship rejects belief in the inspiration of the Scriptures. The highest scholarship has discarded the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, the authenticity of Isaiah's prophecy, the Virgin Birth of Jesus Christ, the Vicarious Atonement, the Resurrection, the Miracles of the Bible, and so on.

This plea has not been without its effect on public opinion. The lay reader is inclined to accept the statement as true when a university professor says that the highest scholarship believes so and so. Often of course, it may be true, but frequently it is not true.

It may be that those who use the phrase are sincere. A man usually believes his own opinions to be better than the opinions of others, and if some of his scholastic brethren agree with him, it is to his mind ipso facto that they are wiser scholars than those who disagree. If we are inclined to be charitable and take it for granted that they are sincere, we still must charge them with being deliberately blind to certain facts they could easily ascertain to be true.

One of these facts is that there is hardly a belief on which scholarship is unanimous. To say that all who agree with me have the "highest scholarship" and that all others are outside the pale of true scholarship is to be hopelessly egotisic, an unworthy attitude of any true man.

Another fact is that scholarship is to be judged, as all other things are to be judged, by their fruits. The time is past when a man is to be honored simply because he has stored his mind with a greater number of facts than other men. The writer once knew an old colored man who could recite verbatim nearly every sermon he had ever heard yet he was neither scholarly nor religious. A man may be able to recite the multiplication table perfectly, and still not be a mathematician. Such things would have passed for learning during the dark ages, but today we have come to know that true wisdom consists not alone in storing the brain with facts, but also in properly relating those facts to one another and to life.

If, then, the accumulation of facts is not proof of scholarship, how shall a man's scholarship be judged? By the standing of the institution to which a man belongs? The destructive critics have no advantage in this respect. By the size of his audiences? The conservative scholars have the best of it here. By the sale of books? Here again the advantage lies with the conservative. By his ability to present his beliefs in such a way as to work a transformation in the lives of those who hear? For every transformed life to which the destructive critic can point, the conservative scholar, be he a professor or pulpit leader, can point to hundreds, even thousands. By the effect of such teachings upon society? Ask the man from whom his mother's simple faith has been taken by the teachings of the destructive scholar? Or, on the other hand, ask the man who has been born again under the teachings of those who still believe and teach from professor's desk or pulpit the old gospel based on whole-hearted belief in the divine inspiration and integrity of the Bible?

The roll of great scholars and preachers who today can be numbered among the outstanding conservative religious thinkers and leaders of today is an imposing one. Who will question the scholarship and ability and influence of such men as the following—and not a destructive critic or heretical teacher among them? Dr. Edgar Y. Mullins, President of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, the largest theological seminary in the world; Dr. A. T. Robertson of the same institution, recognized as the greatest living Hebrew scholar; Dr. Charles R. Erdman and Dr. Francis L. Patton of Princeton Seminary. Dr. W. W. Moore of Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., Dr. Thornton C. Whaling of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Kentucky; Dr. W. B. Riley of the Northern Baptist denomination; or Dr. Jas. I. Vance, the famous Nashville preacher.

But there is no need to enlarge the list. It might be greatly enlarged, for we have left unnamed many of the great conservative scholars of our own land and name none at all of other lands. Those who have been named, however, are a sufficient refutation of the charge that the "highest scholarship" is in the ranks of the radicals in theology.—*The Presbyterian of the South. WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

Subject: Jesus in Gethsemane.—Luke 22.

Golden Text: "Christ also suffered for sins once, the righteous for the unrighteous, that he might bring us to God."—I Peter 3:18.

Devotional Reading:—Ps. 22:1-8.

Reference Material: Matt. 4:11; 26:36-46; I Cor. 10:13; Heb. 4:15-16; James 1:2-6.

Topics for Class Discussion:

What are Christ's teachings about the will of God?

Could Jesus have escaped the cross and been the Saviour of the world?

The character of Judas Iscariot.

"Toward the garden called Gethsemane
We turn our faces and our steps today
And wait in hushed and pitying grief apart
While Christ takes the world's sins upon his heart!

For this he came—the Child of Bethlehem!
To meet this hour he trod strange, toilsome roads,
Misunderstood, despised, hated and feared,
He takes at last the heaviest of all loads—
To bear for others punishment and pain,
And so redeem the world for God again!"

As the Passover time came near, the Jewish leaders grew more eager to put Jesus to death, restrained only by their fear of the people. One of those who had lived closest to Jesus finally betrayed Him into their hands at a time when the people would not be near. In the upper room, Jesus and His disciples ate the Passover, or the Last Supper. There the Master foretold His betrayal, settled the strife concerning rank, and foretold Peter's denial. Then they went to the mount of Olives. Matthew and Mark tell how He left most of the disciples at the gate, to "watch and pray", but how He took Peter and James and John farther into the garden, and then left them to go on a little way to face and meet his great struggle alone. "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me." He must have been thinking of the great work which he would be so glad to remain and do, if it were only the Father's will. How often His children have prayed to have the "cup removed," but have they always prayed just as truly and from their hearts: "not my will but thine be done." It was when the Master voiced His complete submission to the Father's will, that the angel came to strengthen him. The life surrendered to God wholly experiences the greatest spiritual blessings.

A Lutheran minister was once in great affliction. His wife had died, his church had burned, his children had perished and he had lost his eyesight. But it was at the time of this time of sorrow and test in his life that he wrote those great words, which we so often sing:

"My Jesus, as thou wilt! Oh! may thy will be mine;
Into thy hand of love, I would my all resign;
Thro' sorrow or thro' joy, Conduct me as thine own,
And help me still to say, My Lord, thy will be done!"

Submission to God's will, means submission to joy or to sorrow. When Jesus agonized in the Garden of Gethsamane, it was not because he was afraid to die, or feared physical pain. His was mental agony, for He must have seen the need of the world, the disciples and the work that they must carry on, the persecutions which those early Christians must meet and endure. His concern was for the world which needed God, and even down to the twentieth century the world would not be more than half converted, and even that Christian half often so careless and indifferent. Yet the Master was willing to submit to the Father's will, and to go to meet the most ignominious death for our sake.

From the garden, where Judas betrayed Him, Jesus was led to His unfair trial. "But Peter followed afar off." This expresses the attitude of those who had been His most intimate personal friends. Those who know how hard it is to lose a friend at any time have an inkling of what it must have meant to Jesus, to be denied at this sad hour by those who were closest to Him. Some Christians today are following too far off to enjoy His companionship. In trouble they call upon Him, but in joy He is forgotten. Always it must sadden the Christ to have His friends "afar off."

The Christ went to Gethsemane. But He emerged victorious. His followers may be called upon to follow Him there, but in His power, they may overcome temptation, and be glad to say "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done."

"Father, I know that all my life,
Is portioned out by thee,
And the changes that are sure to come
I do not fear to see:
But I ask thee for a present mind
Intent on pleasing thee."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

March 11, 1923.

The Stewardship of Self, Substance and Service.—Matt. 25:14-30; I Peter 4:10.

Thoughts on the Topic.

Stewardship of Self.

"Ministering—as good stewards."—I Peter 4:10 was one of the mottoes of the great New York Christian Endeavor Convention in 1921. Christian Endeavor has enlisted a host of Life Recruits, who have volunteered to give their lives in active Christian service. God is calling for more volunteers.

"If time were money, I would be a millionaire" sang the office boy, and the man who heard him said, "That boy has never heard of the Stewardship of Life." Not all of us have learned to "live on twenty-four hours a day."

Every day we see people with five, two or one talent. Some are using them as trusts from God. Others are hiding the talent. It is not a question of how much ability one has, but rather how willing he is to use that ability which has been bestowed. It is impossible to be a faithful steward of Jesus Christ, without giving all of life to Him.

"An artist found in the streets a lad whose purity and beauty of face he recorded in the face of an angel on his canvas. He tried to keep the lad with him, to make something good of his life. But the lad chose otherwise. After twelve years, the artist, seeking a model degraded enough to represent Satan, found a debauched creature with scarcely any semblance of manhood left. As the ragged remnant of manhood sat in the studio, the artist learned that this fellow was the angel-faced child of former years." Blessing comes to the life surrendered to God. Some of the greatest tragedies of this world come because the individual is unwilling to give himself to God.

Why enlist for life service? Why surrender self to God? "Go ye! comes the call to me, His friend, He wants me to!" There is the greatest reason of all.

Stewardship of Substance.

The dictionary definition of a steward, is "a person entrusted with the management of estates or affairs not his own." The Christian is such a person, entrusted with the resources of God. None of his possessions really belong to him, but he is caring for them for God who is the owner of all. Hence, as a faithful steward he must keep accounts to be sure that his trust is managed fairly. His tithe will be ready for God, and find joy in the giving

The Christian steward has a wise counselor and guide, the Heavenly Father.

The Christian Steward, if faithful, will receive greater responsibilities, with His Lord's approval.—Matt. 25:21.

"Money belongs to God, and when God is recognized as its owner it becomes exalted power. The power for good was never greater than it is today."

Stewardship of Service.

The statement is often heard "he is a good man" or "she is a good woman." Someone has added "Then what is he good for"? Stewardship of service asks the questions: "What good are you to your society? To your friends? To your church? To your home?" Read the parable of the talents carefully, and you will see that God means for talents to be used.

"To each" he gave a talent.—Verse 15. The call of stewardship of service comes to all.

After a long time, the lord of these servants returned. The reckoning day came. Read 2 Corinthians 5:10. What sort of an account will you have to render on that day?

Do you use your talents, even though they seem small to you? The reward is according to the use of your ability.

Plans for the Meeting.

Write to Rev. Warren H. Denison, D. D., Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, Secretary of the Department of Stewardship of the Christian Church, and ask him for suggestions for the meeting, literature, and ways of teaching the lesson of stewardship in your Christian Endeavor Society.

Place before the society on the blackboard or a large poster, the following motto for the meeting:

"Christ needs Helpers. What can you do?"

Have five members give two minutes talks on the following subjects:

1. The Master Needs Us.—Matt. 9:37-38.
2. Giving Christ What We Have.—John 6:8-11.
3. Helping Christ Through Our Obedience.—John 9:1-7.
4. Helping Christ Through Helping Others.—Matt. 25:31-46.
5. Helping Christ Through Our Influence.—John 1:40-42.

Hymns for the Meeting: Jesus I My Cross Have Taken; A Charge to Keep I Have; Give of Your Best to the Master; Take My Life and Let It Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee; I Am Thine, O Lord; All to Jesus I Surrender (Is this the truth?); My Jesus I Love Thee (How much?).

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION INSTITUTES. EASTERN VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

Under the direction of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, of which Col. E. E. Holland of Suffolk is the president, and Rev. James Lightbourne of Holland, the general secretary, a series of institutes will be held in the various churches of the Conference, beginning March 17th and ending April 1st. Two sessions will be held each day, one at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, one at 7:30 at night. The afternoon sessions will be devoted largely to the discussion of various problems in the educational program of the church, especially on Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. The evening sessions will be rallies, with music and addresses.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pennsylvania, Field Secretary of Young People's work of the Christian Church, and well known in Eastern Virginia where he attended the sessions of the Seaside Chautauqua for several years will be present to speak and lead conferences in all of the institutes. Mr. Frank Wilson, Christian Endeavor Field Secretary for North Carolina and Virginia, is expected to discuss the work of Christian Endeavor. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary of Religious Education of the Southern Convention, will have charge of the children's work.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, which is making these meetings possible, is offering a great opportunity to its workers, and it is hoped that many will plan to attend the meetings, and that they will mean much to the work in Eastern Virginia. Plan now to attend the meeting most convenient to you.

A FIELD FOR EDUCATIONAL EVANGELISM.

Some amazing information regarding the Bible was recently brought to light in a test made at the Nebraska State Boys' Camp. If doubt lingers in the mind of anyone at to the place which the Bible occupies in the life of the average young person of today, he needs only to study the results of this inquiry, which consisted of a series of thirty-eight Bible questions propounded to this group of high-school boys, representing forty-six Nebraska communities, to be convinced. Here are three simple questions that any high-school youth might reasonably be expected to answer:

1. Why do we celebrate Easter?
2. Who betrayed Jesus?
3. Name the parents of Jesus.

Only seventy-seven per cent of the boys were able to answer the first question; fifty-one per cent replied correctly to the second; fifty-five per cent to the third. Peter, Moses and even David were accused by these youthful theologians of the betrayal of Jesus. The parents of Jesus, according to several, were "Mary and John"; others said "Jacob and Mary;" "Ruth and James;" "Mary Magdalene and Moses."

The number of books in the Bible, according to these boys, ranged from thirty-nine to one hundred and forty-two; only twenty per cent answered correctly Moses was given credit for building the ark, others said Jonah was the architect. Only one in ten could tell the number of people entering the ark, the answers varying from two to three hundred.

One boy asserted that Nazareth was noted for destroying the Temple. The Lord's Prayer, according to one of the boys, is found in the "Book of Paul," another said in the "twenty-third Psalm." One lad, evidently thinking of the Pentateuch, said the Beatitudes are the first five books in the Bible, Beer-sheba was defined as the "king who said the writing on the wall"; "a race of people in Asia"; "A queen who came from Spain;" "A king and wicked man;" "a Queen of Sheba;" "the mother of Solomon." The question; "Where did we get the Ten Commandments" brought the replies, "Christ gave them to his disciples;" "from the Sermon on the Mount;" in "The Psalms;" and "we got them from an arc."

The ideas of the boys regarding who wrote the Bible were hazy indeed, among the replies being: "The prifits and Joseph"; "Christ;" "Moses"; "man;" "in Judea in A. D. 1611." In regard to the Flood, most of the boys underrated its extent and duration, the answers varying from three to nine days; one boy guessed as high, as sixty days. One boy named correctly all the twelve apostles. Most could name but four or five. Although on many things the boys were amazingly ignorant, on a few things there was a pretty clear understanding. For example, in answer to the request, forty-five per cent of the boys could substantially quote John 3:16.

Two questions were answered by every boy: "What is sin?" and "How may we know that we are saved?" No matter how hazy he might be on other questions, every boy had a fairly clear idea of sin, and was able to give an adequate answer of salvation. When it came to the query, "How may we know that we are saved?" the boys were not so clear, many of them replying that we cannot know.

Who, you ask, were these boys who betrayed such astounding ignorance of the Bible? Were they from the slums of Omaha, or from the sand hills of Western Nebraska where churches are few and far between? On the contrary, they were from the best homes of the average community. Eighty-eight per cent of them are regular attendants at Sunday school and eighty-two per cent church members; eighty-four per cent expect to go to college, and seventy per cent have decided upon their life work. If these lads from our best homes, leaders in their schools and communities, have so little real knowledge of the Bible, what may be said of the great mass of young people? And it is well to remember in this connection, that investigations made during the war in both the American and British armies showed that about eighty per cent of the men in the service were not members of any church, Protestant or Catholic.

Here was a select group of boys from our best homes—fifteen to nineteen years of age—high school lads, students—church members—at the threshhold of manhood—yet with a meager, indeed a very hazy knowledge of the Book of Books. At that age, we are told that Abraham Lincoln was a student of three books, the Bible, "Pilgrim's Progress," which is a Bible story, and Shakespeare, whose works it is said, contain some nine hundred quotations from the Bible. It is evident that the youth of today are not emulating Abraham Lincoln.

Green, the great English historian, tells us that three hundred years ago the English people were a people of one book, the Bible, and it was because they found there the teachings of religious and political liberty that many of them migrated to the New World to find there this freedom which the Bible taught. Gladstone, the great English statesman, once said, "I have known one hundred great men of the world in my time, and eighty-seven of them have been intimate students of the Bible." General Pershing in a statement to the soldiers during the world war said: "Hardship will be your lot, but trust in God will give you comfort; temptation will befall you, but the teachings of our Savicur will give you strength. Let your valor as soldiers and your conduct as men be an inspiration to your comrades and an honor to your country." President Roosevelt paid the following tribute to the Bible: "To every man who faces life with real desire to do his part in everything, I appeal for a study of the Bible. No book of any kind ever written has so affected the world life of a people." —Westminister Teacher.

LONE RANGER EXERCISES MEMORY.

Alone as a forest ranger in a remote section of the Cascade mountains, in the State of Washington, George Kilgore, a former University of Washington student, has memorized practically all of the New Testament and three books of poems. In addition to the mental exercise he has completed an entire dining room set of buffet, tea table, dining table, six chairs and a fern pedestal from hand split and hewn fir and cedar wood. The furniture polished in its natural color is worth more than his year's salary. In three winter months Kilgore trapped near his cabin more than $500 worth of pelts.

Mr. G. R. Kendrick visited us some time ago and was so impressed with our big family he came back the next week and brought us 102 yards pretty dress ginghams.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Misionary Society of Fall Creek Christian Church sent to us a box containing little dresses, one nice rug, little suits, etc.

The Salisbury Cotton Mills remembered us very kindly last week and shipped us a bale of blue shirtings containing 373 yds. This comes in fine to make shirts for the boys this summer. Misses Laura and Maye Strange, Lincoln, Kansas, sent to us by Parcel post one nice quilt.

Mrs. J. T. Moore, Summerfield, N. C., shipped to us one dozen half gallon cans fruit.

Mr. and Mrs, G, C, Moore, Summerfield, N. C., shipped to us one dozen half gallon cans fruit.

Mrs. Ernest Rascoe, Burlington, N. C., has the honor of sending to us the first pair of sheets in answer to our call for sheets last week. Who will be the next one to answer the call. 200 sheets needed and we hope our good ladies will furnish them

The cold clear dry weather has helped the "flu" situation and most all our little fellows are well one more time. A thing we are very thankful for.

The Story of The Bible

By Hendrick Van Loon

is being published in McCall's Magazine. It is the most important and epoch-making contribution ever printed by an American magazine, because here for the first time has a master-writer and master-historian picked out shining thread of the Biblical narrative, dropping away all details from it and presenting it not only in the simplest and most beautiful of English but fixing it also in its exact historical perspective.

IN McCALL'S NOW.

"The Story of the Bible" is appearing now in McCall's. We have made special arrangements with the publishers so that you will be able to enjoy this beautiful presentation of the Bible story. For a short time only we can offer our readers this remarkable club—

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

Pray for it. The one great need of our Christian Church today is Men and Millions consecrated upon God's altar to the service of the Church and the Kingdom. If you love the Christian Church then you love also Men and Millions, since Men and Millions is the one Movement amongst us in behalf of the entire Church and all it has, is and stands for. When one pays a dime or a dollar to Men and Millions in that act one gives to all the work and worship of the Christian Church in this world.

Men and Millions is the one Movement which undertakes to cultivate love for, and loyalty to, and support of all the enterprises of the Church.

If we love the Christian Church then let us prove that love by paying our pledges to

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Preach it. Teach it. Pray for it. Undertake great things for God, then expect great things from God.

VICTORY!

A Very Strange Disease Now Raging In Many Communities.

It Is Called "Dies Dominici Morbus.

The following is a description of the disease, with suggestions as to its cure by Dr. W. H. Morse of Hartford, Conn. Be sure to give it prompt attention, or it may become serious:

The Disease Itself.

This is an acute infectious disease, becoming chronic, and of an intermittent character, occuring once in every seven days, and that day the Lord's day. It is characterized by violent paroxysms, which commonly commence in the morning. In a large number of cases the initial stage seizes the patient bofore he has left his bed, and makes him indisposed to rise till a later hour than usual.

Premonitory Symptoms.

The premonitory symptom is yawning, which is followed by a period of lethargy. A coldness is detected about the heart, and is closely followed by a dullness in the head. The patient feels a tendency to be indisposed to the use of his feet and hands, and it is with difficulty that he walks. If he should arouse himself so as to attend divine service, he generally enters the house of God later than hisneighbors, and after a little while the symptoms of yawning and lethargy recur, and he falls asleep.

Stupifies The Brain.

The disease appears to stupify the brain, so that, however the patient may seem to suffer, he is rarely known to complain. Patients with other diseases are apt to fret on account of being prevented from attending church, but the victims of this disease are never known to exclaim, "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?"

It is Most Dangerous on Sunday.

It is somewhat surprising to find that patients on the following day are as active as if they had not been indisposed. In fact, they appear to be perfectly well until the following Sunday. It is to be observed, however, that there is a low, feverish heat perceptible during the days of interval, which may be described under the name of febris mundi, but which is readily removed by a change of scene—to the movies. The symptoms peculiar to the Lord's day morning are apt to manifest themselves in the mid-week on the evening when the prayer meeting is held.

It Is Infectious.

The infectious character of the disease is pronounced. It is apt to run through a family. Again, the malady is world-wide in its prevalence; but it was never more so than at present. Many authorities regard it as of small importance, and there are some who consider it advisable to have it continue.

The Cause of the Disease.

In searching for the cause, close investigation shows that it is due to some large extent to excessive indulgence in the use of the acid fruits of the flesh and beverages that produce eructations. Persons who sit in close rooms with vain companions, are peculiarly liable to attacks. Neglect of private and family devotions, with devotion to the dance, movies, cards and club life, render people susceptible to it. In point, it is found that the most severe attacks come after a Saturday evening of worldly amusement.

The Remedy.

As concerns a remedy, a specific is demanded. When a patient manages to get to church, electricity from the pulpit is a sure cure. A prophylactic treatment on Sunday morning is a chapter from the Bible taken clear, not mixed with Sunday newspaper emulsion. Ministers have sometimes taken various methods to bring a relief for the patients when they are seized with attacks in church service. Some have reasoned with the patients kindly. Some have talked louder. Some have called "Fire!" Some have interrupted the sermon by asking the patient as to the state of his feelings. Some have stopped preaching. It is told of the Rev. Dr. Young that when he saw so many patients in his congregation he sat down and cried. On one occasion when Bishop Aylmer was much grieved and annoyed over attacks in his audience, he ceased his sermon and, taking up his Greek Testament, read aloud from it to the sufferers and others. Such measures may prove efficacious at the time, and may not. The relief of the disease is up to the patent himself. If neither reason nor religion, physic or essence of common sense fail to bring it about, it must be left to death and judgment to awaken him.

Dies Diminici morbus is a serious disease, and no mistake about it.

Modes of Giving.

Some men give so that you are angry every time you ask them to contribute. They give so that their gold and silver shoot you like a bullet. Other persons give with such beauty that you remember it as long as you live; and you say, "It is a pleasure to go to such men." There are some men that give as springs do; whether you go to them or not, they are always full; and your part is merely to put your dish under the overflowing stream. Others give just as a pump does where the well is dry, and the pump leaks.—Henry Ward Beecher.

The Struggle in the Ruhr.

The situation in the Ruhr is growing more tense. The French issued an order preventing German officials from Berlin from visiting the district, as they have already stirred up too much discontent there. The French have organized the railroads and announced to the workers that if they refuse to work, or hamper operations in any way, they will be discharged. The French have seized government forests and have stopped all shipments of coal to unoccupied Germany. A clash between French soldiers and German policemen at Gelesenkirchen has resulted in the town's being fined 100,000,000 marks, and the burgomaster and others have been arrested. Germany is retaliating in what ways she can; the port of Antwerp has been boycotted, and medical associations have decided not to treat French or Belgians until the Ruhr is evacuated.

France's assurance that Turkey would sign the treaty of peace has not yet been justified. On the contrary, Turkey ordered the Allies' warships out of Smyrna harbor within twenty-four hours, but extended the time when the ships refused to get out. The situation is strained.

IN MEMORY OF MRS.
J. W. LASHLEY

Whereas on January 29th, 1923, God in his infinite love sent the death angel and bore above, the spirit of our dear sister, Mrs. J. W. Lashley, we the members of the Ladies Aid and Missionary Societies of the Durham Christian Church wish to express our appreciation of her in the following resolutions:

Resolved, First, That we hold in grateful remembrance her faithfulness to duty and commend to all her beautiful Christian life, trusting that the influence of this life may draw us all in a closer touch with God and the divine things that we are to do.

Second, That while we realize we have lost a faithful member and deeply mourn her loss, we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

Third, That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family, praying that our Heavenly Father will give comfort where earthly friends fail.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and one to the Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. R. J. Kernodle,
Mrs. A. E. Maynor,
Miss Minnie Carden.

TUCK

Mrs. Margaret J. Tuck was born February 16, 1836, died January 16th 1923, age ninety two years and eleven months. In September 1849 she married Richard H. Tuck. To them were born eleven children. Only four survive her. They are Mrs. Nannie Young, Mrs. Flora Tuck, Mrs. Elizabeth Tuck and Miss Virginia Tuck, all near Christie, Va. There are twenty-six of the twenty-nine grandchildren living, thirty-eight great grandchildren and one great, great grandchild. She was a member of Union Christian Church for perhaps fifty years. She was able to walk around till two days before her death. She said she was not sick nor did she feel a pain, but had lived long enough and was ready to go. Her last words were, "I see Jesus. He is here for me now." A true servant of God has gone to her reward. Her life counted for much. Eternity alone can reveal her influence for good. Many of her grandsons are leading officers and laymen in the church.

C. E. Newman.

Virgilina, Va., Feb. 22, 1923.

NEWTON

Sister Lorena Newton, daughter of Burl and Amy Belcher, was born in 1840 near Clarksville, Va., and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Anna Phillips, February 12th, 1922, age 83 years. In 1861 she married John Newton. Three children were born to them.

Sister Newton united with Hebron Church twenty years ago. For years her health has failed, and for weeks prior to her death was confined to her bed, during which time she was tenderly cared for by her only living child. Just before her passing, she told the people good bye and said she was ready to go.

C. E. Newman.

PERSONS

Joseph S. Persons, son of Dr. Anthony Persons, departed this life February 11, as quietly as a babe falls asleep on its mother's bosom. He was born March 21, 1848 and was in his 75th year.

He married Martha S. Roberts December 16, 1874, and they had three children, all of whom are living. Mrs. C. L. Griffin and Miss Daisy live in Windsor and Mrs. L. E. Holland resides in Norfolk.

He is also survived by two brothers and a sister: Thos. A. and H. V. Persons, of Windsor and Mrs. Lucy A. Johnson, of Suffolk. There are five grandchildren.

He was a deacon of Antioch Church before coming to Windsor, but united with the church at Windsor when he moved to that place and remained faithful in its membership till his death.

He was devoted to his wife, children, and grandchildren. To them his death is a severe shock; his love and thoughtfulness a sweet memory.

His funeral was conducted from the Windsor Christian Church. Rev. H. H. Butler, who had known him so long and well spoke a very fitting tribute to his memory.

He was a member of the masonic fraternity, and his brethren of that ancient order had charge of his funeral and concluded the services at the grave.

The deepest sympathy of the community goes out in earnest prayer to the bereaved family.

First Railway Periodical in the World.—

The first railway periodical in the world was published at Rogersville, Tenn., from July 4, 1831, to June 14, 1832. This unique publication was known as the "Rail-Road Advocate," and, as stated in bold type under its front-page heading, was "Conducted by an Association of Gentlemen." The paper consisted of eight pages, 12 1-2 by 9 3-4 inches, and was issued semi-monthly, at "the very low rate of $1.00 a year."

A complete file of the "Rail-Road Advocate," twenty-six numbers in all, bound in a cheap pasteboard cover, was discovered recently at Atlanta.

This pioneer railway journal contains first-hand information bearing directly on the origin of railroads, and is a valuable addition to the history of that period.—Southern News Bulletin.

Farmer Ford.—

Mr. Henry Ford is one of the most important and conspicuous figures in the industrial world. His success as a manufacturer of automobiles has been phenominal. Beginning as a poor boy just a few years ago, he now has an income of nearly a quarter of a million dollars a day. Although he is making money at this rapid rate the best of feeling seems to exist between him and his employees as he works with them on a cooperative basis paying them good wages and allowing them to share in the profits of the business.

Few, however, have ever known that Mr. Ford farms on a large scale. He is said to be one of the largest farmers in the country, cultivating 9,000 acres of land. He keeps no stock on his land except saddle horses. These, we presume, are used by his overseers. The rest of the work is done by tractors and other machinery. He keeps no cows for the reason that he thinks artificial milk, manufactured from vegetables, is much more wholesome, and this he uses on his farm. It is said that all the work on his farm is done in twenty-one days. He believes that farm work should be thoroughly organized and systematized just as is the case in indutrial plants. He carries the method of the mammoth Ford automobile shops out into his farm.

Mr. Ford believes most thoroughly in the co-operative method of buying and selling. He thinks that farmers should not only control the sale of their products but should eliminate middle-men by cooperative buying.

A description of his farm and its work is very interesting and we have no doubt he will succeed at farming as he seems to succeed at everything he undertakes.

Beware of Dust.—

There is always dust in the air. During the quiet hours it settles on the floor and upon articles of furniture. Then someone must carefully see that it is not stirred up again before it is gathered and taken out of the house. John Bunyan tells the story of being in a room that was full of dust because it was never swept. Presently someone comes in and begins to sweep it. The result is alarming, for within a very few seconds the room is filled with dust, choking those present and threatening their health, blinding their eyes and bringing on a general disturbance. This is always what happens after a long period of settling down of the forces of the church and the kingdom of God. After a long dead period through which quiet has prevailed much dust settles. Everything seems clear and inviting. We feel perfectly at home and safe, but have premonitions that something might happen if anyone would venture to stir and break loose. What a dust he might set flying in the air! Yes, and that is just what has happened. Someone is stirring up the dust in the theological parlor. It is a pity that John Bunyan is not here to give direction as to just what ought to be done. The atmosphere is filled with little particles that irritate the eyes and choke the throat and sends others out of the room sneering and seeking relief. What shall be done with the dust raiser? Shall we let him clean up the room? Shall we abandon him at his task? Shall we throw him out and call him a nuisance? Watch the man who throws dust in the eyes of your faith. Better clear out if he starts the process. Dust is dangerous. Get at once into the open air. There is no peril where Jesus Christ is located and waiting you as one who believes steadfastly in him as Lord and Saviour.—Biblical Recorder.

An Intolerable Situation.—

The Atlantic coast off New Jersey and New York is blockaded. It is a hostile fleet that extends three to the mile from North to South—hostile in that the purpose of shipmasters is to aid in the violation of our laws. A majority of these ships, perhaps, fly the British flag. Unless we wish to become the laughing stock of the world, we must devise some way to disband this armada of rum carriers. The wisdom, or unwisdom, of Prohibition has nothing to do with it. We are a sovereign country, and if ships under foreign flags can make a business of supplying law breakers with contraband goods just outside the three-mile limit, government is a farce.

The New York Morning Telegraph of January 19th suggests a remedy for this intolerable situation in an editorial, one paragraph of which follows:

"It is not well to reflect that, while these sea-rovers are at work, distinguished representatives of Great Britian are in Washington seeking the best terms possible for the settlement of a four billion dollar account. We have a Secretary of State who is, in effect, Foreign Minister. Suppose he should inform the delegation that we could not deal with Great Britian on any basis looking to debt adjustment until Great Britian brought under control West Indian ports and admonished her shipmasters. Does anybody doubt that Great Britian would find a way to divert this part of her merchant marine to more legitimate channels?"

Surely there is some way to relieve a situation which has become openly and flagrantly disgraceful; if not in the way suggested above, then some other effective means should be employed at once.—Wesleyan Methodist.

"The Real Cure."—

The above is the heading of a circular letter sent out by Mr. Roger W. Babson. We have called attention to the writings of Mr. Babson and have been interested in the fact that he seems to have a spiritual conception of things that one would hardly expect in an active business man. In this circular letter Mr. Babson says he thinks at least two-thirds of the troubles of the world are spiritual, and he does not hesitate to say that many of our political troubles would immediately disappear if people really believed the religion they professed. "The relation between capital and labor, the struggle between nations, and the conflict between individuals depends upon whether or not the involved parties have the right spiritual insight. Physicians are also agreed that a very large percentage of our bodily ailments would be avoided if we were at peace spiritually."

Mr. Babson calls attention to the tremendous amount of interest which Coue has created by demonstrating the effect of mental peace on bodily welfare. Mr. Babson says that the gospel presented by Paul, which most people have heard preached from their childhood, contains all, and more, that Coue or any other scientist has ever offered. "The moment, however," says Mr. Babson, "that some one comes along with only a part of the story dressed up in scientific language every one hails it as a new discovery."

Mr. Babson thinks this is explained on the ground that a majority of people have come to look upon their religious activity as an abstract duty rather than a source of practical power. He thinks that even the ministry has lost sight of this most important phase of work. He thinks the ministers make mistakes in standing by and letting Coue monopolize the most valuable part of their work. The circular closes with these striking words: "It is true that the love of God is the only solution of our great troubles. When our churches really wake up and show people how to secure this great power we shall hear no more about the lack of interest in religion."—Ex.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. H. Russell Clem is pressing the work of the First Church, Greensboro, N. C., and so is Rev. C. C. Crutchfield in the Second Church, in the same city.

Is your Sunday School named in the list in this issue from Bro. C. H. Stephenson? Better look it up and see, and if it is not, then see that it gets in his next report.

Did you try your friend and neighbor as to subscribing to THE CHRISTIAN SUN? If you failed to do so on our last suggestion, do make the effort now, and let us know of your success.

The First Christian Church, at Raleigh, is rapidly taking on new life. There is work in abundance ahead of us, but we are doing things that are going to be worth while.—C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., says he expects to preach at Mt. Auburn, N. C., the second Sunday in March; Franklinton, N. C., the third Sunday, and to Pope's Chapel the fourth Sunday. Let friends circulate this announcement as widely as possible.

Where is the extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention to meet this spring? Will no Church ask for it? What is the matter with the Churches that none of them feel disposed to invite the Convention? It is not a large body, in point of members, and it will be in session at most only about three days.

Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C., writes to call out attention to the fact that we spelled the name of Mr. Marion Lawrence wrong in our recent reference to him and to Bishop Lawrence, that Bro. Lawrence spells, and prefers to have others spell, his name Lawrance. Very well, let us then spell it Lawrance.

Dr. Staley has a most excellent word on repetitions in this issue. Do let all those who criticise a minister for repeating a sermon now and then be sure to read what Dr. Staley says. But good things in THE SUN'S columns are many now-a-days. Read and see if we are not correct. You may think THE SUN is too high, but since December 1, 1922, to March 3 we have sent into the SUN'S office more than 250 articles.

If you are so anxious to have other people do something for the cause of the Christian Church, then show it not only by talking, but by doing. The doer of the Word is by far more to be commended than is the man who just talks and talks of the Church as well as elsewhere. Talk is very cheap when it is not backed by doing; but real doing costs not a little, and a pinch of doing is worth more than a pound of talk, just talking. Christians ought not to be caught in any such business. It discredits both the Church and the man who does it.

We are glad to report that Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Chapel Hill, N. C., is gaining in health, and while it is slow, we are profoundly grateful that he is improving at all. The burns on his hand and arm have proved to have been deeper than the physician at first thought they were, but even the burn is improving some. He is yet very weak and sits up but little. Mrs. Long, however, is hopeful of his early recovery. Let our brotherhood be often in prayer for this devoted man of God. It will be recalled, as announced in these columns last week, that Dr. Long recently suffered from a severe attack of vertigo, and that, in falling, his hand rested on the hot stove. This was the occasion of his burn. We all hope for his speedy recovery.

Germany is playing the part of the boy who broke into a house and stole many great and valuable possessions, and when caught, declared he could not pay for what he had taken, nor make reparation for the injury he had inflicted, and yet insisted that he should not be sent to jail. That is Germany's plea. She claims she cannot pay France for damages inflicted and she does not wish to be made to pay. There you are, and what it is to mean none of us can tell. France seems to be determined to make Germany pay, and many wish her success.

The article in this issue from the pen of Dr. Jas. L. Barton, foreign mission secretary of the Congregational Board of Missions, is stunning, and we believe it will be to all intelligent readers. The things that are taking place in Europe are astounding. It is hard to believe the facts as he gives them, but he is a man of real ability and of fine standing, and what he says as to the awful plight into which the Turks have plunged practically all Europe, and America, too, must be accepted as truth. As we see the situation, the success of the Turks in handling the allies is an awful shame upon all Christendom, as well as all civilization, and he says there is practically nothing that can be done to change the advantages they have gained except to go again to war. But do not miss reading his letter.

I have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN most of the time since it was edited by Dr. W. B. Wellons, and it seems to me, as I grow older it gets better. At any rate, the older I grow, the more I love the paper, and I must say that I enjoy its pages more now than ever before. I remember very well when you first took charge of it as editor, and now that you have come to be our editor again, it seems like old things are becoming new. Its pages shine brighter and brighter. I feel like I am a lifetime subscriber. —Hiram Freeman, Ether, N. C. Indeed, Bro. Freeman, you were one of my earliest acquaintances in the Old Deep River Conferences. Our associations have always been pleasant, and I am glad to get back to have you be one of The Sun's supporters. Not get back, for as I understand it, you have all the while, from the day of your first subscription, been its friend, and I am glad that you are no less so now, under its new management.

Men and Millions should be regarded as a sacred pledge and in so far as we can meet it, we should do so. Let us not dodge our duty and let us not miss our privilege by failing to pay what we promised to this good work if we can do it, even by some self denial. Bro. Atkinson (we believe it was) tells us of a pastor who had found once in his congregation a brother who had made a pledge to this good work, but later said he could not pay it—that he was not able, and yet he noticed that he did not deny himself of luxuries, but purchased them just as in the days when money was plentiful. That is to say, he could not pay the pledge he had made to the church because he was not able, but he could purchase almost any luxuries he desired, and not only could do it, but he did it. Now shall we be plain and tell you just what that man's conduct is, in so far as the report is true (and we take it that it is true)—it is a plain piece of hypocracy. Is that too severe? If he were not able to pay this pledge and would prove it by not buying the luxuries of life, then we could receive it as true and sincere; but, in so far as he cannot pay the pledge made for the support of the Church in its work for the cause of Christ, and yet can get any luxuries he may wish—well, please excuse us—it is a plain piece of hypocracy! Now, do not be offended with us, dear brother, for that would be adding another sin to that sin of hypocracy. We will tell you what to do: Go to God in prayer and repent of this wrong and then pay your pledge, as well as buy luxuries, till you can pay up your Men-and-Millions pledge, and then, having discharged your obligation, if you are real hungry for a little luxury, why buy a small bit of it, and stand right with your Lord and His Church.

The churches of Eastern Virginia are indeed fortunate to have the series of Christian Education Institutes, which are to be held at twelve different places in the Conference from March 17th through April 1st. These meetings are arranged by the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, with the cooperation of the Board of Christian Education of the General Convention of the Church, and the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention. The field secretaries of these two boards will be the speakers and leaders of the institute sessions. Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., field worker of Young People's Work, is one of the leaders in Christian education in the Christian Church, and in interdenominational work. He is an inspirational speaker who will be heard with profit and pleasure, for he has made several pervious trips to Eastern Virginia. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, of Richmond, Va., will have charge of the children's work, and assist in the institutes throughout the tour. Every worker in our Eastern Virginia churches should attend one or more of these meetings.

Some one has said: "Religion, like everything else of value, must be taught. It is possible to get more religion in industry and business only through the development of Christian education and leadership. With the forces of evil backed by men and money, systematically organized to destroy, we must back with men and money all campaigns for Christian education." We are glad to have part in every effort to promote the cause of Christ among the people. We believe in Christian education, but we also believe that teaching a person religion is much like teaching one how to swim. You can not teach one how to swim while he is out of the water. If you are to teach him to swim, he must cast himself into the water. So we believe if one is to be taught religion from the Christian standpoint, then he must get into the very atmosphere of religion through the New Birth, and then he can be taught the great and saving truths of Christianity. Let the first efforts in Christian education then be to see that the person to be taught gets into the atmosphere and spirit or religion through the New Birth, and then what he learns of real religion will mean so much to him. You cannot learn to swim while you stay out of the water, neither can you learn religion while you stay on the outside and know nothing of its saving power. If you wish to learn the truths of Christianity, then begin your lessons by learning and getting the New Birth.

Are you a member of the church? Yes. Well then tell us one other thing—Are you a worker or a talker? Now what is your answer to that question? If you are only a talker, then you can and most likely will do much harm? These men and women who are such great (?) talkers often do much harm by talking. If they could or would confine themselves to talking of legitimate matters, they might be a bit more excusable, but this is just what they do not, may be cannot, do, but the gossiping of a church member is something to be dreaded, for such one works much harm to the cause of Christ, as well as a great injustice to the people of whom they are talking. As a pastor we try to have one rule for all such people. We try to have it understood if you come with some scandal, then at once we ask you to face the people of whom you are talking and say to their facts just what you have said of them to others. We do not mean to allow any member of a church we are serving to go around talking of some scandal among the members without having the thing brought up and faced. If true, the guilty should be reremanded; if not true, the person who is doing the mischief should be dealt with at once. Let him or her face the music, and if they have wronged a brother or sister, let them at once apologize, or else be rebuked by the church publicly. It is a sin to go around retailing some nasty ugly story about some one when you do not know the facts. A loose tongue can do much harm and destroy much good. It is a shame that this thing is allowed to go to such lengths among our churches. This rule has worked well for the peace of a church and for the good of individuals who are at the mercy of evil tongues. We do not wish to dictate to other pastors at all, but we suggest the wisdom of a trial of this plan, if you are having troubles of this kind. You cannot put a stop to such work any too soon, and this plan has worked well, and we believe it will again, if it be given a fair trial. Will you try it?

Would you like to make some one in need happy? Then here is an opportunity. Bro. S. M. Ashmore, now in the Alkire Sanatorium, 1104 Kentucky Avenue, San Antonio, Texas. is in need. He is the victim of tuberculosis and is making a fight for his life. Four years ago he had "flu," followed by pneumonia. He was kept in bed for several months, and since then he has not been able to work, and naturally he is in need of help. By reading he has kept up with the general work of our people. He says he is improving slowly. He was reared in the Christian Church in Illinois, but after his sickness he went to Florida, but did not regain his strength. At last he went to San Antonio, Tex., in search of a better climate. He has not been near any of our churches since he came South, but has kept in touch with our general work as a people through reading. He is alone in the world, his father mother and brothers and sisters are all dead, and he is alone and sick among strangers. He is yet a young man, and while he has not asked us to make an appeal for help, we happen to know of his needs and we are therefore making known to our readers his needs. We have had the pleasure of helping him a bit, and believing there may be many who would be glad to brighten his life by sending him some help, we are letting his needs be known. He is making a brave fight for his life and we count it a pleasure to help him. If you can help him, yours is the opportunity, and we urge you to accept it. Address: S. M. Ashmore, Care the Alkire Sanatorium, 1104 Kentucky Avenue, San Antonio, Texas.

SIN.

The word that stands at the head of this article is quite distasteful to most people. It is a small word—just three little letters—but the thing it represents has wrecked the world, and brought to us death and all our woes.

Entrance of Sin Into the World.

How sin came into the world is a question that has been discussed ever since it began its work of destruction among the sons of men. We are perfectly satisfied to accept the simple Bible statement as to the beginning of sin on earth.

God created man in His own image, a sinless being, and placed him in the Garden of Eden. He made man a free moral agent, giving to him the power to will; that is, the power of choice. He gave him access to the trees of the Garden, all except the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. He forbade his eating of the fruit of that tree, attaching a penalty to the inhibition. Eve partook of the forbidden fruit, being tempted by the devil, who came to her in the form of a serpent. Of course, there are those in this day of advanced thought who think this story is mere "folk-lore," but it is given here as history, and we see no reason why it should not be accepted as such. Dr. A. H. Strong, one of the greatest theologians in the world in his day, accepted the Genesis account of sin and the fall of man just as it is recorded. Man did not fall upward, but downward. As Dr. P. S. Henson said once in an address at Meredith College, "When a baby reaches out his hand, it is not the monkey in him reaching for a limb, but the king in him reaching for a lost scepter."

What Sin Is.

One definition is that sin is the transgression of the law. That is only a partial definition. Transgression of the law requires an overt act, but sin begins before a being reaches the stage of development when he can be guilty of personal transgression. We inherit from Adam our sinful nature. David says, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." Dr. Strong says David is here not confessing his mother's sin, but his own. Adam was the federal head of the race, so "in Adam we all die." Before men become conscious they are sinners, because they possess sinful natures. Paul says, "I was alive without the law once, but when the law came sin revived and I died." That is, the germs of sin were there, but they were dormant until the child became conscious of sin, but when he reached the years of accountability the law showed him that he was a sinner.

There are many who object to the doctrine of original sin on the ground that it would not be just in God to hold a child accountable before he was old enough to know right from wrong. God in mercy has provided for the atonement of the sins of infants and those whose mentality is so low as to render them irresponsible for their acts. This takes away the charge of any injustice on the part of God.

When the law shows us what sin is—that is, when we reach the years of accountability—we are guilty of personal transgressions, and must pay the penalty of such transgressions. Sin has been well defined as "supreme choice of self, or selfishness." This simply means putting self above God, following one's own desire rather than submitting to the will of God.

Selfishness was the root of the first sin committed by our first parents. The appeal was a double one, there was first the gratification of appetite, and second the gratification of pride. The fruit was good to the taste and was to be desired to make one wise.

Sin is a far more serious matter than overt acts, as grievous as they may be. These acts are the fruits of sin, but sin itself goes down into our very natures and roots itself in our lives. In our natural state we are under the dominion of sin. "His servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or obedience unto righteousness."

Sin is represented as a king reigning in our mortal bodies. "That as sin hath reigned unto death so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord." Evil thoughts and such like things are put down in the catalogue of fruits of the flesh, and are attributed to the heart from whence they proceed. These evil habits are but the cords that bind and hold us in sin, and even if they be lopped off, that is like cutting off the limbs from a tree while the roots remain.—The Biblical Recorder.

THIS IS A GREAT QUESTION.

And every reader should be prepared to think for himself in considering it. If you listen to what Dick, Tom and Harry have to say, you may be greviously misled and come into trouble. We are told on every side that prohibition does not prohibit, but that is not half of what is said. If you do not keep yourself posted the liquor men will induce you to think that prohibition was adopted in this country contrary to the wishes of the great majority of the people. They say it was a war measure and that it was voted on us when a large per cent of our voters were in Europe where they could have no chance to express their sentiments as to the prohibition of the liquor traffic, but that is not half true, as you may see by reading the following statement of facts from The Presbyterian of The South. The statement is clear and we defy any man or any set of men to show that what is claimed therein is not true: Listen to what The Presbyterian says:

"Ignorant statements are often made about the adoption of the Prohibition Amendment. It is said that this law was put over on the United States as a war measure when millions of young men were unable to vote, because of being in military service. The fact is that before national prohibition went into effect, thirty-three States, with a population of 54,400,000 had already adopted State prohibition. Fifteen States, with a population of 48,000,000, still permitted the sale of liquor. But 39 per cent of the population of these States then lived in communities where they had local prohibition. In all forty-six States approved the amendment as presented to them, and only two failed, Connecticut and Rhode Island, with a combined population of 2,000,000. The great bulk of the people want to see the law enforced. It is up to them to see that this is done.

THE "AMERICANIZATION BULLETIN."

Published by the pupils of the Washington Americanization schools, the Americanization Bulletin, first journal of its kind in the world, has been successfully launched.

The purpose of the paper is to supplant that written in the native tongues of immigrants, which, circulating among them, retard their progress in the mastery of English. It is hoped it will bring closer union between Americans and newly arrived immigrants, and aid in the naturalization of the latter.

The first issue has been financed by the Richard Arnold chapter of the D. A. R. It is hoped, however, that succeeding issues will support themselves through advertisements and subscriptions solicited by the students. O. T. Moore, chief naturalization examiner of the District of Columbia, will conduct a column in the succeeding issues in which he will answer all questions on Americanization.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is expecting everybody to do his duty in trying to increase the subscription list. Every new subscription counts one more.

WATCH THE AVENUES OF IMMORALITY ABOUT YOU.

In almost every community there are certain avenues of immorality almost always open unless they are stubbornly resisted on the part of the good men and women who have the back-bone to see that they be not given the privilege of using the community.

One of the frequent sources of immorality is the county fair, or it may be just as likely, the State Fair. In all such institutions certain concessions are sold, often under a promise that no immorality shall have a place therein, but the unscrupulous fellows who pay for these concessions under a promise that no gambling or other immoral act shall be allowed, no sooner get to work, than they turn loose these immoralities and take in the poor people who do not understand the tricks of these unholy men, and literally rob them of their money. This should not be allowed. We heard recently of such an occasion, but the men who were in charge of the fair on this occasion, as soon as they found that these men had violated their contract, immediately made them quit this meanness and this should be done in each instance. More, these men when certain concessions are given or sold, should at once (on the opening) watch to see that no immorality is practiced or allowed in the fair. Otherwise the fair should not be allowed at all. Better stop a whole county or State fair and save the people from such bad men rather than let it go on. These men can be kept out, or be kept under the law, and every citizen should do his or her best to have it so. One of our exchanges puts it this way, and justly, too, we think:

State and County Fairs are held all over the country for the purpose professedly of benefitting the people, especially the farmers and their families. The Virginia Department of Agriculture in its Year Book for 1923 says on this subject: "It is an undeniable fact that many of the vulgar midways that haunt agricultural fairs and the traveling carnivals that prey upon the towns are a menace to good morals in the home. It is a fact—unpleasant but grimly true. Because of the presence of immoral midway attractions, many fairs advertised to be in the farmer's interest and many carnivals, boasting that they are 'under the auspices' of worth-while town organizations, are actually even worse than failures, from the standpoint of real helpfulness to the community. They are dangerous pest-holes of fraud and immorality. Fortunately, such conditions are not universal. There are fairs—State fairs as well as county fairs—where traveling midways have been excluded. They are making enviable contribution to farm community progress. These clean fairs are valuable stimulants to greater endeavor among the young folks on the farm. They exhibit results from good farming and stock breeding, and these object lessons encourage the farmer to seek information that brings good results in turn. All good fairs should be encouraged and sustained, and all those that do harm should be made to conform to those that contribute to greater endeavor and progress." The fact is well known that at some fairs gambling schemes and immoral side shows are the most prominent features. These fairs are usually held in the fall of the year. The Christian people of the country should take up the matter as soon as possible, so that they can enter their protest with the management of the fairs, before they make any contracts for the next fairs.

THE WORTH OF THE COUNTRY CHURCH

The country church is often talked about as if it were a straggling and forsaken orphan. But that is all wrong. The country church is no orphan, except as it may make itself so. God has given the country church a place in the rural community and it(the church itself) should see that it fills the place God has given it. There are likely many people, owners of farms who could not get half price for their farms were it not for the fact that the church is established in that community. Such men ought to be the best friends of the church in that community, outside of the church members, and for the reason that the church is of great value to them financially. They may not think so, but let them take the church away from the community entirely and then see what their property would be worth. Who wants to live in a community where there is no church? Alas, a man refuses to help support the church in the community on the ground that it is worth nothing to him, whereas, it is worth more to him than he thinks. Were there no church in his community when would he get a sale for his property, at what he considers its real value? He would not get it at all. Not only is the farmer or the owner of property helped by the presence of the church in the community, but there is not a citizen in the neighborhood who is not helped financially, to say nothing of the moral and spiritual community help the church gives the people of any neighborhood. It is time we were waking up and giving the country church a right estimate in the community.

The Presbyterian of The South says:

Country churches do not always get the consideration that they deserve, nor are they in as high esteem as they should be by city people. But the greatest lack of appreciation is often shown by country people. Speaking on this subject the Virginia Agriclutural Department's Year Book for 1923 says: "There is nothing that stunts and blights the growth and life of an agricultural community as a neglected country church. There are few men with families who would buy a farm in a community where they expect to live and be deprived of the blessings that go out from a living church. The people who live in a community without these advantages are depriving themselves of these important blessings which they can never afford to lose. Even outside of the personal religious need of a good active country church, the material help the church gives to every community is tremendous. It is obvious that the value of every home is greatly increased in the moral tone of the community. So help the country church. Keep the doors open the full year. If necessary, call on your city friends to help you. The country church helps the cities. Statistics show that three-fourths of our ministers and leading church members, the large majority of our doctors, lawyers, professors and leading business men are country-bred. The country is a great reservoir from which the cities are constantly drawing their brightest minds with religious training of the old-fashioned kind." The country church, no matter how small, should be alive and wide awake. It should have the best attendance that is possible by its membership. It should have the best Sunday school its members can conduct. It should be supported liberally by all those connected with it. Its building should be kept clean and well painted within and without. Its yard should be made as attractive as possible with trees and grass and flowers. The improved externals will help the community greatly. but they will help the church and its members far more.

A GRAIN OF WHEAT.

We have recently been reading a new book called, "Grain of Wheat"—it is from the facile pen and the great heart of Rev. Walter Benwell Hinson, D. D., pastor of the East Side Baptist Church of Portland, Oregan. It is really a book of sermons. However, you can take them as near the fire as you may wish—there is no danger of their catching fire, for they are not at all dry. They have the best juice of real meat, dripping from its pages, and if you are at all hungry, you may eat and fatten on the very marrow of the gospel. We have read many sermons, but not many have ever been so sweet and rich with the very cream of the gospel as is this book. If we had the means that we could spare, we should count it a privilege to give a copy to every man and woman who would agree to give it a careful reading. That will give you an idea of our estimate of the real value of the thirteen great sermons which fill the pages of this book:

The book takes its name from the first sermon based on John 12:24—

"Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

On page 6 Dr. Hinson asks a very thoughful question, as follows:

"Is he lacking in judgment who picks the first flowers of the spring-time, and says: "Thank God, the summer is coming." On page 7, we find a fair sample of the matter of the book, as follows:

"Yes, He saw the harvest; but He saw the seed sowing must precede the harvest. He saw the distant coronation; but knew the coronation depended upon cruciflxion. He saw the crown of eternal glory; but he knew the price of the crown was the cross. He heard the hoarse shout: To the cross! to the cross with Him! "And He turned and said, in His own matchless way, Except a grain of wheat—this grain of wheat—fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone."

On page 9, we read:

"Oh, I often wonder whether I am more pained at the indifference of the unconverted, or by the indifference of the unconsecrated; and I think the hurt that hurts steadily is the indifference of the people who will not be consecrated to God. To think of what you men and women could do if you liked. Oh, if you would just put brawn and brain and heart and money and time and talent and soul into the work of this church, you could make the church shine gloriously as the full moon, and be terrible to unrighteousness as a bannered army. You could make it the mouthpiece of God. But God have mercy on your intelligence, scores of you think that if you come to church on Sunday morning and hear a sermon, you have performed your full obligation to Jesus Christ for His dying blood on Calvary's bitter tree. And the odd quarter that you gave to further the purpose of His kingdom—you congratulate yourself upon the amount you gave (except when you are commisserating yourself that you gave anything at all). And the bane and the pain and the shame of this I verily believe has driven lots of men out of the ministry. They could not stand it any longer. It looked to be a no-good performance, an effort having no triumph or success."

We call that putting things in a strong light and in the light which the church is needing so much just now. But there is so much that is so rich, so helpful to the hungry soul, we scarcely know where to stop. Again he makes a point this way:

"And you will regret this unused life when your hair is the color of mine and you look back over your life, as I every week, look back over mine, you will be sorry for the grain of wheat that you chewed up between your teeth and swallowed and consumed, and how you will wish you had put it into the ground in Christ's name, where it would bring you a harvest."

Again he gets closer to the indifferent when he says on page ten:

"Oh, how you would cram these passing years full of eternal glory, if you would only dare to live the straight Christian life as Christ asks you to live it. You will regret it; yes, you will regret it some day. Perhaps never till, all empty-handed, you pass into Heaven and find there is nothing saved of you except your soul—lost everything else—all the years gone, all the privileges gone, nothing saved but your soul. And then how you will wish you had been among those who marched triumphantly up to the throne, bearing the marks of their conquests with them, to lay down great triumphs and glories at the crucified feet. Oh, how you will regret wasting your grain of wheat. And the way you abuse and wrongly use and consume this grain of wheat life is such a grief to Jesus Christ.

On page 17, in his sermon on The Bible Only God Could Write, he opens in a most unexpected way by saying:

"The tallest man of the Hebrew race is Moses. As he stands among Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Samuel, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, and Hosea, you see him first, for he is head and shoulders above them all. Such a many-sided genius was he that he was warrior and stateman, philosopher and poet, and the giver of the law of God. And yet this greatest of these great men sinned. Oh, the weary ages looked for someone who would escape that blight, but they looked in vain. Follow these men down from Adam to Malachi in the Old Testament, and they all sinned. Moses' sin kept him out of Canaan--not so much his general sinfulness, as one particular sin, a sin that looked so pitifully small to bring down such a mountainous curse! For he was angry with Israel—and who would not have been? He called them rebels—and they looked wonderfully like rebels. In his hastiness he uttered a few petulant words; and because of that, the longing of his heart and the ambition of his life fell in ruin about him, and he never led Israel into Canaan."

On page 24, referring to the Bible, he comes with a great burst of wisdom, enthusiasm and power and says something which we wish every minister in all the land could read again and again till he might come to believe it as the burning message of a true prophet of the twentieth century. He says: a man sent from God to awaken us all from unbelief:

"Oh, my friends, it is the Book God wrote. I never mind it when they tell me I am fossilized because I still believe in that Book; Thank God I do still believe in it! I have convincing reason for believing in that Book; and if any man in this city will take the spectacles of prejudice from before his eyes and read it, he too shall come to the determination that it is the Book which God wrote, because nobody else could have written it."

In every sermon the man grows eloquent and mighty in presenting the truth of God. The few extracts I have quoted from him can do no more than give our readers a very impefect idea of the power of this man as a preacher of the Bible, the Wonderful Word of God.

In the sermon on The Bible Only Could God Write, he breaks out in a sudden burst of eloquence, quoting from a poet in words that burn, and because they are so strong and so timely, we beg to reproduce them here, as follows:

"Oft when the Word is on me to deliver,
Lifts the illusion and the truth lies bare.
Desert or throng, the city or the river
Melts in a lucid paradise of air,—
Only like souls I see the folk thereunder
Bound who should conquer, slaves who should be kings,
Hearing their one hope with an empty wonder,
Sadly contented with a show of things.
Then with a rush, the intolerable craving
Shivers throughout me like a trumpet call;
Oh, to save such, to perish for their saving,
Die for their life, be offered for them all!"

WILL THE CHURCH UNDERTAKE THIS TASK OF CHRISTIANITY?

This is the day when some would be leaders in the church of Christ are ready to place almost everything upon the shoulders of the church, and then they forthwith declare that if the church cannot do this and that, as they have marked it out, that the church is a failure. Nonsense! The Lord Jesus Christ is the Head of the Church, and until the strength of God ceases to hold the world in His hands, all such talk is idle, for Jesus Himself has told us that he is building the church, and that being true the church is not going to fail—it is destined to gain a great victory over the forces of sin and darkness and a great triumph for Christianity. There may come some failures in the visible, or local church, now and then, but so far as the church of Christ failing that cannot be, not while God lives.

Of course there are great tasks for the church, but the Captain of her salvation is equal to the undertaking and victory will come—must come because God is in charge of this world; has been since He made it and will be till the last struggle has terminated in favor of the church. While all this is true, as we believe, there are some great burdens it seems wise that the church bear, and chiefly because there is no other institution capable of doing the work that is so much needed. The Western Christian Advocate has outlined with some care these four great tasks of the church of today. He may not have struck it just right, but at any rate these world tasks need to be undertaken, we know of no other force which seems able to assume the burden with any hope or prospect of accomplishing what seems to be so much needed.

Here is the way The Advocate puts it, and we believe the view given is well worthy of our best attention. We do not believe that Christianity will die, if the church should fail to undertake this task, but we do believe that the world will suffer terribly, if this work is not done, and since there is no other power equal to the task of undertaking this work, it is eminently wise for the church to consider it long and well before she says, "we will not undertake it." The ideas are timely and well presented, considering the brief space devoted to them, and therefore, it seems wise for us to give the same our best attention.

The Advocate puts it this way:

There are many religions in the world. Their number is decreasing. Many of them have survived, even though they are in the midst of a period when they are no longer growing. There are even some that still remain though dead. It is becoming the common consensus of opinion that Christianity is to be the world religion. There is none other in sight upon which men can depend for this service to humanity.

Christianity seems virile, aggressive, and is slowly conquering the peoples of the world. But the task before it is so great, so extensive, that unless Christianity is a supernatural religion it cannot hope to survive.

There are at least four irreducible international sins that gather forces in all quarters of the globe. They must be controlled and reduced by religious forces or they will mark the future ruin of the ideals now possessed by that element of the race believing in Jesus Christ.

These four sins may be regarded as major and deadly. They menace the future of the international life of humanity.

The first is political injustice.
The second, economic exploitation.
The third, racial discrimination.
The fourth, subservience to material gain.

From the viewpoint of a Christian this group of closely-associated interests in wrong-doing must be disposed of before Christianity can claim to have made progress worthy a spiritual and world religion.

The task is drawing nearer. The time of the assumption of responsibility is at hand. The church of Jesus Christ must be ready. May the hand of him who would discourage and belittle the opportunities that appear to assist the church in preparing for this task be palsied ere the day overstakes us unaware.

That Christianity is the world religion cannot very well be questioned, unless the man who questions it is an out and out unbeliever. That the four tasks named are too much for any other institution known to man, we think cannot be denied, and therefore if the work is to be undertaken, it seems that the Church is the only help, under the blessings of God, that can at all handle these tasks, and even the church would be a complete failure, if she did not have the God of the Universe to back her in the effort. That each of the four great tasks, if accomplished, would become a great forward movement for the saving of this world through Christ. At any rate let us think about it, and as the Spirit may lead His church, so may His church be brave and strong to dare and to do.

Brethren, remember, as far as you can, that you should send money for THE CHRISTIAN SUN directly to the publisher at 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va., and not to the editor. When it reaches the editor, it is still a long way from the Richmond office. It is liable to be delayed and mistakes are more likely to occur. Please send your money to the publisher, as above, and not to the editor, as we have no charge of any of the financial affairs. Our work is purely and only with the editorial department.

Be sure to give attention to the report of the Sunday Schools which contributed last Children's Day. It is from Bro. C. H. Stephenson, the Treasurer of the Board. He finds that only thirty-eight schools took part last year, contributing $216.97. Now he asks for 100 schools to take part this year, and he asks that these schools raise on an average of $5 apiece, making $500. It can be done if our pastors and superintendents will take hold and induce the schools to help. Let us do it. Of course, many schools can give more than $5, but that will be needed to make up for some which give nothing. Not to get these schools interested and to help is not only doing the cause an injustice, but it is doing the schools a great injustice. Let every school help, and do it well.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Repetition is often condemned, especially the repetition of a sermon; and I wonder if ministers are not too sensitive to such criticism to repeat sermons that should be repeated. Sunrise and sunset are repeated daily and have been from the beginning. The seasons are repeated. The cultivation of the same fields is repeated. Music is repeated. Sleep is repeated. Eating is repeated. Thought is repeated. Prayer is repeated. The Lord's prayer gains by repetition. The Communion is repeated—"Do this as oft as ye do it in remembrance of me." Courses of study in colleges are repeated. Habit is the result of repetition, and the greatest pleasures of life are in the field of habit; and more, the mightiest human forces are in the field of habit. That is seen in the prayer of Daniel, in spite of the decree of King Darius. He "prayed and gave thanks before his God as he did aforetime"; that is, as his habit was. His prayer habit was stronger than the king's decree. In this force of habit is a great danger and a great value. The prayer habit, once formed, is a great spiritual asset in Christian life; the neglect of the prayer habit is a great spiritual loss.

Occasional church attendance has little value for the individual and less for the church. The habit of church attendance can be cultivated until it becomes a real pleasure to attend; it can be neglected until it becomes irksome. The excursion train has little value; it is the train going and coming, on regular schedule, that renders service to mankind. It is the regular habit of giving to the Lord, the system that counts in the kingdom. Spasms may excite interest for the moment, but regular service keeps the store open, the mill grinding, the school going, and the worship spiritual. To give ten cents per Sunday is better than to give five dollars and twenty cents at the end of the year; weekly payment of church dues keeps the matter on the mind and in the heart. Church finances would prosper if all members would give, and give systematically. It is not the large sum, but the little sums, that represent the liberality of the church. The retail stores sell most of the goods. "Little drops of water, little grains of sand." The "Men and Millions" pledges are largely in small subscriptions. They can be paid by paying a little at a time. Those who have formed the habit of paying these pledges will keep on to the final payment. Japanese dentists pull teeth with their fingers; but if they ceased cultivating this habit and used forceps part of the time they would lose the finger-strength to do this work. The impelling force of life is habit. Jesus, "as His custom was, went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day." Everything is hard till it becomes a habit; all is easy when it is a habit. No Christian is safe or useful until Christian habits are cultivated; then both are assured. Does your habit take you to Church, Sunday School and prayer meeting and make you think of your gifts to the Lord? W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

The alumni of a college are its hope and also its fate. Elon has graduated with bachelors' degrees 441 in thirty-two years. She has enrolled several thousand who studied for a greater or less time. We were planning to make a complete list of all students who had ever enrolled here and print it in a special bulletin, but the fire has destroyed our records. We are endeavoring now to collect catalogues and bulletins from the beginning, and hope from them to construct the list. Any one who reads this letter and has an Elon catalogue of any date is requested to mail it to me.

But I set out to tell in what splendid manner the Elon Alumni have rallied to Mother Elon in the misfortune which overtook her on January 18th. On that day Mr. G. C. Donovan, the alumni general secretary, addressed the saddest letter ever mailed from the college to its alumni, telling of the destruction of the hallowed old administration building. He did not ask the alumni for money, but they knew it would be needed, and immediately cash and pledges began to arrive. Only a relative few have contributed, but their contribution is an inspiration and an earnest of what the united alumni can and will accomplish. The gifts have ranged from $5 to $10,000, and all of them have registered the donor's love and devotion to the college.

Aside from the Alamance County Alumni, and aside from the faculty members who are alumni, the following persons have so far volunteered their assistance to their stricken alma mater: Havilah Babcock, J. W. Barney, J. C. Barrett, W. J. Ballentine, Miss Curtis Beeam, E. M. Betts, P. J. Carlton, B. J. Earp, Miss Bettie Ellis, Mrs. J. B. Gay, Mrs. S. R. Gay, H. S. Hardcastle, C. C. Howell, J. D. Messick, Miss Gertrude Minniear, D. F. Parsons, Jas. C. Reid, E. H. Rainey, Mrs. J. C. Robertson, Miss Annie Staley, Mrs. J. B. Stephenson, Mrs. M. A. Billiard, H. Shelton Smith, R. O. Smith, Miss Hattie E. Brown, R. C. Causey, R. P. Crumpler, Miss Margaret Iseley, E. S. Johnson, Frederic T. Jones, W. L. Maness, G. C. Mann, C. P. McNally, Miss Bertha Paschall, Miss Margie Perry, Miss Susie Perry, Miss Annie Raper, J. Wallace Rawles, Miss Ethel Royster, Miss Irene Stephens, Miss Maggie S. Taylor, Miss Fannye Mae Wellons.

The total of these gifts in cash and subscriptions is $13,030. The faculty gifts were more than this total by $220, and the alumni in Alamance gave very liberally. This is but a beginning, but it is a good one and promises larger things for the future.

Before this letter is printed, the Alamance County gift of $100,000 for the administration building will have been provided for in cash and subscriptions. It is now up to our people to complete the larger Elon program. They will do it.

TO THE FRIENDS OF BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

Permit me to express to all of you my appreciation of your hearty co-operation offered me in assuming the weighty responsibility that falls upon me in trying to fill the position formerly held by Rev. R. F. Brown, of Columbus, Ga., in connection with the above-named college. Brethren, I accept this position, realizing the "bigness" of the job, and the "littleness" of the man.

I am fully aware of the seriousness of the proposition and could not, nor would not undertake it until I have fully committed myself unto the Lord, and as I feel that I have done this, I now most humbly ask the prayers of my brethren and the friends of the college, that success may attend the efforts of my life. I shall do my best to make the business go, and under the blessings of God it will succeed.

Let us all put "Bethlehem College" on our prayer list. Pray for it every day. Pray for the board of trustees. Pray for the building committee, and also for the financial agent. Pray for the children of the Christian Church, for unto these we look for leadership, and we must have a place in which to train them for the glory of God and the good of man.

I shall begin active work March 1st, and will try to meet every church on their regular meeting days, and spend as much time as will be necessary in making the canvass.

First, I want 100 men in the Alabama Christian Conference to give $25 each within the next three months for Bethlehem College, 500 men to give $10 each, 200 women to give $10 each, 400 women to give $5 each, and, greatest of all my wants is to get 500 children under fifteen years of age to give $1 each per year for the next five years; in fact, all the pledges will run through a period of five years.

I can but think of the prayers of the sainted men and women of our dear Church who prayed so earnestly that this day might come. God grant that their hopes may be realized.

G. D. Hunt,
Financial Secretary.

WHAT WILL THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION DO FOR ITS YOUNG PEOPLE?

The greatest factor to be considered in maintaining our Church membership is the Sunday School. By far, the larger per cent of our members, and nearly all our workers, must come from this source. If our Church is to live and grow it can set itself to no greater task, and none that promises a greater reward, than the enlarging and making efficient our Sunday Schools. If we fail in this, our Church will fail.

According to the report made at the Burlington Convention, we have 26,084 Church members and 21,767 in the Sunday Schools of the Southern Christian Convention. We must increase this number if we would build our Church membership.

However, building a Sunday School is something like building a large patronage for a store—it must be accomplished by giving something worth while. We must adapt our buildings to the work, and officers and teachers must be trained for their tasks. Classes and courses of study must be arranged to meet the needs of the different ages, and the school itself must be an intellectual and spiritual force. Other denominations are doing this, and other things being equal both young and old will go where they can get the most advantages. Therefore, whether we want to do this or not, we must do it if we are to survive as a Church.

The Church must spend means and energy to accomplish this. The Board of Religious Education has been doing some effective work along this line, through its field secretary, Miss Lucy Eldredge. We have maintained a bureau of information at our Richmond office. We have kept our secretary in the field much of the time. We have conducted institutes and vacation Bible schools. We have tried to make the schools effective, but means are lacking to do our best work. The financing of this department is one of the problems that must be faced and solved by the brethren at the coming session of the Convention. The work must be enlarged and put on a permanent financial basis.

We need more workers during the Vacation Bible School period, and there must be some funds for the maintenance of the Chautauqua.

If the future of our beloved Christian Church means anything to us, we must care for our young people. We must do as much for them as other denominations. In other words, we must do our best, and the future development of our Church is assured. W. T. WALTERS.

HOLY NECK HINTS.

Brother White writes to Brother Abe, saying that the reason his pastor doesn't report to the Church paper is because there is nothing to report. Well, bad roads and cold weather tend to keep the pen of the rural pastor silent about things his Church is doing.

The struggle to keep a few live coals about the altar and thus keep the home fires burning is the principal item of importance until better roads and fine weather call forth the reserves.

With friend Coue, we have courage now to say that "Every day, in every way, it is getting better and better."

On New Year's Sunday, forty members of the congregation made a resolve to read their New Testament through with us the next six months. After six weeks we inquired at a regular service as to the progress being made. Six reported they had already finished the first reading and had started to reread this most wonderful story.

One lady who read the book through is now reading it aloud to her husband, who cannot see to read, that he may have credit, too. Five more have joined the forty and severel others who have not made the resolution publicly are joining in the reading. One thing we wish to emphasize in this Scripture reading is the memorizing of choice verses.

A very helpful thing, at opportune times, in our various services, and in the home at mealtime or at the evening or morning devotion, is to recite from memory choice passages of the Scriptures.

The writer had the privilege of conducting a service at the chapel hour of the public school recently and a call for memory verses from the Bible was met with a splendid response. This was most gratifying. We might add here that the Holland High School is now offering a thorough course in Bible instruction, a course outlined by the State Board of Education, for which credit is given. About twenty pupils are taking the course at present and the teacher is a former instructor in the school, living near the town, and very thorough in her work. She is not paid by the school authorities, but by friends and patrons of the school, as school funds are not allowed to be used for religious instructions.

Virginia not only permits the Bible to be taught in the school, but allows credit for same to the extent of a year's work, or two presented courses. There are three courses outlined—two on the Old Testament and one on the New Testament—endorsed by Protestant, Catholic and Jew. Of course the Jew does not endorse the New Testament course. Yet we learn that very few schools avail themselves of this privilege. The initiative would seem to be with the patrons of the school. If Christian friends fail to take advantage of this opportunity, can they any longer criticise the State for failure to give religious instructions?

URGES RELIGIOUS SCHOOL INVESTING.

BY ROGER W. BABSON.
(By Permission.)

It is evident from the newspaper dispatches that attempts are again being made to stir up trouble in Mexico. First, we hear that Obregon is very ill and then that Esteban Cantu is planning an uprising. Recently in New Orleans, Roger W. Babson has talked with men who had seen Obregon within a few days. Mr. Babson outlines the situation as follows:

"It is true that Obregon still has trouble with the stump of his arm which he lost during the revolution. He has even considered going to the Mayo Bros. Hospital at Rochester, Minn., where some of his associates have been, to see what can be done for it. Otherwise, Obregon is in fair physical condition and as I am preparing this statement he is on a trip of inspection at Vera Cruz.

"The oil situation is a great factor in Mexican politics. Obregon is between the devil and the deep blue sea. If he conforms with the wishes of the United States he gets into trouble with his own people. He certainly cannot satisfy his own people without getting into trouble with the United States.

Combine With the Worth While.

"A study of Mexico is additional evidence that a nation to be prosperous must be founded on religion and education, and that one is useless without the other. There may be honest doubts in the minds of many as to whether the people of Mexico have either of these fundamentals. Granting, however, that her people have a primitive form of religion given them by the priests who are so numerous in Mexico; the fact, nevertheless, remains that the people themselves are living in ignorance.

"Cathedrals, churches and the ringing bells cannot help having some good influence; but religious teaching soon results only in a developing of superstition unless this religious teaching is combined with worth-while education. An unlearned man may with religion become a great power for good, but he does so not by remaining in ignorance and filth. Religion that is worth while shows itself in developing industry, cleanliness and a desire for knowledge.

"Education supplies the tools with which people may work, but religion determines the purpose for which these tools shall be used. Natural resources or political power in the hands of men not actuated by sane religious principles makes a very dangerous situation.

"Lack of real religion in Germany was the cause of the great World War, and lack of real religion on the part of some of her neighbors is now the cause of Europe's chaotic condition. There will be not permanent peace in Europe, Mexico or any other part of the world until the leaders and a sufficient portion of the people have both real religion and education.

Many Schools for Religion.

"In view of these conditions, let me say a word for many small colleges and schools scattered throughout the world. These are honestly striving to give useful education to the people and at the same time inculcate the religious principles. This insures that education shall be used along right lines after it is required. These institutions of learning are largely being fostered by the home and foreign missionary departments of our great denominational bodies.

Most of these colleges and schools are doing very valuable work, and they are the best investment the business man can make. I care not, Mr. Reader, whether you are Protestant, Catholic or Hebrew If you want to be of real service to the world, go to your pastor, priest or rabbi, and ask him for the name of some progressive institution of learning which is giving to the poor people of our own or some other country a sane religious education.

"A man is justified in accumulating a certain amount of money necessary to take care of his family after his death. Statistics, however, clearly show that many children have been ruined by being left too much money. Many readers of this statement know in their own hearts that the best interests of their children require that no more money should be laid up for them. Many fathers are now in a position where if they have the best interests of their children at heart, they will not allow their fortune to accumulate any larger. I say this most seriously and considerately.

"All of us are in a better position to render service in our business after we have accumulated a fortune than before. This means that we should continue in business and continue to make profits. A business that does not make profits is usually one that is not rendering service. Thus, the question confronts many successful men. What shall be done with the profits?

"My advice to such men is that they help establish institutions that are giving in this or other countries a constructive religious education. If you can give only small amounts, select young people to educate or give scholarships to those institutions. If you cannot bother with details, make contributions to the endowment funds.

"General business is holding at 12 per cent below normal in face of unsettled industrial conditions. The fact justifies to an increased improvement in the morale.

"If the Interstate Commerce Commission is able to put through a program allowing substantial reduction of rates on heavy commodities, further improvement may be expected."

Oh, Yes, We Are Getting Better (?)

They say the country is getting better, Oh, so fast, and yet, and yet! What are the wild facts saying? An exchange gives us the following outcropping of one month in one city—Philadelphia:

It is reported that there were 659 sudden deaths in the city of Philadelphia, the "City of Brotherly Love," during January. According to the coroner's verdict, 39 committed suicide. Thirty-nine in that city "let go" and took their own lives rather than face the difficulties of life longer. No doubt each one of them faced situations that were hard to meet, but it is unspeakably sad to think of poor, tired, suffering men and women in the "City of Brotherly Love"—draw your own conclusions. But listen to the coroner again: "Three hundred and seven died from being poisoned by drinking moonshine liquor." Can he prove it? Three hundred and seven dying in one city in one month from drinking moonshine liquor! And if that be true, what of the greater number who must have suffered from drinking the poisonous stuff who did not die? And the Voice reports that during recent months 125 prohibition enforcement officers have been shot to death by representatives of the liquor traffic and 2,500 have been wounded by these outlaws. How long shall these things last before the American people decide that the laws of the land, including the prohibition laws, shall be enforced?

Dr. J. G. Holland, of Holland, Va., was the first man to send check to help buy car for mountain work. The Sun is printed at Richmond on Thursday, and he mails check from Holland on Friday, the following day. Brother Holland made two impressions on me as to himself—first, that he reads The Christian Sun; second, that when he is impressed to do a good deed, he does not wait. Thank you, Brother Holland. Statement of the amount of check will be made in The Sun later. Who will be next?

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

FOR HIS SAKE.

I believe that all Christians should tithe and teach titheing, not alone for their sakes but for the sake of Him who gave all for us. He would have us regard some matters at least as holy and sacred. A seventh of our time, the Bible teaches, is sacred unto the Lord, and a tenth of our earnings. We may not always regard these as holy and sacred, but God does. And when we desecrate the Sabbath or decline to pay tithes, we rob God and injure ourselves. God made no moral and spiritual law which was not in keeping with the highest and best economic law. God knew that man could do more for self betterment and progress, and even earn more by working six days and keeping sacred the seventh than he could by working all of the seven. He likewise knew that man could save and have more of his own earnings by giving a tenth to the Lord and receiving nine-tenths for himself than he could by keeping the ten-tenths. God did not make the law of the tithe for man's impoverishment, but for his enrichment, both spiritually and physically. There lies before me now a letter from a widow whose testimony is sure and in keeping with God's Word. When she in prayer and study of the Word decided to tithe, the Devil told her that she could not do so and support her four fatherless children on nine-tenths of her income. She testifies, however, that she commanded Satan to get behind her and that she would take God at His word. Since that day and decision she has every reason to believe that God has blest her, and the results of her decision have been most gratifying. Thousands can give like testimony.

In a gathering of several ministers and interested laymen recently I heard Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., give his own experience in the matter of tithing. He was a long time in coming to it. He was not sure that it was required. He had not thoroughly convinced himself that he could strictly carry out the law even if he sought to adopt it. However, a few brief years ago he became thoroughly convinced from a study of God's Word that it was God's will and God's way, and he resolved that come poverty or come want he would obey the Lord. He testified that from the day of that decision to this good year he had not only had occasion not to regret but had rejoiced many times over the Lord's blessings in most unexpected ways. A degree of prosperity has attended his efforts in his endeavor to support and educate and care for his family, and then he had been able to put many, many dollars into Kingdom services even from his modest earnings. That the decision had been one of the happiest of his life and had proven one of greatest blessings to him, not only materially, but spiritually, and that every day he rejoiced in the thought that a given portion of all that comes into his hands would be used for the advancement of his Redeemer's Kingdom.

I do not urge tithing on a material or bread and butter or business basis. I do not believe we should estimate the tithe in that way. I believe we should study God's Word and convince ourselves that it is God's will for us and that His will for us is far wiser and better than our own wills for ourselves. We seek the spiritual and get the material by forgetting the material and physical. Tithing should not be a matter of boasting, of form, or of ritual, of obedience to our Lord's command and in keeping with the plain teachings of His Word. When we tithe for our dear Redeemer's sake, and not for our sakes only, blessings come in a hundred unlooked-for ways. If the people of the Christian Church would adopt, not some scheme of their own, but our Lord's plan, we would find ourselves working together and with Him to the great advancement of His Kingdom as entrusted to us and to the great spiritual enlightenment and uplift and progress of all of us.

J. O. Atkinson.

SURELY! SURELY!

A certain pastor said a while ago that while some of his people could not pay their Men and Millions pledges, he had noticed that when they wished anything for luxury or comfort they had or obtained the wherewith to purchase it. I wondered then how such persons would interpret this scripture: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Brethren and friends, are we learning and practicing self denial, or are we still cultivating self indulgence and the gratification of multiplying wants?

During the prosperous days financially of three and four years ago we greatly developed our taste for luxury and self indulgence. The church at that time sought to counteract the evil influences of such indulgence by putting on great campaigns for funds with which to do Kingdom service. One of those campaigns is our Men and Millions. Verily this is a blessing even in disguise, for if we would now meet our moral obligations and pay our pledges we must to a degree curb our increasing inclination to luxury and self-indugence. They tell us that in the last ten years North Carolina has spent more money on automobiles and gasoline than it has spent in two-hundred and fifty for all school and church purposes. This is not preachment against automobiles, but is a fact which shows that we get the money to secure the things we want most. There is no end to man's wants, and as a rule every superfluous want that is met creates two others at least in its stead. There is no sadder comment of any civilization than that its wants for indulgence and comfort multiply more rapidly and become more powerful than its desire to meet its material and legal obligations.

No, we cannot pay our Men and Millions pledges out of our surplus and abundance. If so, we would get no blessing and no benefit. Blessings and benefits come from self denial and the holding in subjection our desires to gratify self. "Whosoever shall lose his own life for my sake and the gospel shall find it," said Lord Christ. And as we lose our desire for self indulgence, in the deeper desire to meet our material obligations and do our duty in Kingdom service we find a new and richer life in Christ Jesus.

A FORWARD STEP IN CHRISTIAN UNITY.

By President W. A. Harper, LL. D.

Another step—or stride—in the onward march of Christian unity was registered on February 20th-22th at the first meeting of the Executive Committee of the New International Sunday School Council of Denominations and the International Sunday School Association.

This meeting was held in Chicago and the leaders of the denominations and the field forces to the number of over three hundred tendered a reception to the new International Secretary Hon. Hugh S. Magill and his good wife.

The Christian Church was represented by Mr. Herman Eldredge of our new Department of Christian Education, who served on the committee in the absence of Rev. H. Shelton Smith who was unable to attend.

Mr. Marion Lawrence and Mr. W. C. Pearce were among the speakers at the opening meeting which was composed of representatives of over forty denominations of the United States and Canada.

Mr. Eldredge was placed on the Editorial and Adult Committees and rendered service on the general sessions of the Executive Committee.

The basis of cooperation and promotion among the denominations was fully discussed and entered into in a Christian spirit which means much for the future of Christian Education in America and in the world.

The great outstanding paper of the session was presented by Dr. Hugh S. Magill the new General Secretary and which was approved as the "Basic Principles" underlying the program and policies of the new International Council. The following is a copy of these principles:

Basic Principles Underlying Program and Policies of The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education.

By Hugh S. Magill, General Secretary.

1. The only hope for civilization lies in a knowledge and application of the principles of the Christian Religion.

2. Christian ideals can best be made dominant in life and character through the Christian nurture and training of childhood and youth.

3. It is axiomatic that what you would have in the life of a nation must be incorporated in its system of education.

4. No educational system can produce the highest type of character and citizenship without religious training.

5. The appalling prevalence of crime among youth makes it imperative that some influence shall be used to bring about the right motivation of the rising generation. The experience of centuries has proven that the Christian Religion is the most dynamic force in the world for the development of sterling character and right conduct.

6. The separation of the church and State is a fundamental principle of our Government, but this does not mean that the State can get along without the church, nor the church without the State.

7. The fathers of our country recognized this when they declared that religion, morality and knowledge are necessary to free government and to the happiness of mankind. Washington declared that religion and morality are indispensable to national prosperity, and that national morality cannot be maintained without religion.

8. In a nation which guarantees to every person the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, the Christian Religion cannot be vitally taught in a tax-supported system of schools.

9. The State should provide an efficient system of general education; the church must provide an efficient system of religious education.

10. Such a plan in no wise interferes with religious liberty; it is fair and equitable alike to Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic.

11. Through the International Sunday school Council of Religious Education, the Protestant Christian Churches of America propose to establish and carry on through cooperative efforts, which shall in no way interfere with the programs and policies of each denomination, an efficient system of Christian Education on behalf of these Protestant Christian Churches, granting to Jews and Catholics the unquestioned right of doing the same for the children of their faiths.

12. The purpose of this great forward movement in Christian Education is twofold; to train the youth of our country for a life of serving and good citizenship, and to bring them into the church, and through obedience and service to the Master save them for a life eternal.

A movement founded on such sound principles and having such worthy purposes should command the support of every God-fearing man; of every loyal citizen. The future of the Christian Church is dependent upon a membership intelligently Christian. The future of our Nation is dependent upon a Christian citizenship. Love of God and the up-building of His Church, and love of country and the conservation of America's highest ideals, are back of this nation-wide movement for Religious Education. Clear-seeing men and women in every walk of life are ready to give it their support. What more patriotic service can be rendered than to train up the youth of America in an intelligent understanding of the Bible; in reverence and obedience to God and His eternal laws; and in respect for justice and right in all the relations of life as exemplified by Jesus Christ. The far-visioned statesmen of today recognize, and frankly concede, that the hope of the world lies in the application for Christian principles to the solution of the complex problems, national and international, that confront us.

BREAKING DOWN THE BARRIERS TO PAN-AMERICANISM.

By Samuel Guy Inman.

The calling of the Fifth Pan-American Conference to meet in Santiago, Chile, in March, 1923, offers the greatest opportunity ever presented to the American continent to break down the barriers which have divided the American nations for more than a century. I am gravely concerned with the evidence that reaches me from day to day that large companies of Latin-Americans in the twenty southern countries are growing more prejudiced against the United States. The most-talked-of Latin-American at the present time is Gabriela Mistral, the Chilean poetess. She is now visiting Mexico as the guest of that government, and from there will visit several other Latin-American countries. In an article which has been published in every Latin-American country, she says that there are two things which must unite Hispanic America. First, the beautiful Spanish language; and second, the pain caused by the United States. She refers, of course, to such acts as the taking of Panama, the occupatio nof Haiti and Santo Domingo, and the commercial exploitation and threatened invision of Mexico. Several of the most distinguished literary men of these southern countries now head great publishing concerns in Spain, where they are managing a campaign of Pan-Hispanism, calling upon the Spanish-American republics to stand together for common protection against the encroachment of the United States.

Over against this discouraging situation we can, of course, place the remarkable rise of continental consciousness in America during the World War. When I returned from an eight months' trip through South America in 1917 I reported the doing away with old prejudices against the United States and the development of a frank enthusiasm for continental solidarity. This came particularly because of the idealism shown by the United States in the war. Rapidly developing commerce has also brought these countries nearer together. The educational exchange between the American countries has also greatly advanced understanding and friendship. North American professors who during the last ten years have visited Latin-America have brought into the colleges and universities of this country a new appreciation of the civilization of Latin-America. The constantly increasing flow of Latin-American students to this country has had an even more important effect.

The large number of philanthropic and missionary enterprises supported by North Americans have greatly increased Latin-America's appreciation of the idealism of North Carolina. It is no mistake, however, to say that the belief in North American idealism, so rapidly developed during the World War, is now waning.

The struggle between Pan-Hispanism and Pan-Americanism is most vital to the rest of the world. It is bad enough to have a divided Europe; a divided America would mean the elimination of much hope for the future of civilization. Will the Fifth Pan-American Conference be able to bring all America closer together?

The first Pan-American Conference was called by the United States, Secretary Blaine leading, in 1889. It occupied about eight months in discussion and adopted one treaty on arbitration which was never approved by any government. The establishment of the Pan-American Union was the one practical step. The second Pan-American Conference was held in Mexico City in 1901. It approved about seven different conventions, but few were adopted by the governments. The third Pan-American conference was held in Rio de Janeiro in 1906, when Secretary Root made his famous trip to South America. An agreement to arbitrate pecuniary claims and other commercial treaties were signed. The fourth conference was in Buenos Aires in 1910, and adopted several conventions concerning such subjects as patents and trade-marks. Latin-America desired to discuss political questions involving the protection of the sovereignty of the American nations. But the United States negated this effort. As a means of developing a larger acquaintanceship and understanding of mutual problems, the conferences have done much good.

During the thirteen years intervening between the Buenos Aires conference and the one to convene at Santiago, the world has greatly changed. Latin-America has grown remarkably. Latin-America in 1910 had no friends, speaking internationally, but in 1923 she is furnishing the president of the assembly of the League of Nations and two out of the six elected members of the council of the league and two of the eleven judges of the international court erected by the league.

The agenda at the Santiago conference is to be enlarged. Uruguay has insisted that the question be discussed concerning an American league of nations. It is easy to see the many questions involved in such a question—America's attitude to the world league, a definition of the status of the Monroe Doctrine, a determination of the status of the small states like Haiti, now under control of the United States, conditions under which American governments shall be recognized, etc.

Two other topics of especial interest to the churches because of their relationshio to international peace are the codification of American international law, and disarmament. The latter subject will bring on a hard fight. There has been tremendous excitement throughout Latin-America in the last few months because of the appointment by the United States of a naval mission to Brizil to help Brazil build up her navy. Argentina says that we are denying all that we proposed to do in the disarmament conference.

Still another question which interests the churches is the consideration of measures to secure the progressive diminution in the consumption of alcoholic beverages. It is very significant that Latin-American countries are interested in having this matter thoroughly discussed.

The President of the United States has appointed the following delegates: Henry Prather Fletcher, American ambassador to Belgium; Senator Frank B. Kellogg, of Minnesota; Senator Atlee Pomerene, of Ohio; former Senator Willard Saulsbury, of Delaware; George E. Vincent, president of the Rockefeller Foundation; F. C. Partridge, former United States minister to Venezuela; W. E. Fowler, of Washington, D. C.; Dr. L. S. Rowe, of the Pan-American Union, and J. Butler Wright, of the Department of State, secretary of the mission.

We should do all possible to impress our delegates with the importance of making the conference count for building political and social co-operation. The churches should follow closely the proceedings of the conference.

A recent meeting called by the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches took action which effectively summarizes the concern of the churches in the issues invilved in the coming conference. The resolution reads:

"We urge that in connection with the coming Fifth Pan-American Conference, our nation do all in its power to cultivate amity and friendship with the Latin-American nations and so to prevent the development on our continent of the spirit of distrust and suspicion that has led the European continent into its present morass. We, therefore, urge that our delegates to the conference make every effort to promote practical co-operation among all American countries, to dispel the impression prevalent in some Latin-American quarters that the United States might use its economic or political power in impairing the sovereignty of any Latin-American nation, to press for the largest possible reduction of armaments, and to develop adequate machinery for the peaceful settlement of all questions that may arise between our own nation and our neighbors of the South."

Such a program effectively carried out will show the way to peace and good will among the republics of the Americas.

SHALL WE HAVE UNIFORM MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE LAWS?

Capper's Weekly gives the following facts in support of the bill recently introduced by Senator Capper to secure uniformity in marriage and divorce customs throughout the United States:

13,000 girls, age 15 years, legally married.
50,000 girls, age 16 years, legally married.
Christian Sun Galley No. 6
1,000 boys, age 15 years, legally married.
3,000 boys, age 16 years, legally married.

No minority age limit for marriage in 17 states.

Legal marriage age for girls, 12; for boys, 15, in 9 states.

No prohibition of marriage of feeble-minded in 19 states.

Inherited diseases of children of marriages, now legal in most states, cost $50,000,000 a year.

Divorce, not obtainable on any plea in one state, is granted in another on mere evidence of bad temper on the part of either husband or wife.

The virtual impossibility of securing the enactment of uniform divorce and marriage statutes by the legislatures of the several states.

RECOVERING A LOST BOOK OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

By Rev. Willmore Kendall.

(Note—We have repeatedly called attention to the neglect of the book of Revelations, and notwithstanding it is the one book of the Bible to which is attached a promise of special blessing for reading it, or even hearing it read, and yet how many church members never give it a moment's attention. They do not read it, nor do they give it any real study. To all such, as well as to the general reader, we call special attention. Not only so, but we urge our pastors to give this book the most careful study and make an effort to interest their people in the study of this book. We made the effort to interest a congregation in the study of the book of Revelation, and the interest was fine and the people seemed surprised that the book had so much in it that could possibly be of such general interest as to awaken their love for the book. The message is there, and it only needs the earnest study of the man and the help of the Holy Spirit to get the book to shining with its own light. Let us give careful attention to Mr. Kendall's article from The Christian Admvocate.—Editor.)

There is one book of the New Testament which the average Christian has ceased to read. For all practical purposes, it might as well be omitted from the copies of the Bible which are now being printed,for it would not be missed. This neglected book is "The Revelation of St. John the Divine." Even its name has become distorted into "Revelations," an utterly meaningless nickname. And yet it is the one book of the sacred canon which explicitly pronounces a blessing upon those who read its sayings, and in the experience of the present writer it contains spiritual nutriment for the devotional life in richer measure than any other New Testament writing outside the Gospels. The disuse into which the Apocalypse has fallen is due to no hidden want within the book itself. It is due rather to a total misconception as to the true character of the book on the part of the average Christian. And the misuse to which it has been subjected by prosaic literalists has also contributed to tear it out of the Bible from which most of us read from day to day. It is the purpose of these paragraphs to suggest a new method of approach which will make the Bock of Revelation an inexhaustible fountain of encouragement and consolation to the every-day Christian.

The Church has long stood in need of a great Christian poet who should set his hand to the task of writing a commentary on John's Apocalypse. The book has long suffered seriously for want of an appreciative interpreter. This is due to the fact that the Apocalypse, though not written in metric lines nor riming stanzas, is, nevertheless, in its scope and method an epic poem, and its deepest meanings and purest beauties can only be apprehended by an intensely poetic mind. Robert Browning could have written a most illuminating commentary on this message from the exile of Patmos. Like Browning's own vast epic, "The Ring and the Book," John's Revelation sets forth the same great truths again and again from many standpoints and in an ever-changing form. Some of the finest passages in Dante's "Divine Comedy" are drawn from this book, and Milton must often have turned to its pages for inspiration and suggestion while writing his "Paradise Lost."

The most striking feature of "The Apocalypse" is the abundance of poetic symbolism which it employs. There is the symbolism of nature, the hailstorm, accompanied by lurid lightnings and vocal thunders, and followed by the appearance of an emerald rainbow encircling the throne of God. There is the symbolism of strange living creatures wrought from the material of a vivid and undisciplined imagination, mystic and wonderful. Here again are emblematic colors and mysterious numbers running through the entire vision, adding to its strangeness and mystifying the Occidental reader. Prosaic interpreters have found in these symbols a detailed portrayal of the subsequent history of the world. They tell us that John here previsioned the rise and decline of the papacy, the discovery of America by Columbus, the development of the United States, the French Resolution, the Russo-Japanese War, and the great world conflict out of whose maelstrom we have just emerged. The Millennial Dawnists announce on the authority of this book that the end of the world occurred in 1914. One extremely original and facetious commentator back in 1912 discovered that the beast who arose out of the sea (Revelation xiii), having seven heads and ten horns, foreshadowed the appearance of Theodore Roosevelt and the Bull Moose party. There is a Presbyterian minister in Western Oklahoma (formerly a member of the West Oklahoma Conference) who undertook to anticipate the course of events during the World War with this book as his guide. Unfortunately, the war could not be induced to harmonize its course with this brother's advance prospectus; but of course all such absurdities tend to bring the Apocalypse itself into disrepute and ridicule. Yet all this is, after all, only an outgrowth of wrong principles of interpretation.

Concerning the details of future history, John on Patmos knew no more than you and I. But there were revealed to him those changeless principles which underlie all history and which must continue in immutable operation until the eternal purpose of the ages has found its sublime consummation in the universal redemption of the race. These basic principles of history John, the philosopher of the New Testament, shadows forth in the mystic symbols of his Apocalypse, and only when we come to view the book thus as a poetic representation of eternal truths can its meaning become clear to us.

"The book of Revelation," says William M. Clow, "is neither so dark nor so perplexing as many suppose. If men would read it patiently and be less eager to turn its symbols into realities and its figures into doctrines, if they would ask only its moral and spiritual significances and leave its material fulfillment greatly alone, the strangest and most pictorial chapters would be to us, as they were to the early Christian Church, a well of consolation whose waters would never fail."

It is in this spirit that we must come to the study of this last book in our volume of sacred writings if we would gather from it a beneficent influence to calm our souls and tranqualize our minds and hearts in these troublous, restless times that have come upon the earth. Coming thus, we shall see with John that, while storm and conflict rage about us here, God still reigns supreme over all. We shall catch the ever-recurring theme of this book like the haunting theme of a Wagnerian opera, "God's in His haven! All's right with the world." And we shall come from an hour spent in reading its reassuring message with the sentiment of one of our modern poets singing itself through all the corridors of our lives:

"Roll, ye waves, mountain high,
Dash your foam to the sky;
There is calm in the heart of the sea.
And I wait through the storm
For that glorified form
That will walk on the waters to me
Tomorrow."

HARRELL-BOONE.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the Christian Church, Durham, N. C., and Miss Alberta Boone, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Boone, were married at 7 o'clock in the evening of February 22, 1923. The new pews for the Christian Church did not arrive in time for the marriage, First Presbyterian Church kindly offered to open their doors, and there the marriage ceremony was performed in the presence of a large congregation. The decorations were elaborate; the music, consisting of organ, quartet, and solo, was very fine, and the bridal party, handsomely dressed, made a brilliant array of young life and social taste. An interesting reception was given at the Boone residence, where a generous luncheon was served and a social hour enjoyed. The weather was ideal, the occasion was a happy one, and the united pair slipped away on a bridal trip as yet unknown, with wishes for them as sweet as the flowers that shed their fragrence over the Church and the home. W. W. STALEY.

Harrell-Boone Wedding Was Lovely.

Centering the cordial social interest of hosts of friends throughout the State, was the marriage of Miss Alberta Boone and Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, which was solemnized last evening at 7 o'clock, at the First Presbyterian Church. Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., officiated in a most impressive manner, and the ceremony was witnessed by a large assemblage of friends and relatives. Mrs. N. T. Yancey rendered a beautiful selection of wedding music during the assemblage of the guests, and played the wedding march from Lchengrin, announcing the approach of the bridal party. Just before the ceremony the bridal chorus was sung by Miss Jane Turner, Palmer Constable, and S. P. Alexander, of Greensboro, and Mrs. Clarence Webb sang "Love's Old Sweet Song."

The church was elaborately decorated with palms, ferns and smilax. The altar was banked with stately green palms, forming a background for tall white pedestal baskets of Easter lilies, the handles of which were adorned with tulle bows. Candelabras held tall white cathedral candles.

The seats reserved for the family connections were marked by white standards of Easter lilies, tied with white satin bows.

The ushers, Stephen Cannady and G. V. Massey, entered first. Next came the groomsmen—Grady Pritchard, Waldo Boone, Marion Saunders, and Beall Faucette. Then came Miss Ruth Johnson, who was lovely in an exquisite gown of turquoise blue satin trimmed with heavy silver lace. Miss Carmen Jones entered next wearing a gown of violet satin, trimmed in silver lace. Miss Margaret Heflin, who entered next, was beautifully gowned in tangerine satin, trimmed with silver lace. Miss Margaret Keyes came next, wearing a lovely gown of Nile green satin trimmed with silver lace.

All of the attendants carried cascade bouquets of Ophelia roses and valley lilies.

The flower girl and ring-bearer, Miss Henrietta Harrell and Master William Harrell, then entered. Miss Harrell wore a dainty dress of white tulle over satin and carried a basket of pink roses. Master William Harrell wore a black velvet suit with a lace collar, and carried the ring on a white-satin pillow.

The dame of honor, Mrs. W. H. Boone, mother of the bride, then entered, handsomely gowned in silver-gray crepe, with a corsage of lavender sweet peas and valley lilies. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, Dr. W. H. Boone, was met at the altar by the groom, Rev.

Stanley C. Harrell, and his best man, Jasper Harrell. The bride was lovely in a gown of white satin trimmed with Princess lace and embroidered in pearls. She wore a coronet of tulle on her hair, caught with orange blossoms. She wore a shower bouquet of orchids, roses and valley lilies.

Mendelssohn's wedding march was played as the bridal party left the church.

The charming bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Boone, and is a graduate of Trinity Park School, and Elon College. She has a host of friends here and throughout the State. She is quite active in church and philanthropic work, being a member, with her parents, of the Christian Church. Rev. Harrell is a graduate of Elon College and the Union Theological Seminary. He served as chaplain overseas. Although he has only been in Durham for two years, he has a host of loyal friends here. Rev. Harrell is pastor of the Christian Church.

Immediately following the ceremony, Dr. and Mrs. Boone entertained at a reception at their home on Cleveland Street in honor of the bridal party, the out-of-town guests and their family connections. The house was very prettily decorated with growing plants, ferns and palms being used with lovely effect about the rooms. Bowls of roses and hyacinths were placed on the mantels and tables and a refined, artistic taste was apparent in all the arrangements.

Little Miss Mildred Harrell received cards at the door. Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Pritchard received in the hall, which was lovely in its decorations of smilax and white roses. Mrs. Clarence Webb was at the cloak-room door. The living room had as a color scheme pink and green. The mantel was banked with a mass of green smilax arranged with pink roses, and pink unshaded tapers. The receiving line was composed of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Boone, Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Harrell, Miss Ruth Johnson and Grady Pritchard, Miss Carmen Jones and Marion Saunders, Miss Margaret Heflin and Waldo Boone, Miss Margaret Keyes and Beall Faucett.

Mrs. J. P. Avent and Miss Lelia Moring received at the dining-room doors. The color scheme of the dining-room was white and green. The chandelier was showered with smilax and white sweet peas tied with graceful bows of white tulle. The table was covered with an exquisite cloth of cluny lace and had as a centerpiece the bride's bouquet which was a shower bouquet of orchids, valley lilies and roses. Silver candelabra held white candles. On one end of the table was a handsome silver service from which Mrs. Beall Faucett poured coffee. A salad course, sandwiches, cake, nuts, and mints were served by Misses Margaret Moring, Grace, Helen, Myrtle, and Margaret Pritchard.

The out-of-town guests present were: Miss Ruth Johnson of Cardenas; Miss Margaret Keyes,; Miss Clarence Judd, of Raleigh; Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va.; Professor Floyd Staley, of Greensboro; Mrs. Hattie Tenille, Greensboro; Mrs. Jasper Harrell and daughters, Misses Mildred and Henrietta, of Norfolk, Va.; and Mrs. Percy S. Harrell and son, William, of Suffolk.—Durham Herald.

THE JOY OF GIVING.

"The greatest fun I have I extract from my giving," said a Christian who is not only giving of his means to the Church, but also of his services. Why should it be otherwise? Who that calls himself a true follower of Christ will dare to doubt the absolute truth of His words, that it is "more blessed to give than to receive"? If more blessed, then more pleasurable and satisfying. And yet there seems to be considerable skepticism among Christians on this point. Giving, whether it be money or service, is done from a sense of duty rather than from a sense of genuine pleasure. Many pay their Church dues very much as they pay their taxes to the State. They are "dues" in the cold, hard sense in which we look upon debts. They are obligations which rest upon the mind as burdens which we dislike to think of and are anxious to be rid of. We once asked a Church member who loved nothing better than to spend lavish sums for clothing to beautify her body whether the Church dues which we saw her place in her envelope gave her as much pleasure to put into the Lord's treasury as the costly coat she had just bought. Her surprised look gave the answer where her lips refused to make the confession, that what she spent upon herself was more truly pleasurable than what she gave to the Lord. The thought was as new as it was startling to her. It is a question that puts giving to its acid test for Christians to ask themselves whether they really extract more joy from giving than from receiving.

Would the boards of the Church be harassed with debts and with the painful necessity of allowing the Lord's work to suffer for lack of workers and of funds if Church members thought more of the joy of service and of giving and less of the burden of meeting apportionments? Why should giving be painful? Dare it be, can it be, painful in the case of any one who loves the Lord Jesus, whose whole life was one continuous offering up of himself for the world's salvation? Not to find joy in giving is to miss the most satisfying pleasure a Christian can have. It is in fact an index of a defective spiritual state. It reveals an absence of that Christ-like love which must spend and be spent in the service of the Master.

No wonder sometimes whether in the making of appeals for the Church's great causes enough stress is laid on the joy and the privilege of giving, whether we are presenting it as a measure of the love we bear for Christ and for the precious souls for whom He died. To doubt that there is joy in such giving is to doubt our Christianity and to confess that we do not love our Lord. Love is the great motive power in all the benevolent operations of the Church, and love is like an imprisoned force which pines and dies unless it is given freedom of exercise. It wells up from the heart like a fountain and sends forth its waters in perennial streams to refresh and gladden. It is twice blessed; it blesses him that takes and him that gives. To love is to give, and to give is to love, and where is there a joy that can compare with that which springs out of love?—The Lutheran.

COMFORTERS.

There are persons who wondrously comfort us. They stand by our side, and we know instinctively that their friendship is real. They may have little to say, they may not be gifted with the talent of uttering beautiful and appealing sentiments, but we are assured that their spirits are in unison with our spirits.

Genuine comforters draw their inspiration and strength from Christ. The comfort the world offers is a very cheap nostrum, but there is power in the words of real consolers. They have the spirit of Jesus in them. The gentleness and sympathy of the Master are expressed through them.

The greatest comforters of all are those disciples of Jesus who have borne some of life's heavy burdens and have suffered some of its heart-breaks. Having walked where the shadows are heavy, they are able to enter closely into the feelings of those who are oppressed with gloom.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

March 18, 1923.

Subject: Jesus Crucified.—Luke 23.

Golden Text: "He was wounded for our transgression, He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed."—Isa. 53:5.

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 53:3-11.

Reference Material: Ps. 22:1-21; Mark 15: 22-41; John 19:16-30; 1 Cor. 1:23, 24; Gal. 6:14.

Jesus, in Gethsemane at prayer, brings the lesson of the Master's submission to the will of His Heavenly Father, that the world might be won to Him. But at Calvary, His spirit of supreme love for mankind is revealed. For us, He hung and suffered and died there. For us, He was willing to pay the price of sin. And in return for His very great love and courageous endurance of pain and ridicule for us, He only asks that we love Him, and "Trust in His redeeming blood, and try His works to do." This is the climax of the whole Bible, the hour to which all preceding events are directed, the hour which gave man salvation, the most precious hour in all history to devout Christians.

The events of Calvary can never be related in mere words adequately. The meaning of the crucifixion must be learned by coming to the foot of the cross, and there, in love and trust and consecration, become a vital part of the life. Dr. Edgar Whitaker Work expresses the very heart of this lesson when he says: "Can the power of the cross of Jesus ever be stated in words? It is plain that it has powerfully moved the heart of man. Its shadow in fact has fallen far out across the centuries. It has become a moving fact in the history of many nations. At the foot of the cross, the most ardent hopes of men have been born, the most determined purposes of good have originated. The cross has transformed men in all ages, has produced countless heroisms, and has raised up a vast army of believers, devoted to the cause of Christ. His representatives have gone into all the world carrying the banner of the cross, and wherever the story of Calvary has been told, like results have followed. What was at first a symbol of defeat, even disgrace, has become a symbol of victory. Throughout the centuries, thousands and tens of thousands have exultantly sung: 'In the cross of Christ I glory.'" So is the power of the cross revealed. It is still shedding its influence abroad, and only in its power, are men safe. The apostle was able to say: "I have been crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me; and that life which I now live, in the flesh, I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself up for me." Does the cross have that meaning in your life?

"Are you serving Him who died for you?
Are you true to Him, as He is true?
From your glad allegiance, nevermore to swerve,
Are you saved, saved to serve?"

Dr. Alexander Whyte tells the story of a man who dreamed that he saw Jesus tied to a whipping-post, and a soldier was scourging Him. He saw the whip in the soldier's hand, with its thick lashes studded here and there with bits of lead, which were intended to cut into the flesh. And as the soldier brought the whip down on the bare shoulders of Jesus, the dreamer shuddered when he saw the marks and the blood-stains it left behind. And when the soldier raised his hand to strike again, the dreamer rushed forward intending to stop him. As he did so, the soldier turned around and the dreamer recognized—himself. The men who scourged and taunted and crucified Jesus Christ seem most cruel and heartless. But their attitude is still that of many people today. They deny Him when it may mean, they fear, loss of money, or rank or prestige. He is crucified anew when His children sin and depart from the Jesus ideals of living. Human selfishness brought Jesus Christ to the cross on Calvary. Human selfishness is still causing Him sorrow and pain. In what group would you have been found on that crucifixion day, with those casting lots for his clothing or ridiculing Him as the King of the Jews, who could not save Himself, though He had saved others, or with that group whose hearts were heavy, as they stood by helpless in the Jewish mob? All of these groups are still existing. Where are you today?

"There is a green hill far away,
Without a city wall,
Where the dear Lord was crucified,
Who died to save us all.

We may not know, we cannot tell,
What pains He had to bear;
But we believe it was for us
He hung and suffered there.

He died that we might be forgiv'n,
He died to make us good,
That we might go at last to Heav'n,
Saved by His precious blood.

There was no other good enough
To pay the price of sin;
He only could unlock the gate
Of Heav'n and let us in.

O dearly, dearly has He loved,
And we must love Him, too,
And trust in His redeeming blood
And try His works to do.

—Cecil F. Alexander.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

March 18, 1923.

Factors for Making the World Better: How Can we Help?—Matt. 5:13-16.

Thoughts on the Topic.

"Ye are the salt of the earth." Good salt has three uses: 1. It brings out the flavor. As food is insipid without salt, life is monotonous and meaningless without Christ. Christians carry into the lives of others influences which make life worth living. 2. Salt saves. It is one of the strongest preservatives used. Thus the Christian helps to save the community. An infidel in a New England village refused to allow a church to be built any place near his property. Several years later he sold at a great sacrifice his farm, because he said that the community was too immoral to be safe for his children. That village needed the saving power of the church and its members. 3. Salt creates thirst. Does your Christian life make other people thirst for the gospel? "Ye are the salt of the earth!"—Verse 13.

The salt which does not flavor, nor save, nor create thirst, is of no value. It may as well be thrown out of the door. So the Christian whose life is not making the world better and safer and more Christ-like, is failing to fulfill his mission in life.—Vs. 13.

The purpose of a light is to shine and brighten up the dark spots. "Ye are the light of the world." Your business is to shine.

"Shine, shine, just where you are;
Shine, shine, just where you are;
Out of the night, into the light,
Shine for the Lord where you are."

—Verse 14.

Light is synonymous with good, dark with evil. The world will become better, as the lights of Christian lives shine more brightly. No light is hidden in the home, and so no Christian light can be hidden if it is to be effectual. Why are many Christian lights shining so dimly?—Verse 15.

"Let your light so shine." How shine? That they may see your good work? Yes, and more than that, for your good works must point unmistakably to the Father in heaven. Good works which are most acceptable in the Father's eyes, are those which are done in the name of Jesus Christ, and point others to Him.—Verse 16.

A minister, noted for his most eloquent sermons, moved to a new field of labor. Later he had the opportunity to visit the church which he had once served. "Does your new pastor preach the sermons as eloquently as I"? he asked a very intimate friend. This was the answer: "When we heard you preach, we went away saying 'What an eloquent preacher we have!' Now when we leave the church, we say, 'What a wonderful Saviour we have'!" Here lies the test of all of our Christian work. Does it call attention to ourselves, or to the Christ? Does it win merely the applause of men, or the approval of God? The people of old heard John speak, and they followed Jesus. Can you talk and live and work so that people will think of Jesus, not of you?—Verse 16.

"Joyous in the service of the King of Love,"
Let His blessed banner be unfurled;
Spread afar the sunshine of his wondrous love,
Help to make a happy world."

—Elsie Yale.

Plans for the Meeting.

Abraham Lincoln once said: "Let us decide what we want to do, and where we want to go, and then we can decide how to do it and how to get there." Discuss what we mean by a "better world." What does it mean to you? A world full of pleasure, or wealth, or work? "To Jesus, a better world meant a world where everybody knew about Him, openly confessed Him, and learned day by day all the things that He would teach them." Can there be any higher ideal of a better world than a world where righteousness reigns? Consider carefully the question whether, or not, this would be a better world, if Jesus Christ really reigned throughout the world. When you have decided the meaning of a "better world" you are ready to decide upon your part, the part of your Christian Endeavor Society and the part of your church in reaching your ideal. An informal debate on the following query will bring out helpful suggestions: "Resolved, That as a Christian Endeavorer, I have a definite task to perform to help make the world better."

Ask a church leader, or one who is especially interested in community betterment, to submit to the Society at this meeting at least one very definite way in which the Society can begin to make the world better. Carry into practice your prayer meeting discussion.

Have members discuss the following means of making the world better: Law-enforcement, evangelism, education, missions, Christian home life, supervised play and playgrounds, Christian officials, justice in business relations, the Golden Rule in every-day practice.

Songs to sing: "Take Time to be Holy," "The Victory May Depend Upon You," "My Very Best for Jesus," "Carry Your Cross with a Smile," "Work, for the Night is Coming," "Tell Me the Old, Old Story."

Close with a brief period of silent prayer and one verse of "Take My Life and Let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee," sung softly.

Religious Education Doings.

An Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society, with eleven active and two honorary members, was organized February 20th in the Newport News Christian Church. Miss Virginia Tyree is the President, and Miss Virginia Rilee the Corresponding Secretary. This is the first Intermediate Society to be organized in Newport News, and the third Christian Endeavor Society in the Christian Church there. The Junior and Senior Societies are active and doing splendid work. Rev. B. J. Earp is the pastor of this "Christian Endeavor Church."

The first issue of the new Journal of Christian Education, published by The Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, will soon appear, the initial number being for April. President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, will be the editor, and associated with him will be a board of editors, all of whom are expert in their lines. There will be departments of Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, College Life, personals and means and methods of work all along the line of Christian Education. This magazine succeeds The Teachers and Officers Journal, which has been issued quarterly for the past twelve years. Every one of our pastors and workers needs this monthly magazine. Send in your subscription today so that you will receive every issue.

The Christian Education Institute in Eastern Virginia will begin March 17th, and meetings will be held every day through April 1st. The schedule has been planned in order to give workers from all of the churches an opportunity to attend at least one session, and the officers of the Sunday School Convention, who have planned and made possible this series of meetings, hope that workers will make a special effort to attend every session possible. At each church two sessions will be held, one at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and one at 7:30 at night. The afternoon session will be devoted largely to the discussion of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor problems, as they are met in the churches of Eastern Virginia. A Children's Hour for story and song will be a feature of each afternoon meeting. The meetings at night will be rallies, when Mr. Hermon Eldredge, field secretary of Young People's Work of the Christian Church, will make the principal address. Mr. Eldredge needs no introduction to many of our Eastern Virginia people, and those in charge of the institutes are very glad to announce that he will spend these two weeks in the conference, representing the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church, which was elected at the Burlington convention last October, to promote all of the educational work of the church.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, Wadley, Ala., writes that Christian Church is planning to observe "Men and Millions Day" in the Sunday School on the third Sunday in March. Sickness in the community made it necessary to postpone the meeting until this date. It is to be hoped that other schools will follow the example of Christiana and observe the day at the first possible opportunity. Write to the Field Secretary for leaflet and suggestions. Over 4,500 of these leaflets have been requested and distributed during the past few months, and many letters have been received, stating that they have been most helpful in presenting information regarding the work and principles of the Christian Church. A few more of these leafllets are available by writing to the office of the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

MARY'S NEW FRIEND.

Once upon a time a girl named Mary was six, and being six means going to school, so Mary was very glad indeed to be six.

The very first day she made a new friend, whose name was Lucia. "You say the middle part of it like 'cheese,'" she told her mother.

The second day she brought Lucia home with her to swing. The third day she went to Lucia's house to swing. The fourth day she lent Lucia her doll. The fifth day she had some of Lucia's pop-corn, and the sixth day the dancing bear nearly parted the new friends.

Do you think I mean that the dancing bear ate up one of the children? Dear me, no! He was gentle, as gentle could be.

Do you think I mean that he danced away with one of the friends? Well, nearly! Listen and I will tell you what happened.

The dancing bear was dancing on Main Street. Mary's aunt telephoned her to come to her house and watch him.

"May I stop for Lucia?" asked Mary, as her mother fastened her coat.

"Yes."

"I couldn't go without Lucia."

"You needn't. Tell her mother that auntie will look after you both."

"If Lucia can't go, I shan't. I guess I like Lucia better than a dancing bear," said Mary, importantly, as she kissed her mother good-bye.

How her feet danced down the street and around the corner! Surely no dancing bear could dance faster! She danced into Lucia's house, in a second the door was opened, and she nearly danced into Lucia's arms, for there stood Lucia with her coat and hat on, coming out.

"Oh goody!" said Lucia.

"I just came to get you," said Mary.

"To see the dancing bear?" asked Mary, dancing on her toes.

"No; to show me where your doctor lives," said Lucia.

"But my doctor lives just the other way from the dancing bear," said Mary.

"But our baby is sick, and we haven't got a telephone, and mother says I must get the doctor quick," said Lucia.

"Then you go to the doctor's and I'll go to see the dancing bear," said Mary. "He lives on the street just next to my street in a red house."

"But I'm afraid to go alone," said Lucia.

"I don't know the doctor. I couldn't go without you, Mary."

That sounded familiar. Mary remembered saying to her mother, "I couldn't go without Lucia."

"Of course I'll go," she said. "We'll run all the way, and then we'll go to see the dancing bear."

They did run all the way—and the way afterwards to Mary's aunt's. But the dancing bear had danced out of town by that time.

Mary did cry a little when she told her mother.

"Never mind, dear," her mother comforted. "All the dancing bears that ever danced aren't worth a friend's happiness."—Pilgrim Elementary Teacher.

NO SHIP TO BE WITHOUT A BIBLE.

A few days ago the press announced that Captain A. E. Matthews of the HATTERS, one of the vessels of the United States Shipping Board, Emergency Fleet Corporation, had died at sea and that there was no Bible on board for use in the burial service. In response to a call by wireless from the HATTERS, the Captain of the PRESIDENT ADAMS, another vessel of the United States Shipping Board, sent a portion of the burial service by wireless to the HATTERS in order that the body of Captain Matthews would not have to be committed to the sea without some form of Christian service.

Dr. George William Carter, General Secretary of the NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY, after inquiry from the shipping authorities in New York, sent word to Mr. J. B. Smull, President of the Emergency Fleet Corporation at Washington, D. C., offering to furnish Bibles for everyone of the vessels of the Shipping Board. President Smull's courteous reply has been received at the office of the New York Bible Society, No. 5 East 48th Street, expressing much appreciation of the generous offer and sending a complete list of the names of vessels operated by the Shipping Board. There are about 400 of these vessels. The Bibles are to be lettered on the outside in gilt with the name of each ship, and will be delivered within a few days.

As a result of the announcement that there was no Bible on the HATTERS the Society has received requests to furnish Bibles for many other ships and as this is in direct line with the regular work of the Society, all of these requests are being filled. One of the missionaries of the Society, Rev. Wiliam G. Jones, has been visiting the ships which come to the Port of New York for more than forty-eight years and he regularly visits more than 300 vessels each month carrying the Scriptures.

Christian Orphanage

AS THE GOOD WORK MOVES ON.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

We have had some inquiries about the size of sheets, I want to say that we use sheets, quilts and pillow cases for double beds. I truly hope our good women will send us all we need at least two hundred.

You remember I told you in a recent letter that I had one other offering I was going to ask the good women of our church to make. Here it is: Little dresses for the little girls from four to twelve years of age and little suits for boys of same age. Last year we called for little Easter dresses for the girls and we received the sweetest response to that call that we have ever had. They came from the north, the south, east and west. They came by one's and two's and in some boxes they came by the dozen. They came till we had two hundred and fifty five. All the little girls had new Easter dresses, and all the little boys had new suits and they were happy and delighted.

I received many sweet letters telling me how much joy they had in making the dresses and how delighted they were to have the opportunity to help make the little children happy.

To make a little gingham dress is a small sacrifice, but when several hundred good women make just one and they all come in it means a great big blessing to us in this work of love and charity—We know we will not be dissapointed this year in this happy offering which we feel sure our good women will enjoy so much.

Our first Christian Sunday School, Greensboro, N. C., sends us their monthly offering this week for $26.45 this places Greensboro second on the list for this month. Our Burlington Sunday School has stood at the head of the list for two years making an average of more than $50.00 per month. Our Greensboro Church is wide awake and are making fine progress and we congratulate them on their fine work.

DETERMINED BY THOUGHT.

A man's thought determines the moral climate of his life, and will settle the question whether his conduct is to be poisonous marsh or fertile meadow, fragrant garden or barren sand. The pose of the mind determines the disposition, and will settle whether a man shall soar with angels in the heavenlies or wallow with swine in the mire. What we think about the things that are greatest will determine how we do the things that are least. What are your primary thoughts about God? The prints of those thoughts will be found in your courtesies, in your intercourse, in the common relationships of life, in the government of commerce, in the control of the body, and in all the affairs of home and market and field.—J. H. JOWETT, D. D.

It seems that Congress is at last with great reluctance coming to the belief that the best thing they can do with Muscle Shoals is to rent the plant to Henry Ford. Fertilizer manufacturers did everything in their power to prevent the lease of this plant to Ford, but the farmers have been almost a unit in urging Congress to accept Ford's proposition.

We have believed all the time that the best thing the Government could do with the great plant at Muscle Shoals was to lease it to Ford, who promises to use it for the benefit of the farmers, converting it into a nitrate plant and furnishing nitrate much more cheaply than it can be bought from the manufacturers of fertilizer.

UNFRIENDLY ONES.

In "Abbottsford," which is a fascinating biography of Sir Walter Scott, there is an entrancing chapter on "The Wizard's Farewell." The latter days of Sir Walter were spent in pain and great financial distress. But in that self-same period he wrote "Ivanhoe." "Be assured," says the great Scottish novelist, "if pain could have prevented my application to literary labors, not a page of 'Ivanhoe' would have been written; for from beginning to end of that production, which has been a good deal praised, I was never free from suffering." We have noted that the world's greatest characters rise from unfriendly zones. The world won't quit asking, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth"? The sweetest songs are born in hours of deepest agony. When the astronomer trains his telescope on stellar worlds, he first puts out the lights. More than ever, this old world needs the man who laughs at the impossible. Even in his tragic fight against encroaching paralysis, Sir Walter Scott declares to Giles: "The best way is, if possible, to triumph over disease by setting it at defiance, somewhat on the same principle as one avoids being stung by boldly grasping a nettle."—MARVIN J. NICHOLS.

LIVING TOGETHER.

It is not with inferiors that the strain comes—it is not there that duty is most difficult—it is in the circles where all stand alike, and are on the social footing of equality. I think that even in the band of the disciples we may discern the truth of this. The last lesson which they seem to have learned was the lesson of living harmoniously together. It was not so difficult to be loyal to Jesus. It was not so difficult to bless the poor. But what was difficult, right to the very end, was to live together without quarreling.—G. H. MORRISON.

PRAYER.

"Our Heavenly Father refresh us, we beseech Thee, in our inner lives with a deepening consciousness of Thy great love, that our souls and the God-given things around us may not be dull and dry. In and through our bitter experiences and dark days, manifest thyself to us, that in the end there may be comfort and joy. Kindle our hearts with the fires of Thy love and warm our souls to a heavenly hope and comfort. By Thy love lift every sinner from the shame of sin and the sadness of death until all hearts shall melt in prayer and praise and divine love. Hear us, for Jesus' sake. Amen."

"Made perfect through suffering." This is the mysterious explanation of the glory of Christ. It was the Christ "for whom are all things, and by whom are all things," who, in bringing sons unto glory, thus suffered unto a human perfection. There is comfort here for those who yet suffer for others. There is a culture in pain which results in unutterable glory to the sufferer; but even further than that, it brings others "unto glory." Vicarious suffering is rooted in the common experience of mankind.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Since God in His infinite wisdom and boundless love has seen fit to remove from our Missionary Society one of its most faithful and loyal members, Allie Mae Brown, therefore be it resolved:

First, That the heartfelt sympathy of the Young People's Missionary Society of Elon College Christian Church be extended to Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Brown and family in the great bereavement that has come to them.

Second, That our hearts are made sad because of her going, and that we shall miss her cheerful spirit and helpful service in our work.

Third, That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy be sent to the Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be spread upon our minutes.

SARAH ELIZABETH CUTHRELL

Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Cuthrell, wife of Mr. John Cuthrell, died at her home, corner of Ohio and Rogers Avenues, South Norfolk, Va., January 9th, 1923. Mrs. Cuthrell was ill only a few minutes before her death and the news was a severe shock to her family and friends. For more than thirty years she has been a faithful member of the First Christian Church of Berkley Ward. Nothing seemed to make her happier than to fill her certain pew at church with the members of her family. Her last Wednesday on earth was spent in entertaining the Ladies' Aid Society at their annual Roll Call Service, at her beautiful home that was always open to the church for any purpose. On the Sunday evening before her death and the last time she attended service she took part in the Christmas Pageant, directed by her pastor and given as a Christmas Service.

The First Christian Church of Norfolk overflowed with friends who came to attend her funeral service that was held January 11th, at 3 P. M., conducted by her pastor, Rev. Edwin B. Flory, assisted by Rev. O. D. Poythress. The mass of beautiful floral designs expressed in a way the sympathy of her many friends.

Mrs. Cuthrell leaves her devoted husband and six children to mourn her loss, but they have a rich heritage in her memory.

The family has lost a devoted, faithful wife and mother, the church a loyal, liberal and true member and her large number of friends a sincere companion whose place cannot be filled.

If Mrs. Cuthrell had a motto that she daily lived by it was, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

A Friend.

STRICKLAND

Juanita Strickland was born August 27, 1919, she departed from this life February 21, 1923, age 3 years, 5 months, 24 days. She leaves to mourn their loss, a father and mother, W. C. Strickland, Hattie M. Strickland, three sisters, Gladys, 8 years; Edith, 7; Emma, 6; one brother, Horace, fifteen months, and a number of relatives and friends. She was sick 25 days, taken with the Flu, going into pneumonia. All was done for her that could be done by father, mother and friends, but the Lord had called and she had to go. There were times that father, mother, and friends thought she was better, but she never said she was any better until a short time before she passed away, when she said that she was well, and called all the family and told them it was time to go home, and bid them go with her. Juanita was the idol of her home. She had won the love of father, mother, children and friends. All loved her and hated to see her go, but her mission was filled and she has gone to be with Jesus. She is not lost but gone before. Although it was short, I believe the mission of this child's life was great, and trust that her influence will remain with us, and the loving invitation by her to prepare for the heavenly home will ever linger with us, and may we, father, mother, children, friends and pastor, in the name of Christ, who died for us, prepare to meet her in that home where there is no sorrow, sickness or separation.

The funeral service was conducted in Elk Spur Christian Church by the writer, with a number of friends present, and her body was laid away in the family burial grounds, to wait the resurrection morning. My deepest sympathy is extended to father, mother, children and friends, but friends we do not weep as those that are without hope, for Juanita has only gone before, and bids us follow to that home God has prepared for His children.

Elisha Bradshaw.

ALLYE MAYE BROWN

Miss Allye Maye Brown died at her home, Elon College, N. C., February 9th, 1923, after a brief illness of influenza and pneumonia. The funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. W. Patton and Dr. W. C. Wicker, and the body laid to rest in the Elon College Cemetery. Allye, as she was familiarly called, was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Brown, and passes out of a large and loving family circle, leaving, besides parents, five brothers, four sisters, grandparents, aunts and uncles, and a host of other relatives. She was a member of Elon College Church, a student in the college, and identified with the young peoples' organizations of the town and college. Young and attractive, loving and loyal in the home, kind and helpful to all, her death cast a gloom over the entire community. When all that human skill and wisdom could devise was of no avail, the loving parents bowed their hearts in humble submission and Allye sweetly said, "I am ready and willing to go." The appreciation and sympathy of friends were shown by the kind and abundant attention to the family and by one of the largest and richest offerings of floral designs ever seen here. May the precious memory of daughter and sister ever abide as a perpetual blessing in the home and may a loving Heavenly Father bless and keep the bereaved ones in His own dear name.

LASSATER

Mrs. Sarah Jane Lassater, widow of the late Thomas B. Lassater, died at her home in East Durham on January 20, 1923 at the age of 69 years.

She had been in delicate health about twenty years, but bore her sufferings with an admirable patience which had characterized her life since she gave her heart and life to God when she was a girl. No amount of suffering could break her daily fellowship with the Lord, or dim the radiance of His love in her countenance and conversation. Death held no fears for her. Many times did she speak of her readiness for the change. Her will was lost in that of Him who was victor over death and the grave.

She was a member of New Elam Christian Church, and to that place her body was carried for interment after funeral services in the home by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell. Burial service by the writer.

She is survived by two sons and five daughters: Thomas E. and George D., of Durham, N. C.; Mrs. Rossie Brown, Misses Kate and Rosa, East Durham, N. C.; Mrs. Anna Williams, Sanford; and Mrs. Effie Williams, Dunn, N. C.

B. J. Howard.

ROBERTS

Mrs. Ambrose K. Roberts, daughter of George W. Turner, died February 18, at the age of 45 years, 6 months and 19 days. She had been a great sufferer for two years, but never complained. She expressed herself as ready and willing to depart and be with Christ. She was a member of the Christian Church in Windsor, having made a public profession of faith in early life.

She was a good woman and devoted to her church and children. These loved her in life and mourned her death. Besides her three children, Sallie, Julia and Frances, she is survived by one sister and seven half brothers.

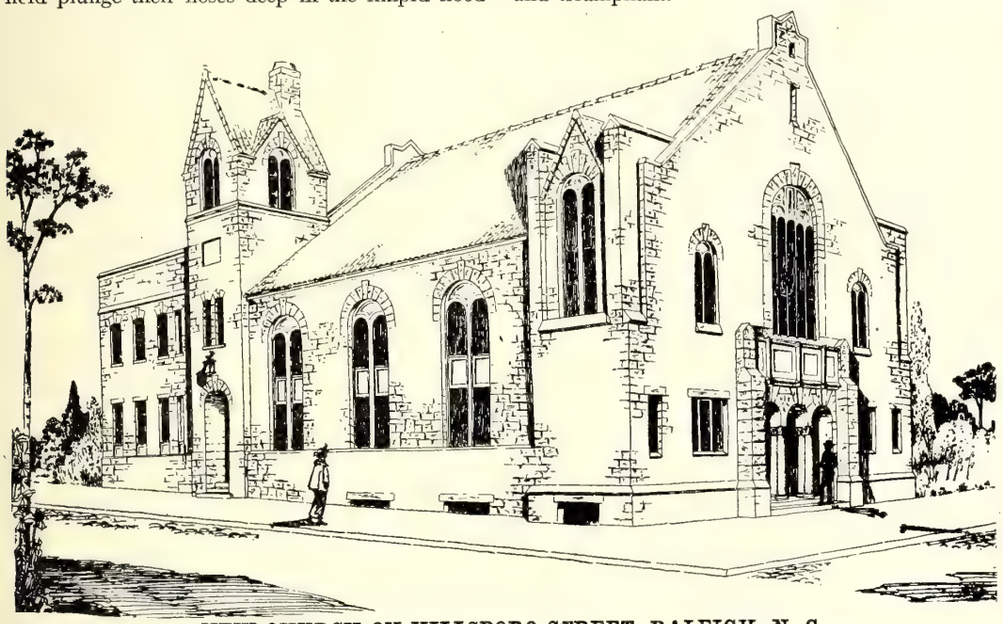
Great Sources of Refreshment—

The rivers of the world are the great sources of refreshment. How the clouds suck up their vapor to return it again in refreshing showers, making the parched earth to blossom as a rose. The little and the great creatures of the wood and field plunge their noses deep in the limpid flood until their eyes shine and their hearts beat with new life. The trees that rise by their banks wave their green branches in a joyful greeting to the friend that brings them abundant life. So the righteous are planted by the rivers of waters that God's refreshment may keep them beautiful and happy with the evergreen life that is abundant and triumphant.



NEW CHURCH ON HILLSBORO STREET, RALEIGH, N. C.

Plans are now complete and work will start on a new Church building for the First Christian Church, at the corner of Hillsboro and Dawson Streets, within a few months, officers of the Church have announced. Arrangements have been made for the disposition of the old Church auditorium and the work of tearing down and hauling away will be started in a few weeks.

The architects are Nelson and Cooper, of Raleigh, and the new building as designed will cover the entire lot at this location, where the old building formerly covered only a portion of the available space. It is intended to make the structure modern in every particular, and the cost is estimated at from $75,000 to $100,000.

The Church auditorium as planned will seat about 650 people, and when both Church and Sunday School auditoriums are thrown together, the total seating capacity will be approximately 1,000. The second story above the Sunday School auditorium will be given over to class-rooms for the Sunday School, while the balcony of the Church auditorium will be so divided into sections that it may also be used for Sunday School classes.

The exterior of the Church is to be finished in stone according to the specifications. It is hoped to use a native Wake County stone.

Social Center Also.

It is also expected to have the basement so constructed that it may be used for a community meeting place, making the Church a social as well as a religious center.

The new pastor of this Church, Dr. W. D. Parry, comes here with wide experience in Church building. He has been pastor of both big and little Churches, but in no case has one of the little Churches remained small. Dr. Parry gave his time during the war to Y. M. C. A. work, since then having been on the lecture platform until the beginning of his work here January 1st of this year. Under his vigorous administration, all members of the Church are confident the work will go forward rapidly.

The Church building committee is composed of L. L. Vaughan, chairman; C. H. Stephenson, W. C. Adkins, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, P. T. Hines, and the pastor as an ex-officio member. Work has just begun in raising the necessary funds and will now be carried on without intermission until the necessary amount has been subscribed and paid.

A Prophecy of the Coming of the Auto—

The Northwestern Christian Advocate puts it this way—look up Nahum and see what you think about it:

In the light of the fact that one out of every eight persons in this country owns an automobile, and that the population of several States could motor down their highways at one moment of time, the prophecy of Nahum is of peculiar interest. "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways, they shall seem like torches and they shall run like the lightnings." The automobile of 1923 fulfills this description to a finish, particularly the "jostling" and the "running like lightning."

Good for King Albert—

The Congregationalist brings to the American people a bit of good news from the Congo. Many of our readers will recall the awful tales that were told of the cruelties practiced by rubber dealers in the Congo. Again and again we were told that poor, helpless African men and women, and even boys and girls, were horribly mutilated in body by having their hands chopped off, done by rubber traders in an effort to make them bring more rubber in day by day. If a man failed to bring as much rubber as they thought he ought one day, the trader would chop off the laborer's hand as a punishment for not doing enough. They did not expect that the man with a hand chopped off would be able to do any better the next day; of course not, but they did hope to scare the rest of the laborers into doing their best, lest if they came up with only a little rubber they might suffer like treatment. This was in the days of the Emperor Josef of Austria. But Josef is gone to judgment, and Albert now reigns in his stead. The following will be good news to every lover of man:

Dr. William H. Sheppard, a colored missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church for twenty years, author of "Pioneers in Congo," "A Fellow in the Royal Geographical Society," recently addressed the students in Hampton Institute on missionary problems in Africa. He described what King Albert has been doing to improve conditions in the Belgian Congo. He said:

"A change has come in the Congo. We have five great concessions now throughout the Kasai Valley. Since King Albert has come to the throne things have changed altogether. He is building railroads, bridges, hospitals and schools. He is doing all that he can for the natives of the Congo. There are now five great mission stations, with sixty-five white native evangelists, who are also school teachers. Thirty years ago they had not heard of the Sabbath day, and now the Sabbath day is kept beautifully all through the country."

NOTES-PERSONALS

In less than two months the Southern Christian Convention will be in session at Henderson, N. C. Will you be there if all goes as now appointed?

Rev. D. P. Barrett is a busy man in the Porto Rican mission. For almost a year he has had to look after that whole field. Miss Williams is now back on the field, and will as soon as able look after her part of the field, but just yet she has not the strength to do much.

Miss Olive C. Williams has landed in Porto Rico and we hope may soon be able to enter upon her work again. She had several months for vacation in the home land, but she really did much work for missions while here by visiting and speaking before conventions, conferences and churches. When she is able, we would be glad if she would write a newsy mission letter for THE SUN.

We hear through friends that the work of the Durham Christian Church is doing well under the labors of the Rev. Stanley C. Harrell. The renovation recently given their Church building will greatly add to its attractiveness and usefulness. The work is expected to be finished early this spring. Bro. Harrell has the reputation of being a strong preacher, and that is a reputation worth having.

God makes the world new every morning. When one goes out of doors in the early morning, how fresh and sweet and beautiful the world is! How is he rebuked who has spent the night in drunken revelry. The man who with a clean body, drinks in the ozone of the early morning and lifts his heart in praise of the Creator is the normal man. The world has nothing to give that man to increase his riches.

Devoutness of life is hard to define, but there is nothing more beautiful or worth while. It chastens the spirit into humility. It radiates with love and tenderness. It walks in the wilderness places and finds God in the burning bush. It worships at every wayside altar and sits in heavenly places with Christ Jesus. What a contrast it is to this hatchet, and chisel, and saw religion which seeks to carve the soul into spiritual beauty.

And what do you think of the situation in Europe as presented by Rev. J. L. Barton, D. D., in this issue? Indeed, we are in perilous times, even though the world be getting better, as so many claim. His is indeed a most interesting article, and if you will read it carefully you may be waked up to the fact that the world is now largely dominated by the worst people in the world—the Turks. You may be sure that they will use every advantage they can get.

Some one has well said: Eventide is the hour of home coming. It is the hour when God's peace rests like a mantle over His creation. In the anticipation of the home-coming man bears the toil and heat of the day. To rest from labor, to feel the clasp of love's welcome, to sit by the warmth of one's own hearthstone, and to converse with those who understand you; it is this that explains more of life's felicities than all of your philosophy. Excepting God, home is the biggest word in human speech. The eventide of life is the hour of our home coming to the Father's house. The soft arms of an infinite love are awaiting us there.

We have all kinds of preaching in this community, but it is lacking in sweetness when they leave out the blessing of the Holy Spirit, as many do.—Ellis. The man who does not hear preaching which is of the Spirit scarcely knows that he is getting almost nothing, for although the truth is right and good, even the truth without the power from above is not likely to strike us in a way to help us in our search for the real Christian life.

Well, what are you doing for Men and Millions? It is a good time to work right now, and it is a good time because none of us have any lease on time beyond the present. If we do not work now, we may never work, for before the coming of another sun we may be called away. Dr. Atkinson and his helpers are working hard to finish up the task involved in the Men and Millions movement, and we do not wish the good work to languish. Co-operate with your captain and help him to do his best.

Now that it is definitely settled that the convention will be held at Henderson this spring, let all due preparation be made for the occasion. Henderson is on the Seaboard Railroad, a little more than half-way between Weldon and Raleigh, N. C. The proposition came to the Church with the thought of giving lodging and breakfast free, and the delegate or visitor to pay for dinner and supper, but the Church said: "No, our hospitality shall be free." If any of the delegates prefer to go to the hotel at their own charges, rather than accept such as we can give, that is all right, but the delegates who come into our homes must come free of any charge so far as entertainment is concerned. The Henderson is a small Church in point of numbers and wealth, but it will give our convention a generous welcome.

Be sure to read what is said in this issue of "Christ or Chaos." It is a wonderful admission from a modernist who is all the while holding up the claim that the world is getting better morally and spiritually. If it is, why does a leading modernist say it is Christ or chaos? You know many of these modernist brethren claim that Christ is not a divine Saviour, but a good man and a great teacher of moral and spiritual truth. If Christ were not a divine Saviour, then He could hardly claim to be even a good man, as His claims as to being divine and the Saviour of the world and the Son of God would be proven false, and if these claims were false, then how could our modernists say it is Christ or chaos? Let us try to be consistent as well as patient. If it be Christ or chaos, then it must be that Christ was indeed the Son of God and the divine Saviour of the world.

A good, old-fashioned brotherly letter sent now and then to the aged minister of the Gospel from members whose churches he has served in other days would be a blessing. It would cheer the aged servant who is now waiting the Master's call to come up higher, and if you feel that you did not contribute as much to his support, when he was serving your Church, as was due him, it might do you good, and certainly be a means of blessing to the aged man in these days of his need and old age. Write a good, brotherly letter to him any way and so cheer him up for the good he has done. We mention a few of these men and maybe you will think of others. We name Rev. C. M. Dollar, Malone, Ala.; Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C.; Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C.; Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Chapel Hill, N. C.; Rev. Jas. W. Wellons, D. D., Elon College, N. C. Let us not forget these veterans of the cross in their old age. A message of good cheer would bring sunshine to them, and if you should feel that you wish to add a bit to their means in their old age, we believe it will be doubly welcome because given in recognition of service rendered in the long ago. Do not forget or neglect the veterans. They appreciate a kind remembrance as much so as any one.

J. H. Haugh said a good thing when he penned the following thought. Read it carefully and prayerfully and see if you can endorse what he says: "Shall we teach our people to pay tithes or not? I don't believe any preacher will say that we shall not teach tithing, but how shall we teach? People will scarcely be influenced by a teacher unless the teacher is a living example of what he teaches. Do we believe in tithing? do we believe it is scriptural? do we believe it is God's plan for his children? If the child does remember the Father in all he possesses and brings to the altar a tenth, he will be happy. The Father will rejoice in his children for he receives his own. Let all of our preachers pay tithes first and then they can teach their people to pay tithes. Our preachers must be leaders in this as well as in all Christian work. If men called of God to preach and teach and lead the Church fail to tithe their salary and whole income from other sources, how can they teach the people until they themselves set the example? It is up to the ministry to say whether we shall be a weak or a strong Church. Will the Lord be patient a little longer"?

The world needs the missionary not only to preach the Gospel to him, but to lead him into the lights of civilization. The New York Christian Advocate brings us this piece of good news in regard to the enlarging field of the missionary, laboring among heathen:

Everywhere and every day three-fourths of the people in foreign mission lands spend their time in the fields. Hence it is not strange that Christian missionaries should endeavor to adapt their message to agricultural workers. There is even an International Association of Agricultural Missions in this country. Its annual meetings are attended by missionaries and college teachers of agriculture. At its recent session in this city, Mr. David Fairchild, of the Bureau of Plant Industry at Washington, asked for the appointment of "a committee to meet with representatives of the Department of Agriculture and work out a way to give more training to agricultural missionaries before they go out to the field, and to point out to them how they may more effectively help the particular countries to which they go." President Butterfield, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, recently returned from Asia, told his hearers that they must influence China through its 300,000,000 farmers, living in tiny market villages. The united purpose of the association is described as putting Christianity into the day's work of all who till the soil, and of putting the resources of American science at the service of the farmers of the world. Already the Methodist Episcopal Mission Board has begun to send out graduates of agricultural colleges, and the experiment is succeeding.

BETTER NOT DO IT!

We heard only recently a lady say, as we were speaking of the work of a certain minister: "What I have against him is the fact that no matter how great a sinner a man has lived, when he dies, if he preaches the sermon on the occasion of his funeral, he preaches him to heaven." Well, now let us think of what that means. The minister who preaches a sinful man to heaven is making himself ridiculous in the estimation of good honest people, and especially is this true with men and women who are not Christians, who knew the dead man and knew that his life was anything but Christian. Why, that disgusts such people with a preacher who has no respect for the truth as it relates to the life of a man, whose funeral sermon he is preaching. Just as this lady was talking she turned to the obituary department of her Church paper and she began to read the obituary of one who had but recently died. Her pastor was telling of her life and death. He ranked her high as a member of the Church, when the truth was she (the lady who was reading) had known her to attend Church but once during a long number of years in the Church under consideration, and she was not even a member of this Church and had not been in her life. She was ranked high as a Church member and Sunday School worker, although she not only did not attend Church hardly at all, but she took no part in the work of the Sunday School.

Now, does any one think this dear pastor was lying as to this lady's Church life? He would hardly do a thing of that sort intentionally, but, then, he was saying what was not correct. Surely he did not intend to lie in what he was saying of this lady, and yet he was saying what was not true. It did the dead woman no good, while it put the preacher's influence in that community where the facts as they pertained to the life of this lady were well known in a bad light. Now, Brother Pastor, how do you suppose your people feel as to how you displayed your honesty and faithfulness to truth in this case? Brethren, as ministers of the Gospel, we cannot afford to make ourselves ridiculous just to please men. It is a shame that we should allow ourselves to do such a thing. Let us quit it, and let us do it at once.

JESUS' TOUCH.

Jesus sees every need of your life and is ready and waiting to meet that need if you will submit to His touch, if you will trust and obey as the man born blind did. He took Jesus at His word, doing just what our Lord told him to do, and he came seeing. It is only when we take Him at His word and yield to His control completely that we do see clearly. But what a commotion that touch of Jesus caused.

First, the neighbors took the matter up, some saying one thing and some another. Then they brought Him to the Pharisees, who questioned Him and argued among themselves. Some of them said, "This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the Sabbath day." Others said, "How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles"? That caused division among them. There were always those who tried to draw men's attention from Jesus' supernatural works, because He did not follow their laid-down rules. Their kind is not yet extinct. Envy and jealousy are not dead yet among Christian workers. Would to God it were, and only God's glory was the aim of each one.

The Jews did not believe concerning him whose sight had been restored, so they questioned his parents. They said, "We know that this is our son and that he was born blind." But fear of the Jews made them deny any knowledge of the source of his healing. Those parents thought more of their standing with the Jews than with God. Our standing with Church officials amounts to nothing. Our standing with God amounts to everything.

Their questions to the one born blind brought out a wonderful truth. "If any man be a worshiper of God and doeth His will, him he heareth." But they would not accept it, although it came from one in whom the works of God had been made manifest. Hear them saying, "Dost Thou teach us?" And they cast him out. There are still those who are ready to cast out the one who has felt the supernatural power of God working in his life.

A few years ago, in our Sunday morning service, a stranger told briefly and with great sorrow of a life so filled with sin that it finally landed him in the State's prison. He had been raised a Catholic, but he said when the gates clicked behind him, he resolved he was going to find out if there was anything in the Christian life. He had his wife get him a Bible, which was read faithfully. As he read God's wonderful promises and His faithfulness in keeping them, it greatly impressed him. There in his cell he gave his heart to God and accepted Christ as his Saviour. He promised the Lord if He would set him free, he would do all he could to win men to Christ and try to teach them the power of prayer. One morning after a whole night spent in prayer, he told one of the men, "Today I go out of here." That day the prison gates opened for him and he walked out a free man.

Through prayer he obtained work. Through prayer he won his Catholic wife to Christ. As the way opened, he told others his story, that he might get them to believe more fully in the power of prayer. We never heard of one in that congregation being persuaded to try out the "everything by prayer" method. But we did hear remarks about having a "penitentiary bird" take part in the service. Not so! He was one whose sins, though like scarlet, had been made white as snow in the blood of the Lamb. He was one who had received his sight at Jesus' touch, and was faithfully warning against the life of sin, and was trying to teach others that "if any man be a worshiper of God and doeth His will, him He heareth."

Those neighbors, Pharisees and Jews, all saw the change in the man. All knew that whereas he was blind he now saw. Be careful you do not cast out any who have been made whole by this same Jesus. His mark is always upon them, for those who respond to His touch "purify themselves even as he is pure." They do not go on in the same old sinful course, but the sins are put out of the life and Christ is put in.

Mt. Vernon, Ohio. MINNIE LOHR.

FIRST CHURCH, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

The Portsmouth Church during the past year did not grow with leaps and bounds, but made commendable progress. The year was marked with signs of steady growth. Thirty members were added to our church roll, and many of these are proving themselves to be loyal and substantial. Three Christian Endeavor Societies were organized—senior, intermediate and junior—with a total membership of about seventy. These societies have done good work and have met regularly every week since their organization.

Our ladies awaken with their societies. The Ladies' Aid and Missionary are always busy, and their work is progressive and substantial. Our men folk, because of their daily toil in making a living for themselves and family, cannot be as active in the work of the Church as the women, but they are doing well. They are loyal to their Church and liberal in their gifts, and so by having a combination of workers, loyalty and generosity, the Church goes forward and the kingdom advances.

The attendance at Sunday School during the past year, I have been told, was the largest in the history of the Church. While the school is not large yet, it is gradually growing. Bro. B. F. Collins is our faithful superintendent.

Last Wednesday night we held our first quarterly Church conference for the new year. The reports were good and the meeting was characterized by a spirit of harmony. The total amount received during the last quarter was $815.35. Some of our organizations did not make a report.

The pastor, at this conference, read the names appointed on the Church official board, composed of twelve men and eight women. The names composing the standing committees for the year were also read and the duty of each committee outlined. Along with these appointments, the pastor made some recommendations. A motion was made that the Church approve the appointments and recommendations by a rising vote. The motion was carried, and every member present stood, and of course the pastor was pleased with the fine spirit of co-operation and willingness on the part of our people to lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes.

During the Christmas season an interesting Christmas program was rendered by the children. Mrs. C. J. Heath and Mrs. Alfred Edmonds had the children in charge, and the occasion was pronounced a decided success. At this time gifts were brought for the children of the Christian orphanage, and those who gave seemed happy in the giving. At this season, while our good people were remembering others with their gifts, they did not forget the pastor, for they, too, gave unto him gifts, such as fresh sausage, a ham, fruit cake, fruits, nuts and money—and, last but not least, a handsome overcoat and a nice pair of gloves. The overcoat came as a gift from the Church and Ladies' Aid Society. The gloves were presented by the Young Men's Class, of whom I have the honor of being teacher. I fail to find words at my command to express fully my deep gratitude and appreciation to these kind and generous-hearted friends for their useful and valuable gifts. During these cold days the gloves and overcoat are proving to be of real comfort. I shall try to prove my appreciation for these gifts by being, with the help of the Lord, a better preacher and a more faithful shepherd. May God richly bless and prosper every one who shared in these gifts is my prayer.

W. L. WELLS.

Recommendations offered by the pastor and approved by the Church conference in session Wednesday night, January 10:

1. That the Church elect two additional deacons and that a nominating committee be appointed at this conference, the same to report at our next official board meeting.

2. That the Church, beginning not later than March 1, put on a campaign to raise all indebtedness of the Church.

3. That during the month of February the Church set aside one week known as "CHRISTIAN SUN Week," and that we set our goal to secure not less than twenty-five new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

CAN YOU ANSWER? IF SO, DO.

Holly Pond, Ala., R. No. 1.
February 26, 1923.

Dear Bro. Barrett:

I wish to enquire through THE SUN for the names and addresses of all our members anywhere in North Alabama who are not at present identified with one of our churches here. It is our purpose now to hold as many meetings in this section this summer as time and opportunity will afford.

The lumber is being sawed for our new Church at Arab, but due to several handicaps the building of the house may be postponed until summer. Pray for us. With best wishes for you in your work, I am, Fraternally yours,

W. C. CARPENTER.

"IT IS CHRIST OR CHAOS."

That is an unexpected statement with reference to the present world outlook to come from one of our "liberal" brethren, but that is just the fact. Most of our American people are in favor of the separation of Church and State, and yet many are beginning to say the Church must come to the rescue and save the world from utter wreckage—that no one else can do it. That means that politicians and statesmen combined are unable to handle the present world situation, and at last they are turning to the Church for hope for the mess they have made of civil government. But is civil government in a mess? If it is not, tell us, please, just what the present conditions of the civil governments of the world mean.

We have the greatest respect for the Church and the work it does for righteousness and for the maintainence of good government, but our brethren who are turning to the Church will have to go a step further in their call for help to save the world from chaos—to save human governments from utter wreckage. Some have even gone far enough to say that the civilization of the twentieth century is in danger of destruction, and yet they declare that the world is getting better. Oh, how can that be, if civilization is so near to the end of its modern career? Be that as it may, the facts deserve the most serious consideration, and we may as well go one step further now, and admit that even the Church is helpless, unless she can realize that the declaration of Zeph. 3:17 is true. If she will do that, then she may turn to God and get the wisdom, courage and power to lead the world to safety in this crisis. In Zeph. 3:17, it is declared:

"The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; He will save, He will rejoice over thee with joy; He will rest in His love; He will joy over thee with singing."

If the Church will but get the Lord our God to be in the midst of her, then she can prevail to save the world and its present civilization—otherwise, even the Church can do nothing.

Looking to getting help from the Church, a great world conference of the Church in all lands and of all denominations is called to meet in Stockholm, Sweeden, in 1925.

The American Branch Committee recently held a meeting, which was reported by the Rev. Frederick Lynch, the editor of Christian Work. It is said that the aim of this world gathering of the representatives of the Church is to get the whole of Protestantism together, so that this conference may speak with authority for the Church Universal, at least so far as Protestantism is concerned. They admit, if this cannot be done, the conference would not be worth holding.

In reporting the matter from the standpoint of the American Branch Committee, Dr. Lynch says:

Three Things Brought to Light.

"The meeting held in New York was well attended, and the day's discussions brought to light three things. First of all there was a general feeling that unless the conference at Stockholm should be really representative of the whole of Christendom—at least of Protestant Christendom—it would not be worth holding. All communions must be there and have many of their ablest leaders there. The churches must feel such an interest in the matter that the conference will stand out in history as having as determining an influence upon the life and work of the Church as Nicea or Constance had upon its doctrine.

The Church on Moral, Social and International Problems.

Secondly, some message must go out from the Church that shall be so arresting that all Christendom will heed it and know where the whole Church of Christ stands upon the great moral, social and international problems of the world. The time has come for the Church to make some pronouncement as to just where it stands in regard to the whole social order. Particularly did the delegates present feel that the time had come for the Church of Christ to speak to the world some word upon war.

Unless—Not Worth While at All.

Thirdly, the feeling was expressed that unless the Church was willing to take the conference so seriously that it is willing to have its delegates take time—no matter how much time—to give the utmost debate and prayer to the great issues facing Christendom, it was not worth while to meet at all. Upon this point we feel very strongly. The very existence of civilization is at stake. Great wounds exist that can be healed only by divine wisdom and divine help. Millions of men in all lands are confused, distracted, perplexed, looking for guidance and finding none. Faith is at a very low ebb. Enmities and hatreds are poisoning humanity. Powers of darkness are stalking over the earth. These millions are looking to the Church for some word of faith, of light, of guidance, of assurance—some positive, confident word. Many are waiting upon the Church to utter this word. The right word from the whole Church of Christ might be the one saving, stabilizing word for civilization. The conference in the light of these chaotic, threatening conditions should be willing to sit together for weeks, or months, until this word is framed. If the conference at Constance could sit five years to save a doctrine, surely the conference at Stockholm should be willing to sit as many weeks or months to save a world. Has not the time come when the Church must take itself seriously and count no cost of time or money if it can save the world from the present slough of despond? It is Christ or chaos."

A Few Speak for All Without Authority.

The Methodist Protestant, Baltimore, Md., commenting on what Dr. Lynch has said, as above, says, and with much force:

"We are calling attention to this gathering as a hopeful sign of the reaction of the leaders of the Church to present social, economic and religious conditions which exist all around us. Such a gathering ought to do great things in stabilizing our world order, but the getting together the men who ought to be present, and to interest the organizations which ought to be represented, is an immense task. To get together a few great men representing only a small part of the great Church Universal would only produce criticism and more unrest. There are organizations already in the field composed of federated churches who are too quick to speak for the general Church without finding out the sentiment of the great bodies for which they speak. If this meeting means anything, it must have the whole Church, and with authority to speak and act. This is emphasized in the words quoted above, and we heartily agree with them."

Civilization at Stake.

The same editor continues:

"But we are bringing this article to the attention of our readers to show them the kind of language the great leaders we have are using in describing world conditions. The language is as strong as it can be made. Dr. Frederick Lynch is a man of the broadest knowledge, and the widest acquaintance with world conditions. He is a world-traveler, and knows what he is talking about, and yet he says: 'The very existence of civilization is at stake.' And at the end of the article he says, with the concurrence of the committee, 'It is Christ or chaos.' But this same language is being used by the great national leaders in all the nations, in regard to the grave perils to civilization everywhere."

Lloyd George's Mistake.

Great men do sometimes make mistakes, and the mistake of a great man is the more serious because he is great and so commands a following. Mr. Lloyd George has been recently quoted as saying: "The Church alone can save the world."

Nay, Mr. George, the Church alone cannot save the world. If the Church is to save the world, she must be an instrument in the hands of God to such an end. If she undertakes it alone, then she is already doomed to failure—in herself she is not able to do it; she can never do it in her own strength.

Our Baltimore exchange, continuing on this question, says:

"In national councils a battle royal is on to save civilization, but it seems to us there is an apathy in the rank and file of the Church which is very disheartening. If things are as these great leaders of the world declare, it is high time for 'Zion to awake and put on her strength.' If there is any wisdom and leadership in the world, it is behind these alarming words of warning."

A Great and Glaring Inconsistency.

But in the same paper from which these words are taken, an editorial utterance defends Dr. Grant's right to deny the divinity of Christ from the pulpit that honors Him as divine, and another one of the editors uses this expression in regard to what he calls "true scholarship." "Those mistaken clergymen and laymen who attempted to placate an effete orthodoxy by strangling the thinking and inquiry will fail, and they ought to fail." All this leads us to say we believe that these are perilous times, and we do not believe that they have been exaggerated in the article we have quoted. We believe "It is either Christ or chaos." But it is either the divine Christ or chaos. The authority of Christ by which He healed the sick and raised the dead and uttered the unchanging truth of His Gospel was in the fact that He spoke and acted as the Almighty God. If this body is going to Stockholm to change world conditions and to bring in a new world order by enthroning Christ, in order to avert chaos, they must have no lingering doubt concerning the divinity of Christ. There is nothing that would so quickly and surely change the conditions that we all deplore, as to preach everywhere, in the street, in the home, in the halls of legislation, in our schools and colleges and universities, in our church councils, and seminaries, in great gatherings of the Universal Church like this of which we are speaking, the declaration of the faith of the early Church, "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God."

THE FIGHT AGAINST PROHIBITION.

If ever the devil was in command of his earth forces in any battle, we believe he is in charge of the fight against prohibition. Every conceivable effort seems to be making in order to defeat the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, but there is one most encouraging fact in all this, and that is, every pitched battle the devil and his forces have staged against prohibition since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment has met with an inglorious defeat, so far as we can recall. Only recently several such battles have been fought, but practically every one has gone down in defeat. Let us notice just a few of them.

1. When the Shipping Board of the United States Government undertook to run a liquor business on their ships plying between the United States and other countries, the "wet" forces stood behind them; but when the Shipping Board was told by the authorities that they must obey the law just as truly as others, they yielded and obeyed the law, and this victory was so complete that the Shipping Board is now advertising that it is running dry ships and that soon they will put on their line the biggest dry ship afloat. So, instead of the dry law doing the Shipping Board harm, it seems to be doing it good, just as it has every one else who has obeyed it.

2. The wet forces have sought to make a gain through false impressions as to the influence of the working man. They have said that the working man is opposed to prohibition. They even got Samuel Gompers, the head of the Labor Federation, to proclaim the labor man as in favor of liquor; but that did not work as it was expected. Some of the labor men arose in their power and put a quietus on the story. The Oil City, Pa., Carpenters' and Joiners' Union went to work and passed resolutions repudiating the statement made by Mr. Gompers. They protested against labor being exploited in the interest of booze. Not only so, but they demanded that national officers of the Federation keep hands off. There was another defeat.

3. In Illinois not long since there was a big fight to defeat certain Congressmen in the State. Those opposing them made their boasts that if elected they would do certain things in the interests of liquor, and among the things they were pledged to do was to modify the Volstead Act. The candidates opposing them and running on a dry ticket, took the opposite, even to opposing any modification of the Volstead Act. One of the dry candidates was elected by an overwhelming majority of 277,101, and the other by a majority of 245,016, and again away went the hopes of the "wets."

4. Then the "wets" not long ago sought to make it legal for ships to handle liquor beyond the three-mile limit, but the "drys" met them and defeated them in this effort, and now the United States dry agents may seize the ships supposed to be handling liquor and take them in charge and confiscate their liquors as well as the ships. Down again went the efforts to strangle the prohibition law of the land. Defeat again!

5. The wets have tried in many, perhaps all, States to get around the dry law by bootlegging" and otherwise handling poisonous liquors. But when this came to a test, the government met their plans by making it murder to sell poisonous liquors when such liquors caused the death of the drinker.

6. The wets are trying this month to bring in a lot of liquor from the Bahama Islands. They say it will be done on a big scale from time to time, but before March got here the right of the government to stop all such violations of the dry law have been conceded, and the rum business coming from the Bahama Islands goes down in defeat.

7. Now the "wets" are undertaking to raise a club of many thousands of people who will band themselves together to defeat the prohibition law, and the same club is to raise, if they can, a fund of $7,000,000 dollars to be used in a fight in several dry States to defeat dry men and elect wet men to Congress; but, as big an effort as that may seem, they will find that they have undertaken more than they can do, for even seven million dollars cannot defeat the Constitution of the United States, nor the will of the great majority of her people.

Here is an overwhelming fact that even a "wet" man cannot gainsay:

June 30, 1919, six months before the eighteenth amendment went into effect, the deposits of all the banks in the United States aggregated $37,000,000,000. Then came prohibition and, according to wet prophets, disasters were to follow thick and fast, and the prosperity of the country was expected to vanish, and business go to the bow-wows. But in June 30, 1922, after two and a half years without saloons, the deposits of all the banks in the United States aggregated $43,000,000,000, or $6,000,000,000 in excess of 1919—a record high level. These figures cover all the national, State, loans and trust companies, savings and private banks. More money on deposit in the banks of the country after two and a half years of prohibition than ever before in history! These wet croakers had better throw away their hammers and buy horns.

So, everywhere there seems to be a falling down of the "wet" side and a victory for the "drys." We believe the "dry" side has come to stay, and the "wets" may as well save their time and money, too, by abandoning the fight they are making against the cause of righteousness and the welfare of the people.

The Indiana Legislature has passed bills to strengthen the dry laws, not having any thought of going back to liquor as a means of money-making. Men-making is a much better and a far more profitable business.

The Kansas Legislature, after trying prohibition in the State of Kansas for forty-two years, has just passed a law to tighten the State prohibition law, having no notion of going back to the liquor business. Hurrah for Kansas!

Everything seems to be going against the "wets." Even President Harding has determined to call for another conference in Washington as soon as the various Legislatures adjourn, and the purpose of the conference, we are told, is to bring about a closer co-operation between Federal and State authorities in the enforcement of prohibition laws throughout the country. This is a very wise point to be gained. If the Federal and the State authorities do not work in harmony, why then the chances are that the "wets" will make big gains; but with both working together, something will happen and the "wets" will find out pretty soon what it is.

Our readers may rest assured that the "wets" will leave nothing undone that they can possibly accomplish in order to bring back the liquor business for the moral and physical ruin of thousands of our people—people who, away from liquor, are industrious gentlemen and doing well, but put liquor back where they can get it just when they please, and you will see that the moral and financial status of the United States will go backward rapidly, and this the fairest land under the sun, cannot afford to do, or to have done. The liquor business has been proven an outlaw, and no country which has any respect for itself can afford to go on record before the world as a friend of the most accursed and moral-deadening influence in the world. Let us stand for the utter destruction of the whiskey business in all of its varied phases. We have no place in the United States for the accursed business. Let us have no place for it in our law-abiding country.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

For the Pre-Easter Period and the Holy Week of Prayer, March 25 to April 1.

When has the world's need for sympathy and brotherhood been so impelling and beseeching as it is today? When have hate and selfishness so nearly brought ruin to all that is helpful and good? How shall the Church perform today the task to which God has sent her as the light of the world and the salt of the earth, if her own lamp is not trimmed and burning and her own life so true that she can be the purifying influence in a time of selfishness and sin?

The call to the Church is first of all a summons to prayer and consecration. We need to confess our shortcomings and to be ashamed of our aloofness, our sinfulness and complacency. Let us examine ourselves before we take others to task. Hatred and selfish unconcern will cease among the nations when they cease in the individual hearts of men and women.

There is a deepening conviction among men that the greatest power on earth is the power of prayer. It will release more energy for the world's help than any other agency. Pentecosts are ever at hand and will fall upon the Church when by the same method that precipitated the first Pentecost she brings herself close to the Infinite.

"Day long a craven cry goes up,
The people drink a bitter cup,
They languish, seeking stones for bread,
Brave faith seems fallen—the old hope dead,
The babblers will not cease,
The people have no peace.
Wake, make your strings of fire!
God for us—strike the lyre!

Our topics for the Easter season present Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world. There is no human need so great that He cannot meet it; there is no want that He cannot satisfy. Once more we follow in his footsteps through the tender teaching, the holy fellowship, the cruel scourging and the agony of the cross. With greater hope than ever we hail the Easter dawn and pray that the light of that great day may illuminate the world.

"He went out into a mountain to pray and continued all night in prayer to God."

"And when it was day * * * He came down * * * and stood in the plain * * * There went virtue out of Him and healed them all."

Thus, with the Master, he who would do the work of the world in the daylight hours must find his way back, at every eventide, to the source of his spiritual strength. There is no vital service without its commensurate spiritual life and the one will be as real and abiding as the other is deep and reverent.

The world's deepest need is not political, is not economic; it is, in every age, and above all at the present hour, the need of vital personal religion.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The endless chain of organizations and plans to carry on the Lord's work proves the imperfection of man when compared with God as Creator. The organization of the universe and the world as a part of the universe, was complete in the beginning. It would upset the world to change or add a new organization. The weakness of man is seen in his inability to create a permanent organization. That eliminates creeds and confessions of faith as binding upon the consciences of men. The modern numerous organizations are no doubt honest efforts to find a real working plan to make the kingdom more efficient among men; but the effort often reveals the lack of wisdom. The organizations in creation are simple and all the parts work together. The human body is "fearfully and wonderfully made," but it is simple in its parts and a unit in its activities. Any church organization that operates independently is a defective organization. All organizations within the Church, from the Sunday School to the Christian Endeavor Society, should co-operate with the Church. As Paul puts it: "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of thee. Nay, much more, those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary." The feeblest member is not only necessary, but the strongest is useless alone. Harmony is the essential thing in music; co-operation is the efficient thing in organizations.

Complaint has arisen in many quarters that organized classes in Sunday schools, and even Sunday Schools themselves, neglect the Church by non-attendance. Men's classes meet, worship, listen at lectures, do works of benevolence and then go home. Sunday School teachers do the same way.

The eye can see work, but the hands must do work. There would be no Sunday School, no organized class, were there no Church. On the other hand, what is the attitude of the Church toward the Sunday School? Many Church members do not even have their names on the Sunday School roll in any class. The ideal Church is every member in the Sunday School and every member of the Sunday School in the congregation. The good members of the Church have no right to complain at the non-attendance of Sunday School members at the Church until they go to Sunday School. All the organizations make one body. It is time for a reorganization of organizations. The Church is one, the work is one, the end is one—the salvation of the lost and the edification of the saved—and then all together in Christian service. In fact, the organizations within the Church should be co-ordinated, report their operations to the Church conference, and the Church, in turn, report the total result to the annual conference. Churches do much more than they get credit for, and even then they do all too little. I doubt whether twenty-five per cent of the human energy in the United States is at work, and I am sure that no more of the spiritual energy of the Church is at work for Christ. We are overorganized and underemployed.

ELON LETTER.

Day by day, in every way, the outlook for Elon grows brighter and brighter. This is my deliberate judgment, and on its verity I am ready to risk my reputation. I speak thus in Coueist vein despite indifference in some places where normally and rightfully there should be warmest and most sympathetic championing of the cause of our stricken college. The sky is beginning to clarify for Elon and a new day to dawn. Taken in the large, the outlook grows brighter and brighter with each succeeding sun, and it is only morning as yet. When noon is reached, the larger and better Elon of which so many have confidently prophesied will be a realized fact.

But between these morning hours, sweet as they are with the dews of sacrifice from loving hearts, and the high noon of our expectant hopes, there is a long, long trail awinding up the heights of Christian duty to the mountain peak of unobstructed view and heartening victory. Some of us have mortgaged our future to make the first ascending cliffs of this climb possible for our cause. We have achieved the victory over ourselves and for our cause and we are happy. A noble army shall follow in our train. God alone can give our ranks the increase we must have. And He will do it.

It is barely two months yet since our administration building went up in smoke. Standing by the smoldering ruins that morning, one of the great-souled women of our Church extended me her hand in sympathy, and through her tears said, "Poor Elon College"! With oppressed heart, my response to her was, "Say also, 'poor Christian Church.'" Like Gehazi, our vision was obscured and we could not then see through the smoke of the ruined building the army of the Lord encamped around about. They were there, nevertheless, a great host of them, ready to succor Elon in her hour of need, and in these days since have proved not only their presence, but their determination to build on a larger and better scale.

The trustees, on January 24, projected the Elon emergency fund of $600,000 to be equally divided between buildings and endowment and to include all that should be paid in since December 31, 1922. Up to this writing there has been received in cash and pledges toward this program $232,276.52, of which $64,500 go to permanent funds and $167,776.52 to the rebuilding program. The endowment total includes the magnificent gift of $25,000 from the Carlton family and another of equal amount from one of the great-hearted men of our Church. For reasons which to us are entirely satisfactory, his name is withheld at this time, though later a grateful people will know this generous friend and can express to him by letter and in person their gratitude. When we have raised the money for our rebuilding program and discharged the other obligations of indebtedness resting upon our college, we can confidently expect liberal support from certain chartered boards whose function is to aid colleges in endowment projects, but not for other purposes.

With four hundred thousand dollars yet to raise, I again assert the conviction expressed in the opening lines of this letter, that "Day by day, in every way, the outlook for Elon grows brighter and brighter." That outlook, please God, shall not be dimmed by indifference or unwillingness to sacrifice in this crusal hour in which our future, not to say our existence, hangs in the balance. We must do this challenging deed. We can do it and, God helping us, we shall do it.

W. A. HARPER.

HELLO, CHARLIE, HOW'S THE BABY?

BY SION M. LYNAM.

The patient has been ill a long, long time—since when, nobody knows. It began in that hour when one man possessed more of this world's goods than another. It began in that hour when labor and capital were recognized as entities separate and distinct.

Through innumerable ages the malady has existed, but not until a hundred years ago did men become conscious of its acuteness. The slave, in a condition far worse than is imaginable today, made no outcry against his unhappy lot, but assuaged the pain that must have eked out his living with some strange opiate.

A hundred years ago the world underwent a vast volcanic eruption in the social order. It was the most gigantic upheaval of all time. The social strata, standards, and conceptions of a thousand years were deranged. The malady which had lain dormant for so many centuries refused longer to be drugged into oblivion, and made itself felt acutely. Vast multitudes whose fathers and whose fathers' fathers had spent miserable existences in unfathomable reaches of darkness were thrust suddenly upward into a sphere pervaded by something akin to light. They were nearer, millions of leagues nearer, the places of earth's high and mighty, but in the half-light of their new-found sphere, they caught a vision of the immeasurable distances which differentiated man from man. Like Tantillus and Dives, they became vividly conscious of their own position. Hell would not have been so intolerable had heaven not been so near. Poverty would not be so unendurable were it not contiguous to wealth. It was the bringing into close proximity of all the varigated strata of society which caused the problem to become acute and made the world cognizant of its own awful illness.

There must always be labor, and there must always be capital. There must be those who toil and those who direct. There must always be individualism, and opportunities for the expression of that individualism. These things must always be, and it is the problem of the present age to create a condition of such harmonious relationships that these may exist without either clashing with each other or with the social order.

Men have long assumed, like Napoleon, that there must be aristocracy in the hands of the nobility, in the houses of opulence or in the hands of the proletariat. History is one continuous record of the efforts of men to shift this aristocracy. The Grachii in Rome, Robspierre in France, and Trotsky and Lenine in Russia are but outstanding incidents in this eternal restlessness. They rose from darkness into a blinding light, and in those moments of blindness went too far afield; but it is to such men that the world owes what measure of progress it has achieved.

There must always be labor, and there must always be capital, but there need not be a recognition of these as entities separate and distinct. All the world's troubles grow and have grown out of misunderstandings, and this direst of all earth's ills grows out of a most stupendous failure to see facts and realities in their correct relationships. The mighty magnate of moneydom, who dwells in his magnificent mansion, who drives about the streets of Vanity Fair in his palace car, and whose draft for a million would be honored at the nearest bank around the corner, sees in the surging multitudes mere automatons whose sole excuse for living is that they may send streams of gold flowing into his lordship's coffers. On the other hand, the toilers see but the magnificent mansion, the palace car, and the tyrant. They see his ease and luxury, and contrast it with their toil and poverty. Both fail to see the essential in both, man in all of his glory.

There are two hundred and ninety thousand industries in the United States. Were it possible to assemble all those employers and to ask of them one by one what they desired most from their workmen, almost without exception the reply would be "Efficiency." Yet, were it possible to grant them the decree of efficiency which they now desire, it would satisfy them only momentarily. It isn't the money they want, but they are unable to define that something for which they yearn, and they seek to satiate that heart-hunger with an ever-increasing gold pile.

There are millions of workers in the United States today, and were it possible to condense their replies to the question of what they most desired, the answer would be better working conditions, shorter hours and better pay. Could one select from all that mighty assemblage the most daring, the most radical in his demands, and grant his uttermost hope, there would be somewhere in less than a year a strike for identically the same demands. It isn't in every case better working conditions, shorter hours and better pay that the workmen want; they seek the gratification of a heart-hunger for which they have no name. If efficiency will not satisfy the capitalist, and if better working conditions, shorter hours and better pay will not satisfy the toiler, then, what will satisfy them? What will solve the problem and bring industrial peace?

Several decades ago a Dayton manufacturer decided in his great heart that his factory should be flooded with light, his machinery and workers clean. It was done for humanity's sake, but it paid financially. His fellow-employers laughed, then followed in his train. Soon, however, Dayton's labor was demanding better working conditions, and Dayton's capitalists were crying "ingratitude." Capital had erred, not in that they had given better working conditions, but they had given paternity when the hearts of men desired fraternity. It is not paternity, but fraternity, that labor wants. It is not a benevolent despotism, but a democratized brotherhood which will bring industrial peace.

When the capitalist sees in the toiling hosts manhood with hopes and loves, aspirations and ambitions like as his; when the workmen see beyond the mansion, the palace car, and the tyrant to the man; when they understand that he, too, is a toiler, the problem will be far toward solution.

When the capitalist and his foremen know their men as Napoleon knew his soldiers, and Charlie Schwab his shipbuilders; when they know the condition of their homes through a mutual sympathy, so that in the morning when Charlie comes to his work they can say, "Hello, Charlie, how's the baby"? in a tone assuring him of sympathy; and when both understand that they are brothers engaged in the great work of creation for the improvement of the condition of mankind, and that if one suffers all suffer, the problem will be solved.

BRO. WHITE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PARISHIONER.

My dear Brother White:

Yes, I am still here, and I am not quite through talking about the big sermon you preached at that conference, how those "Big Guns" did appreciate it, and how they honored you, by requesting that it be published in The Christian Sun. Whatever may be said to the contrary, I have always rejoiced in the exaltation of others. If I cannot do the work in an honorable way myself, I will lend my loyal support to those who can, but you know of others in the church, who if they cannot be bell sheep, they won't be any sheep at all. I was pleased to learn that you enjoyed Christmas, and received many valuable presents. Of course I did not expect any presents, so I was not very much disappointed. I never give presents expecting something in return. If I know of anyone really in need, I slip around the corner and give what I think I can spare and say nothing about it. I believe that is carrying out more of the spirit of the Master, than to give expecting something in return, and if you do not get anything, feel a little disappointed or sore about it. That big check of fifty dollars and sixty cents from the Agent of The Christian Sun was not a Christmas gift, that was a reward for service. I have wondered whether you would have worked quite as hard to get subscribers, for The Christian Sun if it were not for the reward you were getting out of it. Is reward to be the prime incentive to larger and better service, or is it love? Paul said: "The love of Christ constraineth me"—to endure and to serve Christ and his church. That is the way I look at it, may be my ideal is too high. I see you are still meddling with the Men and Millions, looks as though that thing has become one of your hobbies. All I have to say is, be careful you do not ride it to death. I guess it is all right, but I just can not comprehend it, it's just too big for me. When my religious habits were forming we were thinking in terms of pennies and nickles. Millions, millions, what would we do with so much money if we had it? One trembles to think of the multiplied activities, stupendous organization and tremendous financial drives of the Christian Church in this busy age. We see all around us a Church toiling with unexampled expenditures of wealth, and effort and time. It is difficult to repress the suspicion that the WORK is out of proportion to the LIFE. Ah, Brother White, I have just been wondering, how much of all this energy of effort, so admirable in many respects will He whose fan is in his hand accept as true service, how much of it will be wheat for the garner, how much chaff for the fire? I am not knocking the Men and Millions, but I just cannot comprehend it—it is too big for me, but I will resolve to work with it and for it now and hope to understand its infinite proportions and divine effects in the great bye and bye.

I was somewhat hurt when you started in again to berate my abilities or capabilities, notice I did not say under rate them, for you could not possibly do that, but you have caused me to loose faith in myself, and faith in self has ever been the miracle worker of the ages. You called me a half Christian, half church member, half church attendant, half financial supporter of the church, half subscriber to The Christian Sun and said I compelled you to be a half preacher. Allow me to say this, without insulting your dignity, that I am putting vastly more into the church and all of its departments, than it ever put into me, at the time my habits were forming. The wise old preacher said: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart therefrom." He might as truthfully said: "Neglect the training of a child in the way he should go, and when he gets old it will be difficult or (impossible) to change his habits thereof." I am half a man, with half a character, only able to do half for the Kingdom, with half developed powers, because the church only did half its duty for me in the adolescent period, or even in earlier childhood. Then was the time when I was susceptible to impressions, like a brick before being burned, or a sprout before it becomes a tree, but my habits are formed and impressions slight, at this late hour.

HOW DOES THIS VIEW STRIKE YOU?

There are many questions confronting the average man and woman in this day which require not a little wisdom to answer well and wisely. How to control boys and girls—to go far enough, and not to go too far, well that is what takes wisdom—wisdom from above—to enable a true father and mother to do the right thing by their children. If we do not properly restrain the children, they will go wild; if we do restrain them and are over severe in doing so, then we may make just as much of a mistake, as in the other case. When a child is not restrained at all, he will go wrong almost surely; when he is over restrained, then when he does get free from over much restraint, then he is likely to go into the excess which had been forbidden him in the days of his childhood. Now there you are! What are you going to do about it?

In one of our exchanges we find the matter presented rather forcefully, if not wisely, and we are publishing it here, not as the surely correct thing to do, but as likely to get parents and others who are responsible for the training of children to think, and it may be that thinking will lead them to praying and praying may lead to getting wisdom from above and so be able to learn how to do the right thing.

Our exchange says:

Of course we do not understand them. These boys and girls that move about in our homes are so different from their fathers and mothers. They do not take life as a serious dose of medicine; they have little fear of getting into trouble; the decalogue was never written for them; they never for a moment live in the shadow of Mount Sinai; its thunderings and lightning flashes give them little trouble; they dance and sing and parade and stay out nights and make love like the birds with no fear of the consequences. These young folks of today refuse to listen to the council of their betters. They drive past sign-posts; they laugh in the face of the warning, "danger, slow down;" they plunge over the precipice with "hurrah" upon their lips, as though they were going at a venture. We, their seniors, are amazed and scandalized. We give up. We confess we cannot understand them. We can scarcely endure the flighty foibles and the flippancy of the flapper. We would unceremoniously send her to the edge of the social derelicts. We want modesty; we want reserve; we want control and poise; we want womanliness, restrained beauty; we desire queenliness and majesty of personal conduct. O, we do want so much that grace of modesty, so lacking in the life of the average girl today! Will we get it? Well, why should we want it? Why not stop wanting and train ourselves to put up with what we have? We cannot train them any better. They must have their fling; they cannot resist the atmosphere in which they live. We should not expect them to do that; they are young and wild things; they should not be expected to settle down and be old. Certainly not. This is not what we mean. We are with all our equals and with all their betters, wanting the return of that grace known as "Christian modesty." Who can return it? Who has it in keeping? Who has made it possible for this beautiful grace to absent itself from the life of the present day? Who? Ask the winds. Who? Ask the birds that fly about your head. Who? Let the wise man answer. Hear him. He answers—the mothers of the land!

Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Franklin, Va., is to have charge of the morning devotional services at the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College July 30th to August 5th.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE TESTIMONY OF A TITHER.

"Dear Brother Atkinson,—Enclosed find check for $5, to be applied to the mountain work in Virginia, where you think it will do the most good. Since I have begun to tithe I find I can help in new fields. With very good wishes,

Your friend."

If I thought he would pardon me I would give his name, but he is a modest man, and does not care to advertise his virtues. It may be said, however, that he does not live in Virginia, but in Alabama, where he is helping our Bethlehem College most liberally and loyally. But when people begin to tithe, God always enlarges the scope of their benevolence and the vision for greater usefulness and service. Yes, the Bible way is always the best way; and tithing is as plainly taught there as any conduct of life can be taught. Why not quit our way and adopt God's way for us? That is always better.

J. O. ATKINSON.

A CHEERING WORD, INDEED.

This comes from Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., and will carry great joy and satisfaction to all who have the work at heart and know the man.

"Dear Brother Atkinson,—I have entered actively upon the work of financial secretary for Bethlehem College and will appreciate any suggestion or advice or helpful word at any time. I must say that I have had two of the happiest days of my life—yesterday and today. Was at Mt. Zion Church and among her people, and plan to finish there tomorrow. The people are responding nicely to the call and interest of our Bethlehem College, and I find a sweet spirit of co-operation manifest everywhere, both among our own people and others."

Knowing Brother Hunt as I do, and our people in Georgia and Alabama and the deep determination on their part, by the help of God, to have a Christian college, the spirit of co-operation I am sure is not only hearty, but sweet indeed, and the happiness of Brother Hunt is of no surprise. He is engaged in the great task for a most worthy cause.

Two men amongst us who are bearing now more than their share of our burdens are Brother Hunt and Dr. Harper. The former that our junior college may begin, the latter that our great and good Elon may be rebuilt and go forward on a larger and better scale than ever before. Both these men are beneath tasks that command our ardent prayers, profoundest interest and heartiest co-operation. Surely our God is leading on and has revealed to us of the Southern Convention a task large enough for our united effort and heavy enough to bring us shoulder to shoulder in an endeavor that knows no failure. We of the Christian Church are living in days of great undertakings for our God and the Church. Let us follow steadfastly where He leads, and pray without ceasing that He will give strength to our leaders and heart to all of us to follow and to do our best in His name.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

The mission secretary had the duty and the privilege of going last week to Fancy Gap, Va., and to visit our work and the workers there. First of all, our long-time friend, Brother W. E. Lindsay, took charge and gave us hospitable shelter and protection on arriving at Mt. Airy. And then this brother's kindness had just begun, for he laid aside all his work for the day and, with his Ford, went on the entire journey and helped unceasingly in all the tasks and efforts of the trip.

Repeated pleas had come for a new church and school building for our Sandy Ridge and Rocky Ford congregations and people. These two churches organized last summer and want to consolidate and help to build a house for teaching and for worship about midway between the two present preaching places. This location we found on the main highway between the North Carolina line from Mt. Airy and Hillsville, Va., at the fork of two roads, which make the location accessible to a large number of the people. Though the day was unfavorable and threatening, we found Pastor Bradshaw and about thirty or more of his people awaiting our arrival at 10 A. M. About an acre of ground had been surveyed and a deed had been drawn, and I was asked to accept the same as a free gift to the Mission Board from the former owners. It seems a most promising location for a school and church. Mrs. Meredith, Miss Morey, Brother Bradshaw and others who have worked in the community and are acquainted with the situation feel that there is no more promising place in all the mountain section and among a no more worthy and appreciative people than are to be found here. The people are intelligent and eager for a school and a place of worship and are willing to do all within their reach to secure it. They will certainly make their full contribution to the establishment of the church and school and to its support here. The people seemed of one mind and of one heart and were universal in their plea for our efforts in their midst, and expressed the deepest appreciation for what we have done and are trying to do. It would be difficult to imagine a community more worthy of a church and a school and more willing to do their best to secure and support it.

A visit to the Elk Spur School found Miss Midyett, with twenty-five pupils, busily engaged either in working arithmetic or learning and singing songs of gladness and of praise together. She is happy in her work, and the pupils, as well as the parents, seem grateful for her unselfish service in their behalf. Miss Margaret Morey, who went for us last fall soon after the A. C. C. at Burlington, has proven herself a worker that needeth not to be ashamed and has won her way into the affections and esteem of all who know her there. She is recovering now from a fierce seize of the "flu" and is happy in the thought of being in the class room and in her Sunday school again in a few days.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw is the pastor of the whole mountain district and is devoting his consecrated energies and efforts to the task of helpfulness and Christian service to all with whom he comes in contact. He is happy in his work, has won his way into the esteem of the people and is constantly winning souls to Christ.

Our mountain work is most hopeful indeed. I found the people whom we have sought to help most responsive and most appreciative. Our mountain friends are certainly responding to the challenge for educational and moral and spiritual uplift, are most heartily co-operating in all our endeavors, and thoroughly appreciate the sacrifices our people are making in their behalf.

The board needs growing and constantly enlarging contributions to assist in this great Christian service and to help these fine people who are seeking to help themselves as they have the light. I doubt if any money contributed for any cause is spent amongst us to better effect than that which we have spent in Carroll County, Va.

I visited Mrs. Iola Meredith in her home, and she is most happy in seeing the great work go forward, which she so wisely and courageously began. Her heart is still in the work, and the burden of it is constantly upon her.

Brother Lindsay is authority for saying that we had truly a great and a good day, and one that was worth living through, and every effort put forward to meet and measure up to it. Our dear friends of the mountains in Carroll County are one with us in Christian service and the forward march toward progress and kingdom enlargement.

THE FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH—PLUNGE BENEATH ITS WATERS.

The following article recently appeared in the Norfolk, Va., Ledger-Dispatch from the pen of Rev. Edwin B. Flory, pastor of the First Christian Church, Berkley Ward, Norfolk, Va. We commend its reading with pleasure.—EDITOR.

Ponce de Leon made a long journey at great expense and with grave danger, that he might discover the Fountain of Youth. It was but a mythical place and this romantic voyage failed. Paul found it, in a dark and damp prison cell in the city of Rome while suffering for the cause of Christ. Poor Ponce passed by it in Spain and missed it in Florida. As you and I watch the new calendar and discover that one more year has been added to the world's age and ours, some of us must view in alarm with what Van Dyke says: "Realizing that our work is almost ended and not yet finished."

What is the secret of youth that we might keep young even while the "shortening step tells the tale of lengthening years"? Youth is to be desired for its vigor and its hope. No matter how oft defeated, it arises undaunted and unafraid. But when strength and hope are gone, then old age and decrepitude of spirit have come, it matters not the number of years. A forward look of hope and an indomitable energy prove that the fountain has been found for that soul. In his letter to the Philipians, Paul tells them that he has found it. "Forgetting the things which are behind" is the first plunge into that refreshing pool. Whenever a man discovers that his conversation is upon events of his yesterdays, he may be sure he is getting old. When he can remember the coldest winters and the "biggest storms" of his past with more zest than he can anticipate the tomorrows, then the balance of power has gone over to old age.

Youth forgets yesterdays and every one of us that would be strong dare not be bound by the past. No year of blight and despair dare grip our hearts and minds so that our energies cannot be released for the year ahead. All too many of us have had heavy burdens and deep sorrows in the past years. The very light of our life has flickered. The hope of many homes has been lost in the death of a son or daughter. The sun has set in cloudy sky with the loss of precious loved ones and the days are all dark and dreary.

> "Be still, sad heart, and cease repining,
> Behind the clouds the sun is shining.
> Thy fate is the common fate of all—
> Into each life some rain must fall,
> Some days must be dark and dreary."

It is certain that all too many of us have made a mess of life during the years past. Our cherished plans went to pieces. But this need not be our doom unless we keep forever under the wreckage. No failure can be so terrible as long as life lasts that tomorrow cannot heal the wound.

Queer as it may sound, yet it is surely true, that success drives the spirit of youth away as often as failure. For success is fully as hard to bear as failure. Too many of us lost the enthusiasm and hope of youth because we got what we wanted and were satisfied. We are now living on last year's success and may be classed with the "lame ducks" and "the has-beeners." Last year's success looks about as glorious as last year's apples on the trees this spring. Fruit trees are valuable when they bear a new crop each year and we might well consider the fruit tree. There are all too many folks of all ages who can't forget they won the game winter before last. Shackled to past glories, the world smiles, pities and then leaves them behind still talking of the times when they were young. Only tottering and doddering old, old folks have time to talk much of the days when they were boys.

There was enough discouragement and success to have kept Paul's mind and spirit tied to the days of yesterday, but he refused to be old. Instead he arises from the comfortable bed of yesterday and takes a plunge into the fountain of youth. It is always a cold morning dip coming up to face a new day and a glowing sun. But too many of us like a nice hot bath and then sit down comfortably and doze off in the thoughts of long ago. The fountain of youth is filled with sparkling cold water, invigorating and life-giving. There will be but one thing left to do if we have turned our back on the past, being unwilling to be bound or held either by its sorrows or its glories. We must look to the tomorrow for our thoughts, our hopes and our glories.

"And stretching forward to the things which are before" we must now face a rising sun and not a setting one. The new effort may cause us pain and discomfort. We may discover unused muscles that easily become fagged and worn with strenuous exercise. Any unusual effort as simple as Camp's "Daily Dozen" is sufficient proof that we will move forward with pain. But it is the development of the unused powers and the securing of reserved strength that will prove our youth. Old thoughts and old habits are as comfortable as old clothes and old shoes, but a man always steps quicker and gathers more self-respect with new shoes and new clothes. There is a lot of enthusiasm in giving your mind and your spirit new garments. They gather self-respect and pride to themselves.

But there are too many who live by another philosophy. They refuse to make New Year's resolutions. They say, "If I don't make them I can't break them." They would rather be content and satisfied than to suffer failure which to them is the worst disgrace. That is false. Failure need not be feared. Rather shall we fear stagnation and decay. Only to the man who has the courage to risk all can real power and growth come. Failure may be an index to the bigness of a man's soul. As Browning says:

"Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids not sit nor stand, but go!
Be our joys three-parts pain!
Strive and hold cheap the strain;
Learn nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe!

For thence—a paradox
Which comforts while it mocks—
Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail?
What I aspired to be,
And was not, comforts me:
A brute I might have been, but would not sink in the scale."

Jesus took the same attitude in the parable of the talents. Praise and commendation were given freely to the ten and five talent men who returned with other talents. Contempt and condemnation followed by disgrace were given to him who feared to try and dared not attempt.

He lost even that which he had. Far better would it have been if he had returned with but a half talent and the proof that he had stretched himself, yet had lost. The Master could have done no less than have rewarded him as He had the others. It is most certain that the worst failure is the failure to try.

If the business world finds it worth while to take an inventory just now of its business affairs to discover the places of strength and weakness and the stock on hand, it surely behooves every man of us to check up and discover ourselves. The facts may be disagreeable, but, nevertheless, profitable. Having found the facts, let us stretch every nerve to go forward.

The goal toward which we move will determine largely the zest of our activity and the achievements to be expected. Paul says: "I press on toward * * * Jesus." Now, indeed, have we found the fountain of eternal youth, and here is the source of this cool, refreshing stream.

No half-way goal shall satisfy the real man, and the ultimate goal is Christ Jesus. I press on until the Christ shall live in me and my life shall have acquired His spirit. I shall be pure within as He is pure. That every effort of mine, re-enforced by the grace of God, shall be given to the making of my individual life blameless. Moreover, I shall serve my fellowmen as He served them, and all their weaknesses and sufferings I shall view with compassion. And I shall love God with His love. Here, then, I shall approach the goal of mankind's perfection of character in that I shall be pure in heart, a servant of my fellowmen and a child of the Heavenly Father. I must be young in spirit and strength if I shall attain this goal. My very attempt will bring youth itself. Because I have not reached His purity, my golden age must be tomorrow. Since the kingdom of love and brotherhood has not come, I must toil severely for the kingdom of God. Because my promise of life is to know God and I have ventured but a little ways on this path of friendship, I must look forward to a closer relationship to Him. With my hopes and ideals ahead and so much yet to do, I must be young. I dare not be old. He indeed finds that fountain of youth who can turn his heart and soul upward and onward and find the glories of tomorrow more enchanting than any yesterdays.

Every day is a fresh beginning.
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain:
And spite of old sorrows, and older sinning,
And troubles forecasted and possible pain,
Take heart with the day and begin again.

ROSE HILL CHURCH CALLS PASTOR.

From a secular paper we print the following clipping:

At a conference of the Rose Hill Christian Church, following the regular morning services yesterday, on recommendation of the pulpit committee of that congregation, Rev. R. A. Whitten, well-known Christian minister, who was reared at Athens, was called to the pastorate of the Church to succeed Rev. R. F. Brown, who, it will be remembered, resigned some weeks ago, effective the first of March, to accept the pastorate of a large Church of that denomination in Ohio.

Rev. Mr. Whitten was present at the time action was taken by the Church and accepted the call with the understanding that his work here will be actively taken up about the first of May. At present, Rev. Whitten is with the Mission Board of the Church, doing field work, and will not be in position to leave that work for about a couple of months, during which time he will be in Virginia and North Carolina.

Rev. R. F. Brown will leave for his new field of work in Ohio immediately, he stated to a representative of the Ledger. Mrs. Brown and their son, R. F. Brown, Jr., left last Thursday for North Carolina, where they will spend a few weeks with Mrs. Brown's mother.

Rev. Mr. Whitten states that Mrs. Whitten and their three children will move to Columbus right away from LaGrange, where they have been living recently, and will occupy the Christian parsonage at 1020 Park Place soon after it is vacated by Rev. Brown.

During their residence in Columbus, Rev. and Mrs. Brown have made many staunch friends, who regret their departure but wish them every success in their new field.

Rev. Whitten is well known in Columbus as an earnest Christian workers and able speaker, and the Church is being congratulated upon having secured his services. Until he is able to actively take up the work here, the pulpit will be supplied by different ministers from time to time, it is expected.

HELPFUL LITERATURE ON REQUEST.

We now have on hand the following leaflets and folders, needed copies of which we will send to any pastor or captain of Men and Missions for distribution in your congregation, namely: "Our Account With God," "Can a Woman Tithe"? "Obedience, the Master's Test," "Does a Tenth Belong to God"?

If any reader wishes either or all of these and desires to know what the Bible teaches on the subject of tithing and stewardship, we will be pleased to furnish copies without charge.

Let us be up and doing, for the night is coming in which no man can work. We cannot buy salvation with work, but, being saved, work may bring us a blessed reward.

WHAT HAPPENED AT LAUSANNE?

By Rev. James L. Barton.

(This address by Dr. Barton, the first after his return from the Lausanne conference, was delivered at a meeting of the Commission on International Justice and Good Will of the Federal Council of Churches.)

After the Smyrna tragedy there was an almost universal appeal from the missionary and religious organizations of America to the President and to the State Department that the United States should do something to prevent the transporation of the Smyrna tragedies across the Bosphorus into Constantinople and Europe. In view of a proposed conference for the settling of the Near Eastern question, this appeal included a request that the United States should have official representation in the conference and be ready to take its share in its conclusions. It is doubtful whether in all the history of the United States there has ever been an appeal to the government so generally endorsed and backed up by the religious and philanthropic and moral interests of the nation. I was told in Washington that the mails of the President and of the State Department were flooded even in excess of the way they were just before America entered the war against Germany; that the sentiment of the country was more united on the question whether America should take her place in stopping the tide of barbarism that was threatening to sweep across into Europe. And you know the result. Three delegates represented the United States on the sidelines in the conference, and that was the conclusion of the whole matter.

An Impossible Position.

Our delegates were there and they were in an impossible position. I never have had greater sympathy with any group of men in any assembly than with these men who represented the moral sentiment and the interest of the United States in that significant conference that was sitting to settle all the great Near Eastern affairs. I talked with many newspaper correspondents—and I want to say that they were of the very best type that can be gathered out of the experienced body of newspaper men—and every last man with whom I talked said that the unofficial representation of the United States would not have been tolerated for one hour if France and England had not been heavily indebted to us and had not been afraid that the United States might send them a note and say: "When will you pay some of that interest, and what about the principal?" They were bound, in dealing with our representatives, to consider them simply as advisers because just before the conference there was an official interview at Washington, published in the London papers quite at length, to the effect that no matter what was done at Lausanne, the United States would take no responsibility for the result and would join no demonstration against Turkey nor make any other arrangement whereby the representatives of the United States should assume any responsibility for the conclusions of the conference. Our representatives were there to advise England, France and Italy as to what they should do in the settlement of Near Eastern affairs, with the assurance that whatever they got out of the Lausanne conference, the United States would expect the same. Whenever our representatives spoke, they spoke on what ought to be done, not to help do it.

The Pity of it All.

You can imagine the position they were in. How different that situation from what it would have been if the sentiment expressed in the many petitions to the State Department had been listened to and followed. Suppose the United States had been there taking its share of responsibility, with the Secretary of State as its representative (for this was an official conference and the nations were represented by their ministers of foreign affairs), saying at the outset that the American nation would stand together with the several nations in this conference to carry the matter through, and carry it through right. I think there was not a man at Lusanne who did not believe that if they had done that, the whole thing could have been finished in six weeks, and finished right. But that was not the condition. We were there simply to advise and to see that the allies secured the most possible in the concessions that were to obtain in the treaty, so that when America made her treaty we might secure all they had won. So far as was possible under those limiting circumstances, our representatives did well.

A Great Loss.

For three months the discussion continued and our men stood for certain specific things. Without doubt we helped secure the freedom of the straits. Another objective which the American representatives struggled to secure was an Armenian national home. I suppose they put more time and more effort into that than anything else. They had strong instructions from Washington to find a place to which the Armenian population could be taken, orphans from the Near East Relief and others dependent on charity, where they could speedily become self-supporting. They lost out on that. The Turks came there after a tremendous military victory, much elated at what they had achieved. They came feeling their way. They moved cautiously until it became apparent that France and Italy would not join with England in any coercive measures. Lord Curzon gave them two or three ultimatums. At first they yielded; they did not want to fight even England. When they began gradually to sense the situation and to see that no force was to be used against them, they became bolder.

The Turks are in the Saddle.

Another point was the old question of whether Christians should be driven out of Turkey. Our delegation said they should not. But Dr. Nansen came over from the League of Nations with the statement that the only solution of the Turkish question was an exchange of populations. That sounds very good until you begin to figure out what it means—it means chiefly driving the Armenians out of Turkey. But the Turks were allowed to remain in Thrace as long as the Greeks remained in Constantinople. An order was issued that the Armenian populations should get out of Turkey. They were given thirty days to do so. Strong opposition arose to such an extent that the order was modified to allow "liberty" to go for thirty days. In some places the notices were worded as follows: "You now have liberty to go out of the country. If you fail to go out of the country now, the government will not be responsible for anything that happens to you later." So they got out. Practically the whole Armenian population evacuated except the men from fifteen to fifty years of age who were retained as prisoners. The exchange of populations came to mean the elimination, possibly temporary, of the Armenian from the Turkish empire, except in Constantinople, and many there are receiving notice to leave.

What the Turks Have Gained.

Let us see what has been won by the Turks.

In the first place, the Turk has won control of Constantinople. The English have some troops there for the protection of the city, but Lord Curzon himself said that in case of war between Turkey and Great Britain the whole army would be sacrificed. In Constantinople, I am informed, they have the archives of the embassy boxed and ready for shipment.

The second point that the Turks have won is the right to expel a non-Mohammedan population. It is the one thing I most feared from the conference. Here was a principle which has never, so far as I am aware, been discussed in any other great international conference. At Lausanne it was discussed and Turkey was virtually accorded the right to expel her Greek and Armenian population because they were not satisfactory to her. This has been done at a conference at which seven nations sat as participants. I raise the question whether that is not a dangerous precedent to set—to say that a nation that wants to rid itself of any part of its population should have the right to send them out with no warning and no place to which they can go?

Turkey is Not Bound.

Turkey has secured also the "right" to abrogate previous engagements that she has entered into during all time. That fact has been tacitly acknowledged, although under protest. I raised the question with Ambassador Child before I left, "Suppose this treaty is not signed, what about the treaty of 1832 with the United States"? "Oh," he said, "that has been set aside by Turkey." All the concessions, all the capitulations, all the permits, all the agreements that have been entered into by previous Turkish governments prior to 1918 are wiped off the slate. The Turks are starting anew and the powers are practically accepting the situation and have labored for months trying to get something in place of the capitulations, tacitly acknowledging that the capitulations are abrogated.

No Help Can be Given Armenia.

Again, the Turks have won the absolute elimination of the Armenian question from any future discussion. I believe it is true that this is the first international conference in Europe that has been held to consider matters of the Near East since and including the Berlin conference, where the Armenian question has not been up for consideration. Ambassador Child made some strong representations on the subject. Lord Curzon gave a great message, and the Armenians made a complete case, prepared with great skill. I was informed that the Turks had said that they would not sign a treaty in which the Armenian question was mentioned or the word "Armenian" or "Armenia" appeared. The treaty, I believe, does not mention them at all. They are spoken of only under the name "minority population." In this conference that was supposed to settle the Armenian question, and with out delegation instructed to try to secure an Armenian national home, in a night the question was thrown over and the Armenian question was dead.

A Clean Bill of Health.

Another point that Turkey has won is the securing of a clean "bill of health" from the Lausanne conference. There was much said about atrocities. Ambassador Child made some splendid utterances, Lord Curzon was very frank about things that have shocked civilization, and they all said things that many of us have said, but in the final conclusion there is no indictment.

As far as I can see, there is no appeal from the findings, whether the treaty is signed or not. The highest tribunals we know for the trial of a nation, a tribunal made up of representatives of five powers who gave two or three months to the consideration of the subject, arrived at conclusions written into a treaty. There can be no appeal, unless you were to call the same group again and get them to reconsider the case. It seems to me we must acquiesce in the findings of this conference as the conclusion of a superior court of nations from which there is no appeal, however much we may rebel against the conclusion.

Greeks Must Evacuate.

So the Greeks must evacuate the country they occupied two thousand years before they ever heard of Turkey. The conference accepted it, and there is little use in raising protest against it now or of talking of its cruelty. We must acquiesce in the fact that the Armenians will not be given a national home within the boundaries of the Turkish empire, even though it be contrary to every moral sentiment of our being. Those questions have been discussed in the highest court and it has been decided that that is the solution of the race question in the Near East. We must also recognize that the Turk has the right to expel any other populations he does not like. In Constantinople I was told by some of our missionaries who have lived among the Kurds that the Turks feel towards the Kurds much as they do toward the Armenians. Turkey now has the right, under the sanction of this court, to turn out the Kurds.

Now, as to Some Conclusions.

My first conclusion is that we are forced to consider this Turkish case closed. The Turk has carried on his government by processes of massacre for a generation. He has been tried by a court of his peers and they have found no indictment against him. There is no court of appeal. Some say, "Appeal to the moral judgment of the world." It has been appealed to. It was appealed to in 1915 and after the tragedy of Smyrna. It was appealed to when that tragedy was in danger of being repeated in Constantinople. And nothing came of it. And immediately upon the heels of that tragedy this conference was called and they have come to this conclusion, and there is no higher court. The United States can now do nothing for the protection of the Armenians unless it were to declare war on Turkey and fight the war alone. We could have joined, three months ago, with England, France and Italy in a firm stand. Then the case could have been settled right and without war.

Only One Thing Can be Done.

There is just one thing that can be done. The question was raised in Lausanne after the Armenian case was closed as to whether England, France and Italy would appoint a representative each on an international commission to look into the condition and needs of the Armenian refugees, an "Armenian refugee international commission." Ambassador Child was heartily in favor of it. He agreed to do everything possible to secure co-operation on the part of the United States. This would create an international commission of four men, whose object would be to look into the needs of the Armenian refugees and see what could be done, even if it demanded national appropriation.

We have seen physical force fail in dealing with the Turkish empire. It has accomplished nothing. Whatever physical force was represented at Lausanne failed to make any impression upon the Turk. We are driven to the one thing we can stand for, namely: moral force. The only course open to us is to recognize the facts as they exist and muster our Christian forces. We have not lost faith in the power of Jesus Christ to win a nation and a people. We are driven from our confidence in physical force to our absolute belief and confidence in the power of the Gospel to change conditions in the world.

It is an interesting fact that the Turks in Lausanne recognize that there is a moral need. They said they want missionaries; that religious liberty is accorded. Turkey is no longer a theocracy. The government is divorced from religion. Religion centers in Constantinople and the civil government in Angora.

And Yet Turkey Needs Help.

Again, Turkey is going to need help to reorganize her government. They will be slow to take experts from Great Britain, France and Italy. America must be ready to furnish these. I believe that if we go into the League of Nations with Turkey (she has been accepted by the Lausanne conference and we cannot turn her out), we can bring to bear on Turkey a moral force that will have weight with her and will help her to be worthy of a place in the sisterhood of nations.

Coal's Cost in Human Life.

The Literary Digest gives us some very interesting figures as to the cost of coal in human lives. It says:

Twice in a decade have coal miners of Dawson, New Mexico, been trapped and entombed by mine explosions which snuffed out a total of 383 lives. And in both instances the mines were owned by the same corporation. In ten years, declares the New York Evening Post, "we have killed approximately 24,000 miners." Quite properly, then, the Denver Rocky Mountain News asks: "Are we utilizing everything that science can devise to make mines safe? Or do we hold human life cheaper than the cost of proper precautions that might cost a few cents more per ton to mine the coal?" In the latest disaster at mine No. 1 of the Phelps-Dodge Corporation, only two miners out of 122 entombed were saved. These had wrapped wet garments about their faces, and stretched full length in the shaft until the fatal gases cleared. Some of the others were burned almost beyond recognition.

On the same day, by a strange coincidence, an explosion occurred in mine No. 4 of the Canadian Collieries, at Cumberland, B. C., in which thirty-three men lost their lives. Little hope is held out for the twenty or more who remain entrapped, say Associated Press dispatches. The origin of the explosion, according to a telegram from the company, is unknown. Hence the query by The Focky Mountain News, which is published less than 300 miles from the New Mexico tragedy. Continues this paper:

"True, the Federal and State governments have taken in hand the question of mine safety, and experienced men are employed at strategical points as mine rescuers. Still the question remains of whether everything is being done that can be done to make coal mines safe.

"That familiarity breeds contempt for danger is true in the mine among certain classes of employees, but all the same it is the first duty of owners of properties to do everything possible to save the innocent from the criminally careless and to use precaution against conditions known to exist."

The latest available figures in The International Labour Review, of London, indicate that coal mining is much safer in the United Kingdom than in the United States:

Year	Number Workers Employed United States	Number Workers Employed United Kingdom	Number Fatal Accidents United States	Number Fatal Accidents United Kingdom	Fatality rate per 1,000 Workers United States	Fatality rate per 1,000 Workers United Kingdom

Is your Church going to send its pastor to the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College, July 30th to August 5th?

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

MARCH 25, 1923.

SUBJECT: Jesus, the World's Saviour.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—1 Tim. 1:15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Rev. 7:9-17.

LESSONS FROM LUKE'S GOSPEL.

This lesson completes the six months' study of the life of Jesus Christ as it is portrayed by St. Luke. The third Gospel aims to bring out those traits and elements in the character of Jesus which bind Him ever close to us. The eleven stories of the last months of the Saviour's life are filled with some of His most precious teachings. By parables, by healing, by counsel, and, most of all, by the example of His own life of service and sacrific, these lessons bring truths and lessons as vital to Christians today as to those who heard them from His lips.

A helpful preparation for this review lesson will be to read thoughtfully and prayerfully the eleven chapters of Luke which bring the lessons of the quarter (Luke 12 through 23), with the theme, "Jesus the World's Saviour," kept in mind. Make a list of the great teachings which impress you most in these chapters. Such lists may be compared in class.

One lesson may be assigned to each member of the class, with instructions to come on Sunday ready to tell, in not more than two minutes, the essential teaching of the lesson, or the truth which Christ impressed by the parable, or deed, of that day. This may be done in the lesson period, leaving the last five or six minutes for the teacher's summary.

Briefly, the lessons taught by the life and words of Jesus during this quarter, have been:

1. The Right Uses of the Lord's Day.—Luke 13.

It was the custom of Jesus to be in the synagogue on the Sabbath, and while there to be teaching. By healing the suffering woman, in spite of the condemnation of His enemies, Jesus placed His divine approval on deeds of helpfulness on the Lord's Day. Sunday is established to be a blessing to man. The right use of the day brings Christian strength and peace and happiness.

2. The Spirit of Christian Service—Humility and Sacrifice.—Luke 14.

To be willing to pay the price, is the cost of discipleship. This price is paid in service, in humble love, in sacrifice. These Christ exemplified in the highest degree. God is calling for faithful disciples. But many are still making excuses. Many are still crowding for the places of honor, rather than the posts of service. "Whosoever he be of you that renounceth not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

3. The Reach and the Power of the Father's Love.—Luke 15.

The lost sheep, the lost coin, the lost son—all tell the story of the loving concern of the Heavenly Father for His lost children. He is seeking them by the Holy Spirit. He is longing for them. He stands ready to welcome them home. "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

4. Right Uses of Wealth.—Luke 16.

Wealth offers an opportunity. Shall it be thrown away in selfish pleasure and self-gratification? Wealth is a blessing when used rightly. Wealth has often been a test of consecration. Wealth is a trust, calling for faithful stewardship. It may make the life richer and happier because used to help others. Its right use depends upon the heart of the possessor. "God knoweth your hearts."

5. The Grace of Gratitude, or Remembering to Thank God.—Luke 17.

"He who forgets to be thankful may one day find himself with nothing to be thankful for."—BISHOP THOROLD.

Ten lepers were healed. One came back to glorify God, and his life was greatly enriched. Men have food and homes and clothing today. How many glorify God? Men have health and strength and work? How many remember to thank God? "Count your many blessings, see what God hath done." "Remember God" is a good motto for the Christian.

6. The Spirit of Prayer.—Luke 18.

Sincere, humble petition to God, "in faith believing" is prayer. "Prayer is a power. Through prayer God does things which would not otherwise be done. When He says: "If ye ask, I will do," he very clearly hints that if we do not ask there will be some lack in His doing."—MCCONKEY. God is listening for our prayers. The Pharisees prayed to be noticed by men, the publican, because he knew that he had sinned, and needed divine mercy. "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," not a flight of oratory and self-praise. "Prayer is the Christian's vital breath," the strength by which he lives and grows.

7. Entertaining Jesus.—Luke 19:1-10.

Jesus visited the home of Zacchaeus, the little man whose whole heart had been filled with a desire to see the Master. The influences of that visit were far-reaching. Salvation came to his house. The whole trend of his life was changed. His standards of conducting his business affairs became different, because he had a Christian conscience after that day. An important work of the Church is to develop in men and women Christian consciences, which will lead them to apply in all affairs of life Christian principles. "Does the world take knowledge that you have been with Jesus"?

8. What returns Does Christ Require of Us?—Luke 19:11-48.

In the parable of the talents, the characters were especially gifted, with a different amount of genius. In the parable of the pounds, all start alike. It is a story of every-day life, of the common people. The return required by the master was faithful stewardship, industrious service. The man who made his one pound earn ten other pounds was rewarded with great responsibility. Christ wants faithful, consecrated followers, and He entrusts much to their care. Are you a profitable servant?

9. Jesus, the Fearless Teacher.—Luke 20:1-21:38.

Jesus was the Great Teacher of all times. He took the little children tenderly close to Him and taught of the kingdom of heaven. He was a loving Teacher to the suffering, the weak and the oppressed. And He was a fearless Teacher when approached by those who were seeking His very life. In the realm of politics he exhorted the people to give to the State what was due to the State, and to God what they owed Him. He answered their questions. He ignored their subtle flattery. He was not confounded by the Pharisees nor the Herodians, nor the Sadducees, all of whom came to Him with doctrinal queries. Every day he was teaching, and the people came early in the morning to hear Him. From Him they heard the truth.

10. Submission to the Father's Will.—Luke 22.

"Everything comes to him who gives everything." General Booth has declared that the secret of his success has been that God has had all of him for His work. Jesus Christ, in the darkness of Gethsemane, with His closest earthly friends sleeping where He had set them to pray, faced the crucial moment of His earthly life. He was concerned for the world which He had come to save. He faced the whole problem of human sin. He came forth victorious, saying "Not My will, but Thine be done." Great sorrows, great perplexities, great suffering come into every life. The all-important thing is: "Is there complete, willing submission to the Father's will"? Then all is safe.

11. The Ghost of Our Salvation.—Luke 23.

"He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with his stripes we are healed." "Our salvation cost Christ everything and costs us nothing; yet it requires our all after we are saved." We can never repay Him for the great sacrifice, only as we dedicate our all to Him. To accept His love, to believe on Him, to tell others the story, is what He asks. Can we do less?

"'It is finished' Christ in thee
Faith shall claim the victory
By the deeds that thou hast done:
In the battle thou hast won."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

MARCH 25, 1923.

Educational Missions at Home and Abroad.—Acts 19:8-20.

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

Men need to know "the things concerning the kingdom of God." Bold, fearless, consecrated teachers are needed.—Verse 8.

The early Christians met opposition and abuse and criticism, but they continued teaching until "all they that dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord." Persecution is no reason for ceasing a good work.—Verse 10.

God gives power to His faithful servants—Verse 11.

Impostors, pretending to serve God for their own selfish interests, will be overcome. God's power will make the work of His followers triumph over sin.—Verse 16.

The truth was victorious. Men believed, and confessed their sins. They destroyed their books of magic. They turned from their wrong-doing. "The word of the Lord grew and prevailed." This is what happens in all non-Christian lands when the word of God is preached.—Verses 18-20.

Ignorance must be overcome in order that Christianity may enter a country. Many men and women are crying for knowledge. Mission schools have a great work to do in spreading the Gospel.

Home Missions.

Religion and education go hand in hand. In many sections, the school paves the way for the Church. Our own work in Carroll County, Va., under the direction of Mrs. Iola Hedgepeth Meredith is a striking illustration. Through providing schools for the boys and girls, who had been deprived of all educational opportunities, Sunday Schools have been started, and a Church organized. Have the president of your Missionary Society tell the story of this work at your meeting.

The world survey by the Interchurch World Movement revealed the fact that there is in the United States 5,500,000 people over nine years of age who can neither read nor write.

Educational work goes hand in hand with the work of the Church at Haverhill, Mass., where Miss Frieda Kirkendall is making Christian-American citizens of the newcomers to our country living there. That is an important part of our own work in educational missions.

"God give us strength to make them men
And teach them brotherhood's own song!

"To be great, a nation does not need to be of one blood, but it must be of one mind." It is important that the foreigners who come to our shores in such throngs shall learn the spirit of America. They present the opportunity for foreign mission work, without going far from home. Can the man who despises the Italian in his own town, ridicules the Pole, or oppresses the Russian, have the true missionary spirit? Prejudices can be overcome in the spirit of the Christ.

The Christian ideal of universal brotherhood must be applied to the education of the negro race in America.

Logging camps present an opportunity for educational missions. Rev. W. R. Caldwell is in the State of Washington doing work of this type for the Christian Church.

Twenty-six different mission boards are carrying on work with the American Indians. There are twenty-five Protestant mission schools for Indians.

The opportunities for mission work at our very doors are challenging our very best work. If we are to be the "Christian nation" which we claim and wish to be, educational missions cannot be disregarded.

"Our country's voice is pleading,
Ye men of God arise!
His providence is leading,
The land before you lies;
Great Author of salvation,
Haste, haste the glorious day
When we, a ransomed nation,
Thy sceptre shall obey."

Foreign Missions.

In his most recent report, Rev. C. P. Garman, our missionary in Tokyo, Japan, says, after speaking of the few missionaries now on the field to do the great work that needs to be done, only four families, a single woman and twelve Japanese pastors, without a ministerial candidate in sight. "We have no school to turn out Christian leaders, as have most bodies working abroad. This seems to me to be responsible for a number of our difficulties." It is impossible to separate missions from educational work.

Our Girls' School at Utsunomiya, and Miss Stacy's kindergarten work in Japan, and Miss William's kindergarten work in Porto Rico, are all teaching agencies which make a great contribution to the work.

A letter from Mrs. D. P. Barrett, in the January Christian Missionary, tells of her interest in the schools of Ponce, and of her efforts to keep the girls of her Sunday School class in school.

When we realize that in the non-Christian world not more than one man in a dozen, nor one woman in twenty-five can read or write, the immense task before the Church is before us. In lands where people cannot read, darkness and suffering and sin reign.

Christian schools wield a mighty power. There are less than 40,000 mission schools working for the millions of illiterates in the non-Christian world. There must be more, for India, and China and Africa, and many more are calling for knowledge.

Japan has shown the power of education of the people in a country that did not know God. Fifty years ago, Japan adopted as her slogan, "Not a village with an ignorant family; not a family with an ignorant member." Today there is scarcely an illiterate to be found in all Japan under the age of thirty years.

"Lord of all power and might,
Father of love and light,
Speed on Thy word.
Oh, let the Gospel sound
All the wide world around,
Wherever man is found!
God speed his word."

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Secure all the information possible concerning educational missions and present it to the members in an interesting way at this meeting. The world survey of the Interchurch World Movement, Home and Foreign Volumes, contain much information that will be helpful. Invite the members of the missionary societies in your Church to be guests at this meeting.

Have "The Vision of a World's Need" from the little book "Making Missions Real," by Jay S. Stowell, given as a reading. (Copy of this will be furnished to any who will write the field secretary.)

Hymns to sing: "Tell Me the Old, Old Story," "Open My Eyes that I May See," "I Gave My Life for Thee," "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," "Jesus Calls Us."

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

In 1892 there were 20,080 Christian Endeavor Societies in existence, and in 1922, 80,000?

That United Evangelical Endeavorers have erected a Church in Siangtang, China?

That this year Governor Oliver H. Shoup, of Colorado, has offered to give for State Christian Endeavor work 25 cents for every dollar contributed for this purpose by Endeavorers?

That North Carolina had last year 1,014 registered delegates at its Christian Endeavor Convention—the largest number that ever attended a Christian Endeavor Convention in the South?

That Texas has a list of 1,000 Endeavorers who have offered themselves for the ministry or mission field?

In New York State last year 597 new Christian Endeavor Societies were organized?

That an average of sixteen new Christian Endeavor Societies has been organized in the United States every day in the past twelve months?

That India has today more than 2,000 Christian Endeavor Societies?

That before the war there were 600 Christian Endeavor Societies in Germany; and today there are more than twelve hundred?

That in the United States, Christian Endeavor Unions employ for full time nearly thirty field secretaries as compared with half a dozen ten years ago. That there are today eight full time Christian Endeavor field secretaries in the South, as compared with one seven years ago?

That in China there are now more than 1,200 Christian Endeavor Societies?

That one church in Christiana, Norway, has eighteen Christian Endeavor Societies?

That Christian Endeavor is doing a stronger and better work every year "For Christ and the Church," and that your Church needs the blessing, and your young people the inspiration, which a Christian Endeavor Society can bring?

ELON CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL METHODS.

July 30th to August 5th.

The Board of Religious Education is making every possible effort to make the Chautauqua of 1923 mean much to the work of the Christian Church. Suggestions as to how this may be done will be welcomed by the board from those who have attended the Chautauqua in other years and those who are planning to come this year.

Details of program and plans for the week will be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and any one who is interested in receiving special information regarding the Chautauqua, may receive the same through the office of the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

Plan now to have your Church represented at Elon July 30th. Plan now to spend your vacation with us there.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR INSTITUTES IN THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

There will be found in this issue of THE SUN a program in detail, together with the dates and places, of the Institutes.

We regret more time could not be given to each Institute. However, let us make the most of the time allotted us. Let us be prepared and let us be punctual.

We could not hold an Institute at every Church, so we have chosen for the places of meeting those Churches most central and convenient. We trust the participating schools and societies will make every effort to be well represented at the Institutes. They are just as much for you as for the Churches where they are held.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge will be at all of the Institutes. This means an excellent opportunity for us all not only to hear this great Sunday School man but to work with him.

Miss Lucy Eldredge will also be present at each Institute, and her mind, heart and soul are consecrated to the causes in whose interests the Institutes are held.

We are still hoping Mr. Frank B. Wilson will find it possible to be at several if not all of the meetings. Mr. Wilson is the Christian Endeavor field worker for North Carolina and Virginia.

As there are to be an open forum on Christian Endeavor efficiency and conferences on Sunday School work, we suggest that, in order to conserve the precious minutes of these periods, questions and subjects for discussion be prepared in advance.

In conclusion, let me urge a hearty co-operation on the part of all our schools and societies in these Institutes. JAS H. LIGHTBOURNE, Exec. Secy. E. V. C. S. S. C.

Christian Orphanage

THE GINGHAM DRESSES AND SHEETS ARE COMING IN.

Dear Friends:

Our good women are answering the call for sheets nicely, indeed. It is always very encouraging to us when our people will hear and heed the calls in behalf of the orphan children.

Mrs. Ada Hampsten, Eaton, Ill., sent to us two quilts, one shirt, five yards gingham.

Zion Christian Church, N. C., fourteen sheets, two towels.

Mrs. B. F. Gwaltney, Disputanta, Va., two sheets, two pillow-cases.

Mrs. B. B. Gwaltney's Sunday School class, Disputanta, Va., one sheet.

Missionary Circle No. 3, Burlington Christian Church, Mrs. C. M. Walters, president, thirteen sheets.

We are very grateful for these contributions. This makes thirty-two sheets in answer to our call. We feel sure the goal of 200 will be reached.

Ninety-four children in the orphanage family. Four others have been accepted, and will be here in a few days, and then we will lack just two to make our number 100. We hope our people will realize that 100 children make quite a family and that it takes quite a good deal to run them when we do the very best we can.

The spring months are always expensive, as it costs us right much to get our spring crops in the ground, with seed and fertilizer to buy (or much of it); then, too, the spring dresses, shoes and hats for the girls, and suits for the boys.

Easter Sunday will soon be here, and we always look forward to the Easter offerings to help us meet our spring expense bills and keep us from being embarrassed. I hope our people will put in a little extra when the Easter offering is taken, remembering we now have practically 100 children to care for—many more than we had last year.

Sunday, March 18th, will be spent in Churches in Norfolk and vicinity. On the 25th, Mr. Hermon Eldredge will visit the Holland Sunday School and speak at the Holy Neck morning service. On April 1st, Mr. Eldredge will address the Richmond Church at its anniversary service. April 2, a Sunday School Institute will be held for the officers and teachers at Richmond under the direction of the superintendent, Mr. D. J. Kelley.

The afternoon sessions of the institutes will be opened with devotional services conducted by the pastor of the institute Church, followed by an address on Christian Education by Mr. Hermon Eldredge, the field secretary of Young People's Work, of the Board of Christian Education. Conferences on Young People's work in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society, and on Children's Work will follow. It is hoped to make these afternoon sessions practical in an attempt to face squarely local problems, and solve them as far as possible. The evening program will include as its main feature an address by Mr. Eldredge on "Makers of Men."

This series of meetings has been arranged by the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, through its executive secretary, Rev. James H. Lightbourne, of Holland, Va., in co-operation with the field secretary of Religious Education, Miss Lucy Eldredge, of Richmond. The Board of Christian Education, of which Dr. W. A. Harper is chairman, is co-operating generously by sending its field secretary, Mr. Harmon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., for the full two weeks' service. Through this uniting of the forces directing the Christian educational work of our Church, it is hoped to conduct meetings that will be interesting, inspirational and most helpful to our workers in Eastern Virginia.

The Story of The Bible

By Hendrick Van Loon

is being published in McCall's Magazine. It is the most important and epoch-making contribution ever printed by an American magazine, because here for the first time has a master-writer and master-historian picked out shining thread of the Biblical narrative, dropping away all details from it and presenting it not only in the simplest and most beautiful of English but fixing it also in its exact historical perspective.

IN McCALL'S NOW.

"The Story of the Bible" is appearing now in McCall's. We have made special arrangements with the publishers so that you will be able to enjoy this beautiful presentation of the Bible story. For a short time only we can offer our readers this remarkable club—

WHAT MEN HAVE SAID OF PRAYER.

Whoever prays most, helps most.—William Goodell.

Expect great things from God.—William Carey.

Every step in the progress of missions is directly traceable to prayer.—Arthus T. Pierson.

He who faithfully prays at home does as much for foreign missions as the man on the field, for the nearest way to the heart of a Hindu or a Chinaman is by way of the throne of God.—Eugene Stock.

Let us advance upon our knees.—Joseph Hardy Neesima.

Communion without service is a dream; service without communion is ashes.—Robert E. Speer.

I never prayed sincerely for anything but it came at some time—no matter at how distant a day, somehow, in some shape, it came.—Adoniram Judson.

I resolve to devote an hour morning and evening to private prayer, no pretense, no excuse whatsoever.—John Wesley.

Ten minutes spent in Christ's society every day; aye, ten minutes, if it be face to face and heart to heart, will make the whole life different.—Henry Drummond.

We must not conceive of prayer as an overcoming of God's reluctance, but as a laying hold of His highest willingness.—Archbishop Trench.

On all my expeditions, prayer made me stronger, morally and mentally, than any of my non-praying companions. It lifted me hopefully over the one thousand five hundred miles of forest trays.—Henry M. Stanley.

I am so busy now that if I did not spend two or three hours each day in prayer I could not get through the day.—Martin Luther.

UNCERTAINTY OF THE FUTURE.

There are no guarantees of security in any department of human life. The one thing certain is that everything is uncertain. If we allow the past to teach us, and if we reflect on the ccurse of any year remembrance calls up, it was eventful, but scarcely ever in harmony with our anticipation. The curtain lifted upon unexpected experiences. We were the actors in peculiar adventures, of which nobody could ever have prophesied. Now, there is no prescience by which we can foretell what will come to any one of us. Health may be good or it may fail. Trade may revive or slacken. Circumstances may be congenial or compelling. Friends may be loyal or may desert us. Life may be prolonged on its earthly pilgrimage or the fruit of Canaan may be eaten this year. Nobody knows.

PASTOR'S HELPER

Has open dates after March 25th. Reasonable terms. Address Alfred Shumate, Box 351, Lima, Ohio; or General Delivery, Greensboro, N. C.

The companionship of God is our stay in the midst of our uncertainty. The divine knowledge is the complement of human ignorance. "He knoweth the way I take." Nothing can transpire without his knowledge. Let me dwell in his presence and commit my way to him, for the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and so—

"Every hour in perfect peace
I'll sing, 'He knows, He knows.'"

"ABIDE WITH ME."

There are few hymns whose notes are more tender and more comforting when comfort is needed than the familiar one of Rev. Henry F. Lyte. The circumstances of its writing appear in a little story which is told. He was pastor in a little fishing village for more than twenty-five years. His ministry has been richly blessed to the sailors and fishermen of the village. His health failed, and his physician ordered him to a milder climate—Italy. Before leaving he alarmed his friends and his family by announcing that he intended to preach to his people once more. He did so, and administered the Communion. That same evening he handed to a friend the words and music of his great hymn. The first stanza shows its appropriateness:

"Abide with me! Fast falls the eventide,
The darkness deepens—Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me!"

In less than two months after writing this hymn he died, was buried at Nice, Italy, and a marble cross marks his last resting place.—The Presbyterian.

One important measure passed in the final hours was the Farm Credit Bill, providing for the establishment of twelve intermediate farm loan banks, each with a capital of $5,000,000 subscribed by the government. It was one of the bills for which the Farm Bloc was contending most ardently.

MARRIED

On the 2nd day of March, 1923, as the day retired to a peaceful rest, were joined in matrimony Mr. William Edgar Stout to Miss Maggie Scott at the home of W. E. Scott. This indeed was a very impressive wedding, because of its unfeigned simplicity. The writer wishes for them a long and happy life.

DEATH

Little Hubert Hackney, the seven year old son of Bro. Jack Hackney and wife, of Bynum, N. C., departed this life at Watts Hospital, Durham, N. C., on January 26th. His body was taken to Hanks Chapel on the 27th and was buried in the church cemetery. He leaves to mourn his going a father, mother and three sisters with a host of friends. May the blessings of God abide and comfort the bereaved ones. Funeral conducted by the writer.

J. S. Carden.

TAPSCOTT

Clement Eugene Tapscott died at Elon College, N. C., February 16, 1923. The funeral services were conducted at Stony Creek Presbyterian Church, of which he was a member; the writer officiating, assisted by Revs. Sample and Robertson. He leaves a widow and six children: Claude Edward, Bettie Van, Ruth, Francis, Grace, and Polly Anna; two brothers, A. L. Tapscott, Burlington, and J. H. Tapscott, Union Ridge, and two sisters, Mrs. Nannie Kernodle and Mrs. Fannie Graham, both of Union Ridge. Mr. Tapscott was a good citizen and a devoted and self-sacrificing husband and father. May our heavenly Father bless and comfort his loved ones.

N. G. Newman.

JOHN L. HOLLAND

Mr. John L. Holland, a life long farmer, and for many years a member of the Holland Christian Church, died February 5th, 1923, age 76 years. Mr. Holland leaves a widow and many friends but no very near relatives.

Funeral services were held at the home, three miles north of Holland, Va., February 7th, and the burial was in the family cemetery on the farm. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, and a former pastor, Dr. W. M. Jay, officiated.

DEATH

Walter H. Kelly departed this life at his home in Richmond, Va., on February 20th, and on the 21st his body was brought to Durham, N. C., and interred in Maple Wood Cemetery on the 22nd.

Walter spent his early life in Durham. He was twenty-two years of age. He moved to Richmond, Va., with his parents about ten years ago. He joined the church while just a child and lived a consistent Christian life. To mourn his going is his father, D. J. Kelly, stepmother, four brothers and a host of friends. May the blessings of God abide with those who are left behind, is my prayer.

Funeral by Rev. J. S. Carden, assisted by Rev. M. T. Plyler.

J. S. Carden.

UPCHURCH

Mr. J. C. Upchurch, after several months of illness, died on the 21st of February, 1923. He had for a number of years been a member of Pleasant Union (Harneth) Christian Church where he was faithful and loyal. He will be missed at the church as well as in his own home.

He leaves a wife, one daughter, several sons (all grown), and many grandchildren and friends on the shores of time, whose hearts are sad because of his going.

The burial services were conducted from Neil's Creek Baptist Church and the body laid to rest in the Church Cemetery. Rev. Mr. Minese assisted the writer.

My own heavenly Father bless the bereaved ones and prepare them for the great reunion.

J. Lee Johnson.

JAMES MADISON DUKE

James Madison Duke was born April 29, 1838 and departed this life February 11, 1923, aged 85 years, 9 months and 18 days.

He was married to Sallie Parker in 1859 and was the father of 12 children of which number five boys still are living; G. W., A. T., J. C., and O. J. Duke, of Holland, and E. D. Duke, of Southampton County.

Mr. Duke was first united with Holy Neck Church at an early age but afterward moved his membership to the Christian church in Holland, where he remained a member till his death.

He was a veteran of the Civil War, and fought in this struggle for four years.

It is rather a remarkable fact that Mr. Duke should live and die at such a ripe old age, on the very farm where he was born. Funeral services were conducted at his residence by Rev. J. H. Lightbourne.

RODGERS

The funeral service of W. E. Rodgers was held at Liberty Springs Christian Church Monday afternoon, February 5, and although the weather was very inclement, many friends and relatives came to pay the last tribute of respect to their comrade and friend.

The funeral was conducted by one of our best beloved pastors, Dr. W. W. Staley; his remarks were both fitting and suitable for this sad occasion. His portrayal of a Christ life made your desire greater to become one of God's chosen.

Dr. I. W. Johnson led in prayer and Dr. W. M. Jay conducted the Woodman ceremony, which was very beautiful and impressive, expressing the high esteem in which the deceased was held as a member of their order.

In the passing beyond the veil of this loyal member, there is sadness in their hearts and a vacancy in their lodge.

They expressed their appreciation of his character and faithfulness in all the walks of life, and extended their sympathy to the bereaved family and prayed that Almighty God bring comfort to the heart of his beloved companion, who so faithfully ministered to his every need during his illness of many months.

Although he is dead but not forgotten, and though his body be laid in the earth, we believe that his soul disengaged from its cumbrous dust flourishes and blossoms in eternal day. The floral offerings were many and beautiful.

A Friend.

FACING.

Fleeing from trouble is the first escape for the coward. Fleeing from trouble is the last escape for the hero. The shame of it—cowardice!

When life becomes burdensome, lay it down, they suggest. Should Lincoln have laid down the duties of his office in the stress of the Civil War? Should Washington, or William of Orange, have laid down his burden when trouble faced him? Does it mean that Jesus Christ should have made His escape from the anguish of the crucifixion?

We shall not get rid of this cancer of divorce by law, either State or Federal. The Church is the solution. It should teach us that no life is worth living unless lived right. —Lyman Abbott.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Steamship Earnings—

Net income of $277,166 for the year 1922 is disclosed in the annual report of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company made public today as compared with a deficit of $495,591 in 1921. The corporation, which has operating headquarters in San Francisco, operated 32 steamships in 1923.

Operating revenue for the year totaled $4,616,513, compared with $5,948,931 the previous year. President Gale M. Carter said the company's ability to show a profit for the year was due to a policy of most rigid economy.

Pirates on the High Seas—

A schooner was recently started from Halifax, N. S., loaded with 600 cases of liquor, but before she had reached her destination she had been robbed, by pirates, of the liquor, and when she reached her destination she had no cargo. It seems the boat had reached the New Jersey coast and had anchored, when men, armed with pistols, boarded the vessel just at dusk and fired a volley of shots, wounding the super-cargo, Philip Knowles, and then at the point of the pistol they robbed the vessel of 600 cases of liquor and $8,000 in cash. That is a great tale, and it may all be true, but there is something "rotten in Denmark" most likely.

Will the Women Stand the Test?—

Miss Alice Robertson, of Oklahoma, has given up politics. In 1920 she was elected to Congress from Oklahoma. She was the owner of a cafeteria when she was elected to Congress. She has now retired from politics and says she is so glad to be at home once more. If Miss Robertson tired of political life in two or three years, what may we expect of others? While we have no opposition to offer to women voting, we think Miss Robertson's course shows, or may show, that woman enjoys a home more than she does life in politics, and we must admit that while we have no objection to women voting, we believe she is better suited to reign on the throne of home than she is to hold forth in the political arena.

World Conference on Education Planned—

A world conference on education, at which more than 400,000,000 school children will be represented, has been called by the National Education Association, to be held in San Francisco and Oklahoma City, Calif., June 28 to July 2.

The conference is called for the promotion of international peace and the mutual understanding of nations and peoples. Fifty nations of Europe, Asia, and North and South America assured the attendance of 1,000 delegates. In addition, 1,000 exchange professors will attend to sit with the delegates of their respective countries and act as interpreters.

With the idea that public school education is the foundation not only of democracy, but the beginning of lasting world peace and the solution of all world problems, the world conference on education promises a real leadership in educational means, methods and programs. This, according to the president of the National Education Association, is the one outstanding problem in education today.

"No private institution, no great foundation or endowment, no higher institution is competent to furnish the leadership or formulate the policies for the public schools. Education, even in the lower schools, demands a special training and the command of special technique," he said.

The Irishman Is Mad—

Perhaps he has cause to be, but if so, he ought still to have enough moderation to do things in a common-sense way. She has almost destroyed herself by internal strife, and now the daily papers of March 12 brought us the news that Ireland is plotting against the King and the State. We are wondering if that can be true? Is it possible that after Ireland has done her utmost to destroy herself, and so far having failed, that she now is going out to see if she can destroy the British government? It is said that England has arrested about 100 Irish radicals, who it is believed were in England plotting the destruction of the King and the government over which he rules. What a pity that common sense cannot rule in the affairs of state!

Billions Lost on Crops Each Year—

Prevented production aggregated a total average value of $4,230,000,000 yearly in eleven of the country's important crops during the thirteen years, 1909 to 1921, the Department of Agriculture estimates. Weather, plant diseases, defective seed, and insect and animal pests account for this prevented production.

The corn crop is the chief sufferer, its annual average prevented production being 1,568,879,000 bushels which at the average December 1, farm prices makes its value $1,256,282,000.

Next in order is the cotton crop, whose prevented production averaged 8,418,000 bales, valued at $882,585,000, including seed.

Wheat follows with an annual average damage of 448,762,000 bushels, valued at $599,372,000.

The average prevented production and value of other crops are estimated as follows:

Oats, 596,493,000 bushels, and value $280,277,000; barley, 108,063,000 bushels, valued at $81,318,000; flaxseed, 11,777,000 bushels, valued at $26,494,000; rice, 11,267,000 bushels, valued at $14,919,000; potatoes, 210,921,000 bushels, valued at $201,849,000; apples, 163,456[illegible] $186,946,000; hay, 34,425,000 tons, valued at $576,401,000, and tobacco, 455,720,000 pounds, valued at $80,774,000.

College Library

How Is the "Five-Five-Three" Proposition—

There is something else strange in the air. We are now told that the United States are three hundred thousand tons short in sea shortage. Mr. Denby, of the Navy, says he will ask Congress to increase in personnel to Congress as soon as that body reconvenes next December. If the United States is bound by the decisions of the arms conference, how can this deficiency be repaired? We did not suppose that the United States would have to destroy its sea power until the armament proposition had been ratified by the various nations which had put it forth, and if that be true, what need has the United States to destroy her naval power and then go back and replace in less time than five years. Verily, some common sense must be lacking on the part of some one, and if this be not true, then some one must have some most uncommon sense. Where are we going, and what are we going to do as a nation?

The French on German Soil—

Some time ago the French got very tired of waiting on Germany to pay the reparation money which Germany owes to France, and believing that Germany did not mean to pay, France sent an army into the Ruhr section of Germany with instruction to occupy that territory and collect by force money to pay what Germany owed to France. It was done, and it made quite a stir in Germany, and more throughout the world. Even the allies, associated with France, opposed her course in making this effort to collect the money due her, and the world is still divided as to the wisdom of the course France is pursuing. We are not wise enough to see the "ins and outs" of this situation, but to us it is plain that Germany means to keep from paying her money to France, if she can; but why the allies of France should stand against her in this effort, we know not, unless they fear, with this great sum of money, France might be put in a position where she could dictate to others as well as to Germany. We believe that France showed not much wisdom in accepting Turkey as an ally, but we believe she did show wisdom in seeking to make Germany pay to her the money which the peace conference said she should pay. France evidently knows how Germany made her able to pay a big sum of money when Germany conquered France in 1871, and so France is using a similar means to gain her ends with Germany. What Germany sowed, she is reaping.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. A. M. Kerr, editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, who was detained from his work by illness several weeks ago, has recovered sufficiently to take up his work again.

Our Baptist brethren are to hold next summer a World Congress at Stockholm, Sweden. Many are expecting to go from this country, and in fact, from all parts of the world.

We are glad to announce that there is steady, though slow, progress in the recovery of Dr. W. S. Long, of Chapel Hill, N. C. He is able to sit up a part of each day, and his family and physician now hope for his speedy recovery. The burns are healing slowly and his general condition is improving.

Rev. H. E. Rountree is beginning a series of articles on the Trinity. He has a most difficult task before him, but he has evidently given much thought to the subject, and we ask for him a careful reading through the whole series of six articles. These truths have been discussed too little in our pages.

Rev. R. F. Brown has arrived on his new field at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and we trust he may find that his lines have fallen to him in pleasant places. He has a strong congregation to minister to, and we hope to hear of fine fruitage as coming from his work under the blessings of God.

Deacon J. F. Coghill, of Fuller's Church, out a few miles from Henderson, N. C., has been very feeble much of the time during the past winter. It is to be hoped now that the spring days are upon us that he may come to his usual good health. He has many friends who wish for him a speedy recovery and yet many days of usefulness in the Master's service.

This is a day of big things, including debts! Perhaps there has never been a time from the days of Adam down to the twentieth century when the debts of the world were so large as now. Even North Carolina has a debt of $110,000,000. How will she ever pay it? Well, some say it can be done, and we suppose it will be paid in the course of time, but we doubt if many of all now living will live long enough to see this enormous debt paid.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., has returned to his field from his winter's sojourn in Florida. He came back looking well and strong, only he was much grieved to learn of his Brother William's severe illness. He preached at Mount Auburn the second Sunday in March, at Franklinton the third, and expects to preach at Pope's Chapel the fourth Sunday. His many friends gave him a real old Tarheel welcome. His present address is Franklinton, N. C.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson passed through Henderson, N. C., last Tuesday on his way to Suffolk, Va., where he was to meet the Emergency Committee, which has in charge the campaign committee for raising funds for the rebuilding of Elon College. He may not be a globe-trotter, but he is certainly doing his part as an interstate trotter. It would seem as if he has nerves of steel, as he keeps going and going in the interest of the cause, and does not break down. We wish him the greatest degree of success for the cause in which he is laboring.

Rev. L. E. Smith, pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., was recently called upon to give a series of Lenten sermons in St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church in that city, and he did it so well that there was a good attendance throughout the series. His themes were as follows: (1) "Christ and His Vision"; (2) "Christ and His Passion"; (3) "Christ and His Cross"; (4) "Christ and His Hope." We asked Dr. Smith to furnish these sermons for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and we hope he will do so at an early day.

Rev. J. G. Truitt, now a student in Princeton Theological Seminary and expecting to graduate there in a few weeks, preached in the Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., twice on Sunday, March 11, 1923, and we have no doubt he gave to his hearers messages that were worth listening to, for he is a young man of rare gifts and real ability. Churches in need of a pastor will do well to look after this young minister at an early day, for his services will be much desired, we think, in many places. We fully believe that the Church which gets him will get a treasure for its pastorate.

Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, is making a plea for an Easter offering for that institution, and it is most worthy of your help. He now has ninety-eight orphans there to provide for, and, of course, he must look to our people for money to take care of these dear children. Will you help him? He is not asking for support for his own family, but he is asking you to help support this big family of the helpless children of the Church. You cannot afford to refuse him help. These children must be clothed and fed and given a chance to make good in life's great battle. Let us get ready for Easter and give him real help by a liberal offering.

Bro. Ledbetter, the new pastor at Reidsville, N. C., certainly seems to be feeding "in clover," judging from reports coming from his field. The latest is from a correspondent on the field, who says: "Our Sunday School has increased wonderfully. There were in attendance last Sunday 257. The offering which goes to missions was good. We are hoping to reach 300 in Sunday School by Easter. A Christian Endeavor Society has been organized, and I am hoping that our woman's organization will very shortly be a Woman's Missionary Society. Congregations are all that one could wish." That is fine for the Reidsville Christian Church, and we wish that the good work may continue to grow. May God bless Bro. Ledbetter and his people in their noble work for the cause of Christ.

Even the best informed sometimes lack information. For instance, The Continent, in making some reference to the work of the chaplains of the navy, not long since, said: "The government, for instance, furnishes no hymn books; it dares not undertake to say what hymns suit the theological ideas of the various chaplains. The chaplain who has books for the boys to sing out of has to furnish them himself. He needs money, too, to put on occasionally 'something special' for the boys." Now, we have it from Chaplain Rountree, who is now stationed in Haiti, direct, and he says: "* * * the government does furnish us the Army and Navy Hymn Book, which is a very fine work. They have furnished about 250 copies of that book to me." We think The Continent may well afford to correct itself in this matter and let its readers know that the government does furnish hymn books to their chaplains, at least in part.

Rev. M. W. Butler, Muncie, Ind., is publishing and editing The Friendly Visitor, in the interest of the local work of his pastorate. We are not authorized to say as much, but we feel if any of his friends in the South would like to see a copy, a postal card addressed to Rev. M. W. Butler, Muncie, Ind., asking for a copy, will get one by an early mail. Bro. Butler has real editorial tact, and if he had a good chance would produce a most readable paper for our brotherhood at large.

It is quite amazing to see how differently people see things, even in matters of religion. It is not surprising that we differ in many minor matters, but it does seem strange that there should be such diversity of opinion on matters which are regarded as fundamental. Take as an instance the virgin birth of Christ. A number of people hold that it matters not whether He was born of a virgin or not. As we see it, if Jesus were born of natural parents, then He is not the only begotten Son of God, and if He were not the only begotten Son of God, then He could not be the Divine Saviour of the world, and in that event no one could be a Christian in the true sense of that name, and for the reason if Christ be not our Saviour, then men and women cannot be Christians, and if we cannot be Christians, then we should not be called CHRISTIAN. As we believe the whole question of salvation through Christ turns on the fact of His having been born of a virgin.

Many people have come to regard doctrine as of little importance. We suspect that is due to a lack of proper distinction between sectarian doctrines and the doctrines of grace. A sectarian doctrine may be of little consequence anywhere, but the doctrines of grace are divine, and therefore of the utmost importance to the salvation of the lost everywhere. The Christian life is built on the teachings of Jesus, and the teachings of Jesus are simply His doctrines. The doctrines of Jesus are vital in His plan of salvation. Bone and sinew make up the strength in an arm of flesh, and so in the plan of salvation, the doctrines of Jesus constitute the strength of the plan of salvation.

Rev. R. A. Whitten has been called to the pastorate of the Rose Hill Christian Church, Columbus, Ga., to serve in the place of Rev. R. F. Brown, who has recently been called to, and has accepted, the pastoral care of the Christian Church at Pleasant Hill, Ohio. Bro. Whitten is regarded most highly by his brethren who know him well. We wish for him the largest possible success in his ministry there. As we understand it, Bro. Whitten is a young man, just the kind the Rose Hill Church needs, and we wish he may be permitted to spend many years in that service and see the Church grow to large life and membership and great fruitfulness. It takes time to do a great work in the ministry. Dr. Staley has been at Suffolk, Va., for more than forty years, and his ministry has been greatly blessed in the establishment of a great Church there. A short ministry cannot do that sort of work. We wish for Bro. Whitten great usefulness in his ministry at Columbus, Ga.

BRO. WHITE AGAIN HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PARISHIONER.

MY DEAR BROTHER WHITE:

Old Simon Abe is not dead yet, and he won't be as long as he sees anybody else living, mind that. You may not be fool enough to write my biography, and if you did it would be somewhat biased, as I already see from the remarks you have made about me. You had not opened your eyes on this world until I was as big as I am now, and yet you want to advise me; but you are a minister, and that is a part of your prerogative. I always take all the advice I can get, and then do as I please—I guess this is, again, a matter of habit. I might be more able to distinguish my Christian duty if it were not for the things that men have piled about and hung upon religion, such as traditions and customs of men, with their ever-multiplying confusions of doctrines and creeds and sects, beautiful as they are, hide religion even as the ivy hides the wall.

I am perfectly elated over the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN finding him a helpmeet, for he is certainly worthy of the handsomest, self-cultured, Christian lady in our land, and here's hoping that he found her in the Windser Church. We know you have a lot of fine folks over there, because you have told us so, and your word is law and gospel, but you said the same things about the folks of our Church. You have admitted that I have a fine lot of Christian boys and girls eligible to matrimony; if you have any worth-while boys and girls over there you might send them around, but you do not need to send any 2-cent dudes—what I mean by this is a walking stick with a hat on one side of his head, a cigarette in his mouth with a fire on one end and a fool at the other, with a pistol in hip pocket pointed downward, which if it happened to go off would blow his brain out. One who considers it a disgrace to toil with his hands, and thinks that the great curse that was put upon man was that he had to earn his bread by the sweat of his 12--CHRISTIAN SUN— .. .. face. No, sir, I would rather my girls remain old maids all their lives than to marry such good-for-nothing society trash as that. Believe me, there is right much worse things in this old world than old-maidhood. You let a fellow like that come hanging around here and you will see whether I don't break it up. I could take a lighting bug and a corncob and run a thousand of them.

I want my sons to marry women who are not afraid of work and who know how to do it; that know how to cook and keep the house in a presentable condition; one who can at least boil water without burning it, and who will keep everything tidy about the house, for one might want to take the preacher home with him some time and he would not want to be embarrassed—have his wife feel ashamed and the preacher disappointed and disgusted; one who spends more time reading the Bible than she does looking at the mail-order catalogue, and who lives within her means when it comes to her wardrobe.

Your questions are very important—is he a Christian? is he intelligent? and is he healthy? I want to add two more—do they know how to perform their daily tasks? and are they anxious and willing to tackle the job? I suppose I am a little old-fashioned, but I never taught my sons and daughters to be afraid of honest toil. I know you will say that the wife should have a servant to look after the domestic affairs of the home, but they are costly and often good-for-nothing. If you are searching for one, you will find most of the dependable ones in the graveyard. But I don't think much of this servant business any way—it gives too much time for dolling-up, walking the streets and society teas. While that is bad, that may not be the worst feature about it. It causes women to deteriorate. The leisure of life is paralyzing the development of the wife's individuality. If possible, she should have a liberal college education, for if she would hold her husband's affection she must continue to grow. He is in a perpetual school, a great practical university, continually coming in contact with new people and things, being molded by a vast number of forces.

Mother always taught her girls all the domestic science they needed right here in the home. They may not know how to play all kinds of classical music on the piano, but they do know how to get up a first-class meal on short notice and to keep the house in proper trim. I do not mean that a wife should be a drudge; that she should put herself in a position where her inventiveness, resourcefulness and individuality will be paralyzed by lack of motive. She should be chief dictator in the management of the home and have a large part in her husband's business affairs. The happiest marriages are those in which the right of husband and wife to develop broadly and naturally along all lines has been recognized by each.

Brother White, the time will come when men will be ashamed that they ever opposed woman's suffrage, for think of a man considering it right and just for his most ignorant workman to have an equal vote with himself on public matters and yet deny the right to his educated wife and daughters until such a short time ago! If women, equally with men, do not continue to grow and expand after marriage, how can we expect race improvement? There is no separating them—they must rise or fall together.

I certainly have some fine sons and daughters, as you will agree. Likely, they are quite an improvement over the old stock, and why should they not be, when they stand upon the shoulders of their parents, with better opportunities presented and heeded. We conceived the idea after we had largely wasted our chance, that children and wife were one; that they were the producers and preservers of life. That if we would strengthen the race, exalt manhood, perfect lives, equip them to fulfill their mission in life, we must begin in childhood. If we would contribute to the age to come, persons better than ourselves qualified, physically, mentally and spiritually, for the larger duties devolving on this age, we must begin in the plastic state of life. The exaltation of life is the remedy for all the evils that threaten the race. The reformations we are attempting in the social, religious, political and industrial world are only attempts to change the flavor or quality of the fruit when it is ripening on the tree, when the real remedy lies in the life of the tree—the soil from which it springs, in the source from which the fruit derives its quality and flavor. The real hope of the race lies in the appreciation, passion, perfection, exaltation and salvation of the young life of mankind.

Now, Brother White, I do not know when any of my children will get married or who they will get to perform the ceremony, but I do not think they will be foolish enough to get the justice of the peace. I suppose the daughters will have Church weddings and send out of town to get some big preacher to solomnize the marriage; not because I think it is right to do so, but because it has been the custom for years in this community; not because he can do any better job than our own pastor, and maybe not as good. I have always told them that the Church would never amount to much in the eyes of the community as long as they sent away to get somebody to preach their funerals and perform their marriages, but they do not consider I know anything about it; but it is the truth, just the same. If the pastor is not big enough for all the special occasions, he is not big enough for any of their services, and I have been telling them so for a long time.

No doubt, you have plenty of good people in Virginia, but I am still swearing by North Carolina, and you can count on them to be right here when you need them. I suppose you heard of our calamity at Elon. Well, the whole State is in mourning because of the loss her great institution has suffered; and right up there in Alamance County, right where the college was located, where a prophet is usually without honor, they held several big mass-meetings, and the biggest speeches, outside of Dr. Harper and a few others, were made by men that did not belong to the Christian Church. And what do you think they said they would do to show their sympathy? They said they would raise $100,000 in Alamance County alone! Governor Morrison sent out an appeal to the people of the State to help Elon in her present need. He said that "a great calamity has befallen one of the State's most honored and efficient institutions of learning," and he hoped every citizen of North Carolina would contribute liberally, and they will. Hurrah! for the State of North Carolina; hurrah! for Alamance County, and hurrah! for Elon College. I am wonderfully enthused over the whole matter, and feel like throwing my old hat up in the air. If I were forty years younger than I am I would just pack my old grip and start right off for Elon College. Some folks think this school is not big enough for their boys and girls, but I shall be highly elated to have all of my sons and daughters graduate from this great institution of the Christian Church.

Brother White, don't you think the reason so many parents in the Christian Church do not see that their children go to Elon is because they do not think it popular enough? They want it said that their children graduated from one of the big institutions of learning—they are not thinking of their rounded-out education or their complete equipment for life, or they would send them to Elon to receive all that Elon had to give them before going elsewhere. There is one thing that Elon cannot do, and that is to give the capacity—nature must do that. I have in mind a young man who sent his sweetheart away to college. He wrote a letter to the president to ascertain how she was getting along, and he replied that she lacked the capacity. The young man replied by saying, if you tell me where I can get it I will send it to her.

Many parents who are members of this great Church, who are contemplating sending their children to the larger schools, would find that Elon would impart all the knowledge their craniums could hold for at least four or five years, saying nothing about the moral and religious influence, which is a thousand times better than you will find in any secular school.

I have tried to be honest in my reply to you; of course, I could not be otherwise and remain true to my namesake, which was "Honest Abe." They did not think much of him down here before he was killed, but the years have made him great; and so may it be some time that some of my imperfections will be buried with me in the grave and some people will see that I did have a few good traits which I am not mentioning or boasting of that will be lived out by my offspring throughout the years to come.

I know I have done but little, and will soon have to step aside and let the progress of the world and Church go by. You infer that I am mostly out of sympathy with all of its great movements anyhow, so I will not have far to step, but I still cannot get away from the impression that the Church stood carelessly, indifferently and idlely by when I was passing by that way in childhood and youth, susceptible to deep impressions and the building of character. I might have been a worth-while man today, with a worth-while job, serving the world and the Church in a worth-while way.

Very truly yours,

SIMON ABE.

BRUTALITY INTENSIFIED.

We recently had something to say as to the appeal of prize fighters to the lawmakers of Virginia to pass a law which will allow this prize-fight business, and we hope our readers will be careful to see that no one shall lead them to believe that it is only an innocent pastime, or that it is simply to encourage the manly sport of self-defense.

In the State of New York they got such a law passed under the plea of the manly sport of self-defense, and after it was passed, why it seems, judging from the clipping below from a New York paper, that it turned out to be a law which allows prize fighting, and now they are going into business of prize fighting right along. They have one advertised for May, and it is to be for "sweet charity," only the two prize fighters are to get the neat little sum of $25,000 each for their part in the affair, and yet they are calling on dear old Virginia to do likewise, and some people are silly enough to favor giving them the right to hold prize fights among the so-called decent people of that grand old State. That is just what they did in New York—they got a law passed permitting them to have exhibitions of the manly sport of self-defense, and now they are going to have, under that law, as it seems from the New York paper from which we are quoting, a regular prize fight for "sweet charity's" sake and for $25,000 each. It is time that something was done to put a stop to this degrading business. Think of the people of any State giving two men $25,000 each to fight one another under the plea that it is for "sweet charity"—charity, indeed!

The Wesleyan Methodist, published at Syracuse, N. Y., puts it this way as the matter now stands in the State of New York. It makes a call to the Legislature to pass a law to put a stop to this business, and we hope it will be speedily passed, and so set the great State of New York free from such a degrading curse. Think of a great State permitting its sacred soil to be used for a bloody prize-fight!

The paper mentioned above eays:

While young Andy Thomas lay stiffening, killed in a prize fight, arrangements were made for a battle between Jess Willard, former heavyweight championship, and Floyd Johnson. This affair is to take place in the New York American League Ball Park on May 12th. It will be for "charity"—and $25,000 for each boxer.

The "charity blanket is provided to cover the loathsome ill-repute into which the whole fight game in New York has fallen. So widespread are the suspicions and conviction of fakery, grafting and extortionate greed that it was not believed the public would tolerate another spectacular prize fight. But, of course, if it is to be for "charity" and $25,000 each—it is thought that the public will be gullible enough to flock to the ball park in thousands.

No real boxing will be done on May 12th. It is perfectly well known that the average scrub lightweight sparring partner can box rings around either Willard or Johnson. The only reason these two men are not allowed to bite and gouge each other's eyes is because our descent from civilization has not progressed far enough for the public to tolerate it. Those who go will not go to see boxing. They will go to see bruising and blood.

There is nothing whatever that can be said in defense of this prize fight.

Gambling, graft, fakery and bloody brutality make up the fight game today. The New York Legislature should come to the defense of civilization and the gulled public at its next session and repeal the infamous boxing law which has done nothing whatever to promote boxing.

QUESTIONS FOR THE MINISTER'S CONSIDERATION.

The Continent, a Presbyterian paper, published in Chicago and New York City, has some thoughts for the minister which it seems to us are most timely and suggestive. We, therefore, take the liberty to transfer the same to our columns, as worthy the study of our ministers. The Continent asks the question: "What is the minister trying to do? If God should offer him just what he wants as the fruit of his labor, what would he ask"? Well, now, these two questions are well worthy much thought and prayer. The following is the article from The Continent:

What is a minister trying to do? If God should offer him just what he wants as the fruit of his labor, what would he ask? The question is pertinent both to the minister himself and to the people among whom he ministers. The answer determines much of the direction and speed of the driving energy, and it determines the standards which his people set for him and the demand which they make upon him. What is it he is trying to accomplish? In one of the revived volumes of Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage is a paragraph in which he said to a church congregation that there were two great desires in his service that evening—to go to heaven himself and to take all the congregation with him.

One can imagine his enlargement upon this theme, with his rich imagery of heaven and of the incoming hosts which he and they should join. Something is surely lacking from the great desire of a minister if this does not enter into it. Earth is a very different place if there is no heaven over it, and work is a very different thing if there is no eternal and heavenly consummation of it. There was a real gain to the ministry of men who preached as dying men to dying men, who counted on meeting their congregations again before the judgment seat of God. That was no factitious background for preaching. The only point of question is whether this expresses the deepest or greatest desire of the minister at his best.

Dr. Adam Philip, recently moderator of the United Free Church Assembly, has enlarged his Murtle lecture on the devotional literature of Scotland until it has become a sizable book. Of course, he has occasion to refer to Samuel Rutherford, and he quotes this incident regarding an English merchant, who wrote to a friend: "I came to Irvine, and heard a well-favored, proper old man (David Dickson), with a long beard, and that man showed me all my heart. Then I went to St. Andrews, where I heard a sweet, majestic-looking man (R. Blair), and he showed me the majesty of God. After him, I heard a little fair man (Rutherford), and he showed me the loveliness of Christ."

Here were three elements of ministry—the revelation of the human heart, of the majesty of God, of the loveliness of the Redeemer. Obviously, they belong together. The human heart as it is, in presence of God as He is, must cry out for Christ as He is. It is the clouding of the heart or seeing God dimly that makes it seem feasible to do without Christ at his greatest. Will it do, then, to say that the great desire of he minister is to make Christ seem in the hearts of men the reality and necessity that He is?

A few years ago the Christian student group in Japan cabled a message to their American fellows in three English words: "Make Jesus King." Since that time there has been a growing accent on the kingdom of God, and a message in those terms would be more of a matter of course today than then. Many men have set it for the goal of their lives to extend or establish the kingdom of God in the earth. Would this be the great desire of the minister? Is he striving toward that end—to make Christ the King in the world that he rightly is?

It is not the purpose of this writing to complete the phrasing, but only to ask the question. Half the battle is won in such work as the ministry when the objectives are made clear. The vast amount of energy spent in fumbling or circling around for lack of a goal is killing. It leaves a man at the end of a period of work wondering if it has been worth while and hardly knowing how to decide if he has made progress or not.

In some pastorates there are outward achievements to be used for marks of progress; a church or a manse has been built, a playground has been established, the building has been refurnished. Sometimes there are new programs of church life accepted or enlarged congregations noted. But such things cannot be noted each year in all places. Are they what a minister would ask if God gave him his heart's desire? Do they not sometimes leave the pastoral heart barren and dissatisfied? Is it not something deep and lasting, possible of approach with each year, that expresses the great desire of the earnest minister of Christ?

What is that great thing? John Knox said: "Give me Scotland or I die"! What would a minister of today say in such a supreme hour? What does he want more than life?

ARE OUR CHAPLAINS IN THE SERVICE OF OUR COUNTRY FORGOTTEN?

Again and again it has come to us from various sources that our chaplains in the service of the government of the United States are quite forgotten, even by their brethren in the home field. Now, we should like to ask, Is that a fact? Forgotten! If so, why? We know of no reasson why they should be forgotten. They are, in so far as they are faithful to their trust, doing a great work. In fact, they are not only on the firing line, but they are actually face to face and hand to hand in the thick of the battle, seeking to keep a large company of our young men from going down under the steady fire of the wicked one. They should be remembered not only as our chaplains, but they should be remembered often in prayer, and not only so, if they have needs which the government does not provide, the home Church should take a pleasure in helping them, for their work is tiring and it is almost constant, while their duties are many on every hand. The average pastor does his work as to him seems proper, but the chaplain has to do his work under the orders of government officials, and if it come short, he is called to tell why, and maybe be put out of his position. The average pastor does his work as he thinks proper, and when the end of the year comes he reports to his Conference, but it is a rare thing that a pastor is reprimanded for any failure in his field, but the chaplain's report shows that he has not done his duty by the men committed to his care by Uncle Sam, then he must face the fact before the Secretary of the Navy. We wish to speak a word in the interest of the chaplains. Let us not think they are off on a picnic and having a fine time at play. If our readers read the report recently published in these columns from Chaplain Rountree, they could, we are sure, find not much evidence of picnic work on his part during the time for which he was reporting.

A paper representing one of our larger denominations has this to say concerning the chaplains in that Church, and we doubt not the same is just as true of our own:

The chaplains in the army and navy of the republic are, like other good men and true, quite indisposed to parade their work for public attention. They have no mind to sound trumpets before them. Still—once more like other good men and true—they feel it mighty discouraging to find their brethren apparently unaware that they are doing anything at all. It seems still to be the ingrained notion of the Church at large that ministers who accept chaplaincies have abandoned the ministry for a life of official seclusion and ease. The wrong that such a conception does those thirty men from the Presbyterian Church is sad in the misconstruing of motives; it is sadder in the deduction drawn from such a misjudgment—that these men have voluntarily gone off out of range of church-fellowship and the Church is under no further obligation to them.

If they received the regard which their Church really owes them, they would be looked on instead as missionaries. As truly as any missionary, the army or navy or marine chaplain gives up home and goes out into the big, broad world on a spiritual crusade. He accepts a commission to be champion, defender and friend of a great host of America's young men, who without him would have not a single human hand to help fight their moral battles.

It has, therefore, come to pass that "the only influence to keep them religiously true is their chaplain." This is especially the fact when far from home—as on cruises in foreign waters or on tours of duty in Panama or the Philippines. The government indeed has organized welfare divisions in both army and navy, but they are for entertainment only. It cannot be expected that the government's welfare officer will often take a "buddy" off by himself and remind him solemnly of mother—and God—as the "Y" man used to do. No, that is up to the chaplain now. And the chaplain does it oftener than the civilian imagines. The big job of the chaplaincy is not holding Sunday morning services; it is holding on to young fellows all week long.

"REMEMBERING THOSE WHO LED US TO CHRIST."

It is good to follow the way that leads to Christ. It is because of this fact that we are copying from a recent issue of The Religious Herald the following article, which shows, as we think, the way the true penitent goes to find Christ. We are, as we fear, having too few of these experiences on the part of men and women who are seeking Christ. The man who comes to Christ, but has no burden to bring for Him to take away, we fear finds no deliverance from his sins. We are not holding that all men must have the same experience in finding Christ, but we do hold that all men must feel the burden of sin resting heavily upon their hearts and minds before they are likely to find Christ in the forgiveness of sin and in the gift of eternal life. The following personal experience is from the pen of Rev. J. E. McManaway, with whose two older brothers—Rev. A. G. and J. M. McManaway—we spent many a pleasant hour while we were in college together. This fact no doubt gives us a quickening touch for this narrative. We only wish THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S large family of readers may enjoy reading it as did the editor of this paper.

Rev. J. E. McManaway, writing to The Religious Herald, says:

The evangelist who awakened me and led me to Christ was my own cousin, J. Bunyan Lemon. Though it has been nearly forty years ago, it seems as yesterday, so sweet is the memory of it and so deeply stamped upon my mind. He came to assist the pastor, Rev. G. Wheeler, in a meeting in Old Beaverdam Church, Bedford County. It was in the good old summer time; in the month of August, and the weather was ideal for a meeting—and what a revival we did have! Near a half-hundred people were baptized into the membership, and among them were my youngest sister and myself.

The people had been requested to pray each evening as the sun set for the meeting that night. What glorious sunsets they were, not a cloud in the sky during these revival days, and the sun would go down in a blaze of glory while there arose to heaven the sweet incense of pure, earnest prayer.

Not only was that community aroused, but people came from adjourning neighborhoods and attended the services. The meeting continued two weeks. On the first Monday night I was convicted. It was one of the most unexpected events of my life. I had made my boast before the meeting began as to how I was going to conduct myself, and conviction and conversion were not given a place in my plan.

On that Monday night my cousin told the beautiful story of Queen Esther and deducted his lessons and drove home his points. It was a truly great sermon. I had never heard anything like it before. For the first time in my life I saw myself a lost sinner. I held up my hand for prayer that night. I wanted to go forward with those who were moved to do so, but my knees trembled so my young limbs were unable to move me from the spot where I stood. My cousin went home with us that night. My father lived three miles from the Church, but they were mountain miles and very rough, as well as long. They all had a jolly good time after we arrived at home. Cousin Bunyan was a favorite with us all and we were proud of his record he was making even that early in life. There were hearty conversation and light refreshments, but I could enter into none of these enjoyments, for I was lost and I wondered how the others could be so lively when there was a lost boy in the house.

That night I slept very little, if any at all. I spent the night praying the Lord to have mercy on a lost boy and save him.

The next morning I planned to walk to the Church, taking the path that led through the fields. I wanted to get to myself and be alone. I was lost. But my father had his eyes upon me, and when I started off he called to me and said my mother wanted me to ride with her in the buggy. I thought no one cared for me in my lost condition, but ah! my parents cared, and they had talked it over and arranged for me to go in the buggy. To go in a buggy in those days was the way of honor. But I begged off and carried out my plan. My "Help," as John Bunyan expressed it, came to me that morning as I walked the path through the fields. As I was climbing a hill I looked back toward home and I saw coming after me, walking rapidly a tall, lean, lanky man, a typical mountaineer. I quickened my steps, for I wanted to be alone, but it was impossible for a boy to remain long ahead of the one who was taking those long strides. When he came up with me he gave me the short, blunt, honest, mountaineer's greeting and then walked a little, while in silence, by my side. He was walking under the guidance of the Spirit. Then he did the one thing that needed to be done, and did it in the right way—looked down into my face he said: "John, I have been praying for you all night." O, how my heart thrilled at his words. Before that time I had felt that I was doomed and doomed forever, but somehow at his words hope sprang up within me and I thought maybe there is a chance for even me. That morning at the Church I surrendered to the Lord and made the great profession. The name of my "Help" was Moses Wills, one of our nearest neighbors, and a man in whom I had perfect confidence. He had not been a Christian very long, but I had watched his life, and so far as I could see it had rung true to the Gospel requirements.

The years have slipped by since that morning we walked together along the path through the fields to the Lord's house. My noble "Help" has grown old and feeble and the passing years have touched his cheeks and worn deep furrows over his kind face, and the tears of bitter sorrow have washed his loving eyes until they are dim, and their lights almost put out, and the locks as they cluster about his noble brow are as white as the driven snow. He has taken, one by one, the outstretched hands of his loved ones and said, "Good-by," and watched them, through the tears, as they left his side and until they passed from his earthly view—but he still walks in that straight and narrow path that leads up to the Pearly White City, for he is a pilgrim and a stranger and has been for many years and is seeking a city which hath foundations—whose Builder and Maker is God, and he has now come so near to the end of his journey that methinks he surely can hear in the quiet and loneliness of his home the sound of the voices of his loved ones as they talk together of his coming and of the goodness of the Lord there in their dwelling-place of light.

My evangelist has long since been numbered with the great and eloquent preachers of the land.

The boy who was lost has gone up and down the Southland telling in his blundering and stammering way the old, old story, and calling men to come to the One who came to seek and to save that which was lost. The mountaineer has lived his honest, simple life among the hills and mountains he so dearly loves with a heart as true and honest as ever beat in a man's breast. These three have each acted his part in different sections on the great stage of life. But the curtain will soon be rolled down on their earthly labors and activities, but in the great day of the Lord that trio will stand together again and will share together any rewards the Lord sees fit to bestow.

Moses Wills was converted in a meeting in Bedford County in which my brother, Jim, did the preaching. In the last meeting I ever helped my brother, Jim, I told one morning the story of my conversion and the part Moses Wills had in it, and when I came out of the pulpit my brother met me, extending his hand and, with beaming face and shining eyes, though filled with tears, said: "Well! after all, I am your spiritual grandfather. I am glad I had a little part in it." He was then treading close to Jordan's chilly waters, a fact he and I both knew, and the "shadow that waits for man" was already falling across his face. I looked into those glad eyes and I was thankful I had told the story before he went away. As I pen these lines I am satisfied he is in the land of glory, where the shadows have lifted forever, and knowing all, as he now does, I trust he is as glad as he was that day when the mists were still on the hills and the shadow was across his pathway.

Greenville, S. C.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, of Alabama, is giving some help to the captains of the Men and Millions work in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. Brethren, give him an old Virginia welcome and help him along in the good work he is doing, all you can. He is, we are told by those who know him, a worthy brother.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Southern Christian Convention will meet in extraordinary session in Henderson, N. C., on May 1st, of this good year, 1923. Many questions will require the wisest judgment for their solution, and all of them will be in charge of wise and devoted men, who will present their claims with good reasons for their adoption. But I want to submit a question for thought and consideration by members of the churches, as well as delegates to the Convention, before that body is in session.

Plans have been laid, and obligations have been assumed by the Convention, through its boards and departments, based on financial returns from the Men and Millions Movement; but that period is limited to five years. What is to become of the work already begun when that period expires and money ceases to come in from that source? Will it require another drive to meet an emergency, or can some permanent system be adopted, and made efficient through Conference and local Church approval? It seems to me that a permanent system, with elasticity enough to grow, is what the Convention needs and what the people will gladly approve. Something will have to be done to maintain progress in the Convention and Christian activity in the Conferences and churches.

No doubt the most equitable method would be the allotment or apportionment to the Conferences and churches on a per capita basis. That would, no doubt, fit more churches and meet more favor than any other plan that could be adopted. Any arbitrary allotment or apportionment would be subject to criticism and opposition; but the per capita plan would be easy of explanation and application, and easy of operation. To make apportionments for Convention purposes, two dollars per member per year would be less than four cents per week, and there is hardly any member who would be unable to pay that little sum to help the cause. We have, say, thirty thousand members in the Southern Convention. Subtract five thousand for non-residents, destitute, and indifferent, and twenty-five thousand remain to pay two dollars apiece. At two dollars per capita per year, that would give fifty thousand dollars per year. That sum would make a permanent working basis for education, missions, publications, orphanage, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and the Convention itself. That sum could be distributed in the following or some similar way:

	Per Cent.
To education	30	$15,000.00
To missions	30	15,000.00
To publications	10	5,000.00
To orphanage	10	5,000.00
To Sunday Schools	6	3,000.00
To Christian Endeavor	6	3,000.00
To the Convention	8	4,000.00
Totals	100	$50,000.00

Provision must be made by some workable method to prevent collapse in the present plans and obligations of the Convention; and this should be done beforehand in time to operate upon the termination of the Men and Millions period in 1924. It will not do to wait till the end of that period to provide for this necessity. Unless some better plan than the one herein suggested is proposed, I shall hope to have an opportunity to present the above plan for consideration and adoption by the Convention. Once in operation, such a plan would work smoothly and successfully; and it would not be burden on the churches nor a drain upon their resources. Think it through before you pass judgment upon it.

ELON LETTER.

A most far-reaching session of the Elon Emergency Fund Committee met in the directors' room of the Farmers' Bank of Nansemond, Suffolk, Va., on March 14. The membership of this committee consists of Col. E. E. Holland, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. W. Staley, J. D. Gray, Col. J. E. West, P. J. Carlton, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, Hon. K. B. Johnson, Dr. W. H. Boone, and Dr. L. E. Smith—ten of our busiest and most consecrated men. Dr. I. W. Johnson and the writer were also present by invitation. When such men turn aside from the great interests that crowd their lives to consider the ways and means of discharging a great responsibility imposed on them by the Church, it puts new zeal and enthusiasm into the cause and guarantees its success. These are the men, beloved, who have accepted the call to duty. These are the men who will lead us to victory. These are the men for whom our prayers should ascend, that wisdom may be given them to direct this undertaking in all ways pleasing to God and profitable for His Church and kingdom.

This committee, after careful, painstaking consideration, unanimously adopted the following resolution: "That W. A. Harper be authorized to represent the emergency committee to raise $150,000 additional on building fund for Elon College by private subscriptions of money or buildings, which, together with the amount of $167,000 already raised in cash and subscriptions for buildings, will exceed the required $200,000 to meet the proposition made by citizens of Alamance County, N. C., and also he is authorized to accept gifts to increase the endowment fund."

As reported in The Sun last week, we have already raised $64,500 for endowment and slightly beyond $167,000 for buildings. Alamance County has raised $100,000 of this. The gift of Alamance was conditioned on our raising $200,000 additional for buildings. By the resolution quoted above, it will be seen that the emergency committee plans to do all that the Burlington gift requires, and more.

The endowment feature of the emergency fund is equally important with the building program. But the emphasis in the field work for the immediate future is to be on the building feature. When that is completed, the entire attention of the committee and field worker will be directed toward raising the additional endowment, which is absolutely necessary if Elon is to remain an A-grade college.

In this connection it should be said that all money paid in on the standardization fund will count toward the endowment total of the emergency fund. Subscribers to this fund are urged to anticipate their payments to this fund so as to enable the college to pursue her regular work with the extra costs entailed on the current operating expenses by the fire. Every penny paid in on this fund will be immediately invested and will thus begin to earn an income to help the college over its crisis. Our friends will recognize their opportunity and will avail themselves of it.

I have never had a moment's hesitation since January 24, 1923, the date when the trustees adopted their $600,000 emergency program, but that success awaited our efforts. My faith has been confirmed by the assembling of the emergency committee in Suffolk. It is inspiring to be associated with such men, busy men, men of splendid judgment, but withal, men who love the kingdom of Christ and the institutions designed to promote that kingdom. These men will lead us to victory.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

Dr. Abercrombee, Superintendent of Education for the State of Alabama, said to me a few days ago, while talking of Bethlehem College, "It is not so much education we need as it is the kind of education." In his remarks further, he emphasized the importance of religious education. When men of his standing, as well as the rank and file of the Church, become convinced of such a need, surely there is no mistake.

And, too, all the institutions of higher education are crowded, and the place for the junior college was never so important. It is said that since 1890, State universities have increased their attendance sixfold. Such institutions train more than half the college students in the United States.

Of course, we understand about the religious training in the State schools. The young people need to have special care in the formative or the earlier state of preparation. If the Church intends to discharge its responsibility to these young people it must take care of them where they are. It should take them through an adequate program of religious guidance. This would the more likely enable them to retain their identity, even though they must, for professional requirement, attend the State universities.

There is no one who cares so much for the child as do the parents of the home where the child is reared. Thus it may be said of our young people and the Church school fostered by the homes in which they grow up.

The Building Committee for Bethlehem College held a meeting on the 13th and decided to let the building by contract to the lowest and best bidder. The plans and specifications will be ready in a few days. These are to be given to contractors for review and consideration.

By motion, the committee is to meet again the second day of April to receive bids and let the contract. Work on the building is to begin at least by May 1st, earlier if possible.

Rev. G. D. Hunt is succeeding beyond his expectations as financial secretary. The people where he has been have responded liberally and are much enthused over the work.

THE FUTURE OF MEN AND MILLIONS.

The lessons learned in the Men and Millions Campaign and the benefits derived therefrom are too valuable to be lost. The extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention should, either through the Mission Board or some other agency, provide a permanent plan for conserving the results of the campaign. The goals on membership increase, tithing, life recruits, and systematic giving to all our Church enterprises should be kept before our people.

There should be an annual campaign for members, for tithers, and for life recruits. These need to be emphasized as much as the raising of money and in the end will mean more to our Church than the temporary raising of the sum set as a goal, though I believe the canvass should be continued until the full amount is paid. I suggest that either through our Mission Board or an executive secretary, who might also be the statistician for the convention, a list of the names of all new members joining our churches be secured and periodically they be given the opportunity of signing the tither's pledge, the life recruit covenant and the subscription to the Men and Millions Fund.

"CHRIST THE ONLY HOPE OF THE WORLD."

Abstract of Address by Dr. J. Campbell White, of New York, to the Laymen.

"God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation."—1 Cor. 5:19.

"Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12.

These two great Bible statements clearly make the claim that Christ is the only hope of the world. I would like to indicate some of the main lines of my thought on this subject by a quotation from James Russell Lowell. Mr. Lowell was attending a meeting where some sceptics were speaking about having no need of religion. When his opportunity came to speak, Mr. Lowell had the following striking answer to make to all such cheap scepticism:

"Some gentlement tell us very complacently that they have no need of religion; they can get along well enough without it. Let us tell you, friends, that the very worst kind of religion is no religion at all. And those men who live in ease and luxury, indulging themselves in the amusement of going without religion, may be thankful that they live in a land where the Gospel they neglect has tamed the beastliness and ferocity of men, who but for Christianity, might long ago have eaten their bodies, like the South Sea Islanders, or cut off their heads like the monsters of the French Revolution.

"When the microscopic search of scepticism, which has hunted the heavens and the earth to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society, and has found a place on this planet ten miles square where a decent man can live in decency, comfort and security, supporting and educating his children unspoiled and unpoluted; a place where age is reverenced, infancy respected, womanhood honored, and human life held in the regard; when the sceptic can find such a place on this globe where the Gospel of Christ has not gone and cleared the way, and laid the foundations and made decency and security possible, it will then be in order for the sceptical literati to move thither, and there ventilate their views.

"But so long as these men are dependent upon the religion which they discard for every privilege they enjoy, they may well hesitate a little before they seek to rob the Christian of his hope and humanity of its faith in that Saviour who alone has given to men that hope of eternal life which makes life tolerable and society possible, and robs death of its terrors and the grave of its gloom."

The simple fact is that without Christ and His religion—the world would have no adequate conception of God, of morality, of prayer, of salvation, or of immortality.

Pagan conceptions of God are almost utterly false. Polytheism and Pantheism dominate the minds of the bulk of the human race. When I have asked educated Hindoos how many gods they have in India, they have told me 333,000,000. And their most popular gods were grossly immoral.

No wonder that the whole moral level of the pagan world is so low, in view of their immoral gods, and the absence of any adequate moral standards in their religions.

Even prayer has been degraded to a mechanical process by vast masses of mankind. Genuine prayer is dependent upon a right conception of God.

Salvation, in the Christian sense, is an absolutely new idea to the pagan mind. We believe that salvation includes present forgiveness, deliverance from the power of temptation, fellowship with God in Christ, and partnership with God in His great work for mankind. All of these conceptions strike the heathen mind with surprise and novelty.

Jesus Christ also gives the final word about immortality. Mr. Edison is reported to be trying to devise an instrument by which he can weigh spirits—in order to satisfy his own mind as to whether there is any immortality. Why not take the testimony of Christ about this?

He said: "In My Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."

Where nations and races are ignorant of these great spiritual truths, they are also apt to be ignorant of nearly everything else that makes life worth living. One-half of the human race can't read a word of any language. One-half the world has no scientific knowledge of hygiene, sanitation, medicine or surgery.

Every blessing comes into human life, where Christ is known.

He alone can settle the industrial conflicts of the world. He is doing this through hundreds of Christian employers and employees. Nothing but the Christian solution is adequate. Christ alone can banish war from the world. Our Vice-President, Mr. Fairbanks, coming back from a trip around the world, declared that one well-equipped mission station would do more for the permanent peace of the world than a whole fleet of battleships. Yet one battleship costs more than the whole Protestant Church in America spends on missions each year.

If Christ is the only hope of the world, what should the Southern Presbyterian Church do?

It should make an intelligent, serious effort to give Christ to its share of the world. Thirty-two millions of people in Asia, Africa and Latin-America are in the special fields of the Southern Presbyterian Church; 475 Southern Presbyterian missionaries (including all wives of missionaries) are at work, or one to over 67,000 heathen on the average. You ought to increase the force of missionaries to at least 1,000. This would still give every missionary an average field of 32,000 people. These additional 525 missionaries can be sent out and supported by an increase of 10 cents a week to this object by the 411,000 members of the Southern Presbyterian Church. You could do this by increasing your gifts to foreign missions to the amount you are already giving to home missions, education and other benevolences in America. With 32,000,000 of people to reach in your foreign field, ought you not to give at least as much to this great enterprise as to all home causes, apart from congregational expense? If you do this you can really occupy and evangelize your share of the world. Ought not this to be made the first object of the entire Church until it is accomplished? In the wake of this achievement, would come the greatest spiritual blessing to the whole Church that it has ever known.—Presbyterian Standard.

THE NEW ERA IN THE FAR EAST.

Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, secretary of the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill, has just arrived in Japan after his itinery of several months in China.

During the latter part of his stay in China he visited the southern part of the country, and among the important conferences, in addition to those held at all points with the Christian leaders, was an interview with Dr. Sun Yat Sen, with whom Dr. Gulick discussed at length the internal problems of China and its relation to the other nations. From China, Dr. Gulick went to the Philippines for a brief visit. Among the distinguished persons with whom he talked while in the Philippines were Governor General Wood and General Aguinaldo.

In Japan a most important program is to be carried out. So significant is his visit regarded there that a joint committee has been constituted, representing the Federation of Churches, the Federation of Missions, the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, the Japan Peace Society, the League of Nations Association, the Woman's Peace Society, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Association for Reduction of Armaments and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This committee is responsible for directing Dr. Gulick's itinerary while in Japan.

Later parts of Dr. Gulick's program will include a stay in Korea and in Manchuria, followed by a return visit to China for the special purpose of being present at the meeting of the new National Christian Council in May. At the earnest solicitation of the Rt. Rev. Logan H. Roots, who is to be one of the secretaries of this new council, Dr. Gulick has decided to remain until after the meeting.

Concerning his reception in China and the deep interest in his mission, Dr. Gulick writes:

"I find myself warmly welcomed by both missionaries and Chinese; they are glad to know of the international interests of the Federal Council and listen with the deepest attention to my statements of our activities in connection with the Washington conference."

Dr. Gulick lays special emphasis upon the contribution which the Christian movement in the Orient is making toward the reconciliation of Japan, Korea and China. In the Japan Advertiser of February 4 he is quoted as saying in an interview:

"If the military policy of Japan in 1915 had been continued until the present day, Shantung today would be as much a part of Japan as is Korea. The permanent barracks, wireless stations and hospitals erected at Tsinanfu are evidences of the decision of the militarists to make the occupation of Shantung permanent. All these have been handed over to China, however, and today everything points to a new era in the relations between Japan and China.

"While Christianity may not have progressed as rapidly as many think it should have in point of number of converts, there is no doubt that a remarkable advance in Christian thought and activity has been made. Christianity promises to play an even greater role in shaping the destinies of the Far East with the ushering in of the new era of peace and good will heralded by the changed policies of Japan and the accompanying change in the Chinese attitude toward this country." RICHMOND LETTER.

There has been quite an increase in the interest in the Richmond work since the first of the year. The Ladies' Aid Society, the Woman's Missionary Society and the Young People's Missionary Society have all been active. The membership of the Sunday School has increased 50 per cent. One new member was received into the Church Sunday.

Work on the Church building has been delayed on account of not getting material. However, that is being delivered now, and the work will be resumed. Our third anniversary service will be held Easter Sunday. Mr. Herman Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., will be the speaker on that occasion.

We want five hundred persons to send us ten dollars each within the next thirty days for the Richmond Church. W. T. WALTERS.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WHAT I SAW IN A BOOK.

It was this:

"It is always easier to overcome antagonism and active opposition than to overcome passive indifference and lack of interest.

"Probably nothing is more serious in the religious life of England today than the fact that for many people Christianity has lost its note of challenge. They do not defy it—it does not warrant that—but its call does not come to them in such a way as to awaken that love of adventure and quest, which is in all healthy human beings. Evil continues to exist in the world, and the story of the One who come 'conquering and to conquer' has to them become remote and not in any way related to life as they knew it.

"Paul may have carried the challenge of Christ into the very heart of the Roman empire, but the message which he gave does not seem to compel the attention of the men of today. Nothing, then, is more incumbent on us as Sunday School teachers than to help our boys and girls to feel the power and activity of the religion we profess, and to become conscious of its challenge. We need somehow or other to help them to realize that a conflict between the forces of good and evil is going on in every department and sphere of life today; a conflict as tremendous as that which took place on Carmel when alone, yet not alone, Elijah, the prophet of Jehovah, faced the prophets of Baal; a conflict in which every true servant of God plays a no less heroic part than did the prophet that day.

"We must enable them to see that Christ, who faced the evil and sorrow, the hypocrisy and blindness of Judea 1900 years ago, is the same yesterday, today, and forever. That He who demanded of His followers in the far-off days, "Whom say ye that I am"? is asking those who know the story of His earthly life the same question still.

"In short, we are called to help our girls and boys to understand that the call to the service of the kingdom, for which Jesus of Nazareth lived and died and rsoe again, is a call to the most heroic and glorious adventure which has ever come to man. And, because of their natural love of activity, the emphasis of our teaching must be on the active, heroic and triumphant aspects of our religion, if it is ever to mean all that it should mean in the lives of our girls and boys. We must show that, in the ranks of the followers of Christ there have been some of the most courageous of the world's adventurers and victors, and that this is true, not only of the remote past, but of every age up to today.

"For these reasons it is essential that our Bible teaching shall be, not superseded by, but supplemented by stories from the long succession of missionary heroes who link St. Paul to today.

"How David Livingstone illuminates Paul, and Paul David Livingstone! 'I am persuaded that neither death nor life * * * shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord,' wrote Paul. And in a journal written in the depths of an African jungle we find the echo, ' "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, and lo, I am with you always." It is the word of a gentleman of the most sacred and strictest honor. I will not cross furtively by night as I intended * * *.' How the Beatitudes are lit up by the stories of men and women missionaries, who were poor and in sorrow, who were meek and merciful and pure in heart, who were peacemakers and persecuted, and who hungered and thirsted for righteousness, not only in their own lives, but in the life of all the world, and who truly became 'salt of the earth' and 'light of the world.'

"Throughout the centuries the missionary enterprise has been the expression of the abundant spiritual life of the Church. When her spiritual life was weak, then she ceased to be missionary; when her spiritual life was strong, she invariably expressed it so. For the modern child, the foreign missionary work of the Church may also form a means of expression. Here is something in which he can help even now a little—one day perhaps much more, and in and through service his own spiritual life will grow strong

"Not only because of the needs of those peoples who 'sit in darkness and in the shadow of death,' but because of the spiritual needs of our own children at home, we must include missionary teaching in the work of our Sunday Schools."

The book in which I read the above is by title "The Missionary Enterprise in the Sunday School," and came to me on order from London, England. Evidently, religious writers, teachers and thinkers in England feel as we do in this country, that there is a challenge in missions sufficient to awaken the slumbering ideals of the young and bring new life and vigor to the Church.

Again we say the missionary message and teaching must be carried to the Sunday School.

WHY WE TEACH IN CARROLL COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

After a recent visit to our schools and work in the mountains of Virginia, an intelligent and sympathetic friend asked this question: "Why do we teach school in Carroll County, Va., and why does the State of Virginia not do the teaching there"? There are doubtless other Sun readers in whose minds this inquiry has arisen.

The answer to the first part of the double question is that we are teaching in order to carry the light of learning, uplift of knowledge and the saving power of Christian scholarship to those who have not had the opportunities for such that we have had. This is no fault of their own, but a fact, a stubborn fact, due to geographical and economic conditions. There are as fine and worthy people in the mountains of Virginia and North Carolina as there are anywhere, and with equal privileges for learning and improvement they are measuring up to the very best.

The answer to the second part of the double question is that the State of Virginia, whatever the cause, is simply not doing the work of instruction and uplift in proportion to the need and the opportunity. The visit to which reference is made was March 5th and 6th. I was told, I presume reliably, that the schools of the county supported by the State, and certainly those anywhere within the reach of our work, had already closed for the present academic year. The presumption was that the available means in the county treasury for this purpose was exhausted. It may be that the State of Virginia has not what is known as the equalization tax, by which rich counties bear the school burden of the more needy counties. Or, on some account the money seems not available for school purposes. However, these are speculations as to cause, and that which confronts us is the simple fact.

We have in our school boys and girls who have not had heretofore school opportunities and advantages to any appreciable degree, and I found in these schools some of the very brightest and best prospects for real scholarship and development. I recall saying to one fine, intelligent, ambitious young woman that I hoped to see her receive her diploma on the platform of Elon College as a graduate some day. With hope and ambition expressed in her appearance, she declared that to be her desire also. We have given her, and scores of others like her, an opportunity, and are doing so, and that seems to me to be suificient and worth while. Because of such opportunity and achievement, and because of the wonderful appreciation of these most worthy and deserving of our neighbors and friends, those who are there in the work are most enthusiastic over it, and those who have seen and know rejoice over what has been done and what yet remains to be done. With our two teachers crowded to the limit with willing and ready pupils, with Pastor Bradshaw busy and happy in his devoted ministerial labors, with one splendid Church building already in use, and another needed and soon to be built, the work goes well, and the people of Carroll County are responding readily to the great and good work the Christians are doing there.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF FAITH.

Faith is an intellectual process, action or attitude and not a substance of any kind. It is not feeling, but when the soul surrenders itself, unreservedly in trust to God, his glorious presence comes into all its avenues and powers, filling it "with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

"Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, but not seen." It is the assurance, belief, or confidence that the things we desire will be ours, and that some of the most desirable things, though invisible, are already ours—as justification, heirship to God, a title to heavenly mansions above, membership in God's family, and the present working together of all things for our good.

The words: faith, trust, belief and confidence, are employed in the Bible to convey the same idea. "Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness"; "Faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness."—Rom. 4: 3, 9. God saves men "because they trust in him," and "we are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end."

Faith has a foundation, object and end. The foundation of faith is the evidence on which it rests. The object of faith is the power we rely on or trust in for the accomplishment of the end. The end of faith is the thing desired, the thing to be accomplished, the achievement to be made, the thing hoped for.

The foundation of the Christian's faith is the Bible and the book of nature. It embraces all that reveals the attributes, character and resources of God, and all facts of history and experience that contribute to the manifestation of his disposition toward his creatures. "God manifested in the flesh," is the object of faith, and its end is the salvation of the soul and the glory of God. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls."—1 Peter 1:9. "Whether ye eat or drink, do all to the glory of God." "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." That is to say, faith comes by attention to Gospel light, or it is the result of an honest contemplation of evidence. Hence, the absurdity of praying for faith when it may for aught he knows involve a desire to believe, what may prove to be untrue. Faith is based on the apprehension of evidence. A man who approaches God acceptably must have faith to start with, for "Without faith it is impossible to please Him: for he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

Predestinarians hold that God gives faith to some men and then saves them because they have it; and withholds it from others, and damns them because they do not have it. This is shocking theology, involving, as it does, the gross slander on God that he is running a system of government in which some subjects are unconditionally—without regard to their moral choices—elected to the joys of heaven, while others are unconditionally—regardless of their moral choices—doomed to endless ruin. But we know that God is infinite in goodness; and that His government is founded on righteousness and equity.

God does not give saving faith to any. If He did, it would be a delusive cloak under which to carry on a system of capricious, unreasonable, haphazard despotism. He gives abundance of light—abundance of evidence of all the truths and facts essential to our salvation. He is always ready to quicken the apprehension of every honest enquirer after truth and the way of righteousness, so that "wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." "He that believeth on the Son is not condemned; but he that believeth not, is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil."—John 3:18, 19. There is a vast difference between light and faith. Light is given from heaven in ample abundance to produce faith in all who will open their eyes and look; faith is justly required of all on account of abundance of light. When we reject the light by closing our eyes, then comes, as an inevitable consequence, blindness, darkness, sin, guilt and spiritual death.

The two Greek words rendered faith and believe, occur in the New Testament over five hundred times. Pistuo is the verbal root and expresses action. It is translated believe, and signifies an act of the creature, and never predicated of God. The other word is Pistis, translated faith and its only legitimate meaning is an act of trust, performed by the creature. Faith is made up of acceptance and trust, which is a personal act or habit of the creature—the exercise of his natural gifts on natural evidence and the exercise of his natural gifts under the influence and direction of the Holy Ghost with regard to spiritual or divine things. Christian faith always embraces the personality and works of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Our salvation is not conditioned on money, proficiency in science, large natural endowments, noble lineage or even on suffering, but on faith; neither is it conditioned on external mechanical obedience to God's law. External obedience can never cure the soul of its inner malady," for the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." No mental effort of the soul alone can change its affections from enmity to love; it requires the perfect acquiescence and co-operation of two minds—man and God—to bring the soul into normal condition. Faith is psychologically and absolutely essential to such a reunion. "Where is boasting, then? It is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay: but by the law of faith. Therefore, we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law."

Trust includes belief, faith and confidence; but there are multitudes who believe in God's Bible and have confidence in Him who do not trust Him with their whole heart. Trust includes unreserved commitment of the soul and body, time, talent, possessions, friends, reputation and pleasures, all, over into the hand of the Holy one, to be His and completely subject to His will and control for time and eternity. It also includes a decision of our will-power—a determination to please God, a purpose of perpetual harmony with the divine mind and the divine law, to love God with all our heart, soul and might.

Hence, the propriety and beauty of Paul's statement: "Being justified freely by grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time, His righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus."

CHALLENGE TO STUDY THE GREAT CLASSICS OF DEVOTIONAL LITERATURE.

By Rev. W. D. Parry, D. D.,
Pastor the Raleigh Christian Church.

Many lament the apparent lack of spiritual life among the men and women of today. Earnest souls exclaim, "Hosannas languish on our tongues and devotion dies!"

Still others are of a most optimistic temper and assure us that we are living in the best age the world has ever known. We are called upon to consider the improved conditions of living and to note the efforts being made for the amelioration of human suffering.

It is not the purpose of this article to pass judgment upon the Church or arraign society for its shortcomings. That there is room for criticism of the Church and condemnation of society we do not doubt; all human institutions are imperfect. We are confident that the Church has a definite mission, even in this age, that gives her mandates scant consideration, in many instances. And we are sometimes inclined to believe that there is a reason for the treatment received.

Willard L. Sperry, minister of the Central Congregational Church, of Boston, and professor of practical theology, in Andover Theological Seminary, Cambridge, declares in a recent publication: "If sentimentality is bad in art it is even worse in religion. All of the initial energy of emotion in the theology of Romanticism has spent itself. We may no longer conjure with human feelings as the single talisman of the spiritual life. The temper of the age in which we live is that a candid realism, suspicious of all vague descriptions of religion is emotion barren of idea. We renounce all heat of feeling which is not also a light for the mind." May it not be that the reason for the dying of devotion and the silence of exultant praise, lies in the fact that we are stressing an "emotion barren of ideas"? Do we not need to heed the apostolic admonition, "to study to show ourselves workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth"? Has it not been made apparent to us that all "heat of feeling which is not also a light for the mind" is very uncertain and unreliable? Must we not give a reason for the hope that is within us?

Every age has been rich in devotional literature. Our age is no exception. The man or woman who selects, with discrimination, will find many books, the reading of which will not only enrich the spiritual life, but enlighten the understanding as well; books that will enable us to give a reason for the hope that is within us, in no uncertain language. Perhaps we shall not be able to satisfy a materialistic science that stubbornly refuses to believe in either the delectable mountains or the vision beatific, but we will find ourselves better equipped in the things of the spirit.

I am aware that there is much that is published under the head of devotional literature that is nothing but trash. The chief benefit conferred, by its publication, is the enrichment of the publishers. Like the jazz music and doggeral verse of many of the popular hymns of the day, no other purpose is served. But serious damage has and is being done, both by a literature of sentimentality and a syncopation of church music. For that reason, I have stated above that those who select with discrimination will find many books that will enrich their experience and enlighten their minds. If, for any reason, one may find that he is not qualified to select, it will not be difficult to receive assistance in making proper selection. There are excellent book reviews and one can always consult his pastor, who will gladly help him in such selection.

The value of books of a purely devotional character cannot be overestimated. They are testimonials from men and women who have realized God, not merely as an abstraction, but as a living power. From the richness of their experience they bear witness of the Unseen. They have met their Master in the secret place and come forth with an assurance of His love that tomes of theology could never have made possible. They know that He is and that He is the rewarder of those who diligently seek Him. To them all ages are indebted. When doubt and uncertainty have caused the feet to wander into some "by-path meadow," when "giant despair" has cast the soul into the deepest dungeon of his grim fortress, their word brings the message of hope and their assurance gives strength to break the shackles that bind the spirit and rout the enemy. They do not present an argument. It is not what they think about God, it is rather what they know of God. The great religious awakenings have come as a result of spiritual illumination. Spiritual illumination is always born of devotion.

But let it be remembered that no man can find God merely by hearing or reading. The illumined soul gives the message, points the way, but that is as far as messenger can go. The message of hope is given, the assurance of strength affirmed, but he who hears must heed or "Doubting Castle" will be his permanent abode. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." He who prefers to fill the role of a doubting Thomas will have no difficulty.

We live in a scientific age, an age when more than at any other indubitable evidence is demanded. We cannot believe that men have become so self-sufficient that they no longer feel the need for God in their lives. We believe that there are many, as many as ever, who hunger and thirst after righteousness. And we believe that God is just as willing to be found of men as ever. And we also believe that were all men who have been plunged into doubt by the apparent triumph of science over religion, to investigate the evidence offered by those who have experienced God, and not only investigate, but seek as they ought, with open minds, many would come to know peace of spiritual realization.

I have no desire to detract from the results of scientific research, no inclination to stay the progress of investigation along scientific lines, but I have as little patience with narrow dogmatism in the scientist as I have in the churchman. Nor am I disposed to dispute the claim that science has taken from the Church the intellectual leadership that was once here. If such be the case, the Church and not science stand condemned. But I have little respect for the man who contemptuously affirms that religion has had its day. I do not think, so long as he holds such an attitude, there is any use to appeal to him. He is not, as he boasts, an honest investigator. He has become a dogmatist, of the most narrow and bigoted type. I challenge such a man to examine, with fairness, the classics of devotional literature, to give the illumined souls of the ages a hearing.

It is a significant fact that present-day publications, of a devotional character, emphasize the fact that devotion to God manifests itself in service to men. The best books that have come under my notice for the last few years have stressed the fact that he who serves God must serve humanity. Certainly this is a hopeful indication that the Church is not quite ready for the discard. Her strong men make clear the fact that ease in Zion is neither godlike nor Christian. Choice souls, who have heeded the Master's command and have gone into the by-paths of life, seeking to help and to save, tell us that they have met their Lord in the most unexpected places and have heard Him declare: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my children, ye have done it unto me."

It is my conviction that the strength of the Church is dependent upon the apprehension of God by her communicants. She must do the will of God, must present a living Christ to men. She need not be disturbed by progress of thought or changing viewpoint. Humanity will always need God, and He will never be outgrown. If there were a larger reading of devotional literature and a profiting by what was read, the results would be quickly noticeable.

I am also convinced that if every honest doubter, every sincere seeker after the truth, would examine the evidence supplied in literature of devotion and follow those who know the way, the darkness of doubt would be dispelled and the light of truth make radiant the life.—Written for the Raleigh Times, for their special "Religious Book Week" number.

THE TRINITY OF GOD.

PREFACE.

In presenting to the readers of THE SUN the subject of the Trinity, I am offering a discussion of a subject which is seldom seen in our papers and scarcely ever read in books by any but theological students and ministers of the Gospel.

Further, regarding this doctrine, I am attempting a scientific explanation which I have never seen in print nor heard from the lips of any teacher except the Rev. A. R. Lloyd, D. D., Episcopal missionary and archdeacon to Haiti, than whom there is not a more thorough scholar, under whose tutilage I have had the great fortune to sit for the past two years. What follows herewith is in accordance with his instructions and is a result of my studies in connection therewith. In this I do not claim any originality whatever, except in expression, arrangement of thought and its immediate application. However, his explanations are so thoroughly clarifying on that subject, I offer it for the edification of all who may be interested to give it a careful reading, and it is to him, the sacred memory of my mother, the love of my father, and you, I dedicate its worth.

THE TRINITY.

"God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost." This is called the "Trinity," and since it has been used as a term fundamental in our religious life, it means something, and it is the most stable unity of knowledge the world possesses. It is the one big view of the divine nature which offers to us for our contemplations the real Magna Charta of faith.

Some state that this is an age too practical for doctrinal teaching, but it is believed that we are also in an age of search for knowledge and intelligent people are glad to hear an explanation of the great truths of Christian faith, provided it is explained reasonably and with clarity. It is undoubtedly a great fault of many, both of teachers and listeners, that we do not familiarize ourselves with the right interpretation of these doctrines, and often it is with a blind faith that does not attempt to understand or explain at all; therefore, they are merely proclaimed to be mysteries, which, of course, they are.

In this discussion, may it be understood that everything is a mystery. No one can tell how the intellect thinks, how the will exerts force, or how affections extend toward a person; and yet the fact that man does all these things, makes him certain of each and that they are a part of his existence. That God exists, no one denies, but how He does is a mystery; and yet He has told us enough of Himself and the nature of His being, His Son and His Spirit, so that we may understand Him quite well.

Although all being is mysterious, yet God is a being we ought to know something about. He revealed Himself to the Jews for fifteen hundred years through law-givers, priests, kings and prophets; and at the end of that time He sent His Son to complete the revelation so that man would know all that it is possible to know in this life concerning himself. The Bible is before us a bold testimony of the Great One in Three. What follows is to present a scientific, as well as religious, explanation of that fact.

MEANING OF THE TRINITY.

The Trinity is said to be a "distinction of Divine Persons within one common individual Divine Substance, known as God."—Rev. A. R. Lloyd, D. D. This implies that God is one, indivisible, insoluble and eternal; and that He exists in three persons, who are equal and co-existent with Him, making the three persons one God, and in the three He is complete in His manner of subsisting and in His operations for perfecting mankind.

THE TRINITY FROM THE SCRIPTURES.

1. The Divine Commission.

"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."—St. Matthew 28:9. This is the simple statement of the doctrine of the Trinity.

These were the words of Jesus just before He ascended into Heaven, and in them He declares that it takes three words to name God in His relation to the world and humanity, and in stating the process by which we are saved--Father, Son and Holy Spirit—and that each name is appropriate with and corresponds to the special relation that each bears to Christianity. Each name—Father, Son and Spirit—is distinct from the other, functions differently in a special way, and they all complete our idea of God and that in Him is an indisoluble unity.

It is assumed that the fact that God is One needs no argument. From Genesis to Revelation, the Scriptures are full of it. But this is not said of the Trinity, for it could not be given until Jesus, the Son, came in the flesh and accomplished the work of redemption; yea, not until Pentecost, when the coming of the Spirit was manifested. After that, the minds of the apostles seemed marvelously filled with his presence, and their ministry began to be filled with expressions in threes, all in one, for then they knew the Father, had seen the Son, and had felt the Spirit.

For instance, take the baptism of Jesus. There was Jesus, the Spirit and the Voice from heaven.—Matt. 3:16, 17. On the material side there was John, Jesus and the water. The supreme religious act of our Lord is covered with threes.

Paul's writings are full of threes, such as "the grace, the love and the communion."—2 Cor. 13:14. "One God and Father of all, who is over all, through all, and in all."—Eph. 4:6.

Peter speaks of "the sanctification of the spirit, unto obedience and the sprinkling of the blood."—1 Peter 1:2.

Revelation proclaims him in threes, "Holy, Holy, Holy, who was, who is, and who is to come."

One cannot read far in the Scriptures without noticing this threefold manner of expression. Would they thus be linked together unless they did exist in the understanding of these writers? And would they be so used unless in some wonderful manner they were one?

Notwithstanding that the Trinity was not understood until after Christ, quotations from the Old Testament, such as we find in Isa. 6:3, Num. 6:24-26, are showing that the Trinity had some plan in thought. It seemed natural for the Jews to express God in threefold functions, making it easy for the apostles to take it up.

GOD'S METHOD OF DISPATCHING HIS AMBASSADORS.

The different persons of the Trinity are represented as being sent, such as "The Holy Spirit whom the Father will send in Thy name."—Jno. 14:26. "Thou didst send me into the world."—17:18. "Thou lovest me."—17:24. And yet all this distinction does not destroy the unity, for it is through these we have our access in one spirit unto the Father.—Eph. 2:18.

It is thus that we have the Father as Creator and Provider of redemption—Jno. 3:16; the Father in the Son, becoming man for the purpose of that redemption—Eph. 1:7; and the Holy Spirit applying the benefits of that redemption. Not unlike a tree, it is. A tree consists of three parts—roots (source), stem (manifestation), and leaves (or fruit), the benefits of the other two. So does God. God the source; Jesus the manifestation; the Holy Spirit the fruit. It is thus that our baptismal formula—Father, Son and Holy Ghost—has become the expression of the truth which is fundamental in all life and especially in God toward man.

THE PERSON OF GOD.

What is meant by person? An individual like James, Peter and John. That is not hard. But when we speak of God being three persons, that is different.

We are told that a person used to mean a masque which an actor used representing the part he played. Afterward it became the character he assumed to play. Although this was inadequate to explain the person or persons of God, it was taken for that purpose because it was the best that could be found, and the Trinity —"three persons in one"—was set forth. Thus we have God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost, all one God or one "divine essence." So entire and indivisible are the three in one that they cannot be set apart. Their being, their thought, and their activity are harmonious and without conflict. None is greater nor less than the other, and all exist co-equal and co-eternal; so that every one who believes in Him may have eternal life, instead of perishing.—John 3:16, modern speech.

It is thus that whatever we think about it, believe it or not, it makes no difference, the Trinity is one big fact, the foundation rock of the Christian religion. It is the revelation of the Lord himself, representing His character, without which he nor his redemption would be complete; and therefore it is worthy of the acceptance of every man.

[To be continued. The next subject to be "The Revelation of Man in the Trinity."]

WORKERS FOR MEN AND MILLIONS.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, of the Georgia and Alabama Conference, is now assisting the captains in churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference in their work of making collections on pledges so as to get pledges and books brought up to date where possible; and Rev. J. Fuller Johnson, of the North Carolina Conference, is working in churches of that Conference to the same end. These brethren are doing a much-needed and a noble work for the Church and the kingdom, and any assistance rendered them in their faithful labors will be appreciated.

This is the first time individual helpers have gone to the assistance of the captains in their work of collection, and they have so far met with hearty response and willing co-operation. The captains seem to welcome with real relish some assistance in getting their pledges and obligations in better shape.

A TITHE OF THE MEMBERS.

If we Christians could get one-tenth of our number to adopt the Lord's plan of giving, and abandon our own self-willed plans, we would go a long way in kingdom progress and do much in solving our most difficult Church problems.

Last week we sent to the captains of Men and Millions just a few tithe-pledge cards—to be exact, just one-tenth as many cards as there were members in their Church—with request that at least this number of tithes be secured if possible. We sincerely hope and pray that this number may be secured. Why not search the Scripture on this vital theme, and then having found God's word as taught therein, adopt that way and abandon our human and man-made way? God's way is better. Try it. J. O. A.

REPORT OF C. D. JOHNSTON.

We are greatly gratified that February made a better showing on payment of pledges to Men and Millions than January. Now for March! Surely, every person who made a pledge to this the holiest and divinest movement ever initiated amongst the Christians will make an effort to pay something now on the obligation. Thanks, dear friends. J. O. ATKINSON.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

APRIL 1, 1923.

SUBJECT: The Walk to Emmaus. The Easter Lesson.—Luke 24.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen."—Luke 24:5, 6.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 53:7-12.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Deut. 18:15-19; Ps. 16: 10, 22, 110; Isa. 61:1-3; Matt. 28:1-10; Acts 2:22-36; 1 Cor. 15:3-20; Col. 3:1-4.

A WALK WITH JESUS.

The story of the walk to Emmaus tells of just one of the appearances of Jesus to His disciples after His resurrection from the dead. Dummelow gives a list of twelve appearances of Jesus, including the following:

(1) To Mary Magdalene.—John 20:16.
(2) To the other women.—Matt. 28:9.
(3) To Peter.—Luke 24:34; 1 Cor. 15:5.
(4) To the two disciples at Emmaus.—Luke 24:15.
(5) To the ten apostles without Thomas.—Luke 24:35.
(6) To the apostles with Thomas.—John 20:26.
(7) To seven disciples.—John 21:1.
(8) To the eleven in Galilee.—Matt. 28:16.
(9) To over 500 brethren.—1 Cor. 15:6.
(10) To James the Lord's brother.—1 Cor. 15:7.
(11) To the apostles at the ascension.—Luke 24:50; Acts 1:14.
(12) To Paul.—Acts 9:3.

Other scholars make other lists, but all show that the Lord did appear on several occasions to His followers after the resurrection.

The two disciples were sad as they walked along the Emmaus road that day. They were thinking and talking of the events of the past three days, events which had engaged the interest of everybody near Jerusalem. The men had hoped that He was to be the Redeemer. They had believed it with all their hearts. But now He had been condemned and killed, and for three days buried, when the strange news came from the women that He had arisen. They could not understand it. As they talked, Jesus drew near. The One who could explain the difficulties, cheer their sadden hearts, and dispel the gloom, was right at their elbows, but they did not know it. Jesus is always near, eager to comfort the sorrowful, and to guide the perplexed. To walk with Him means to walk in light and joy.

"He leads me in the path of light,
Beneath a sunny sky;
And so we walk together,
My Lord and I."

As they walked along together, the two men told Jesus of the events of the past few days, and He explained to them the Scriptures, from "Moses and all the prophets." He was a stranger to them, but they listened earnestly to His words, and their interest was so deep that when they reached home they insisted that He should stop with them. Jesus would have gone on, but they "constrained" Him. Jesus does not force His company on any one; but how gladly He stays when he is wanted and asked! Have you invited Jesus to live with you? Can you sing:

"I could not live apart from Him,
I love to feel Him nigh;
And so we dwell together,
My Lord and I."

In the house after the walk, they sat down together to supper. When Jesus asked the blessing, "Their eyes were opened, and they knew Him," and then He disappeared from their sight. They knew Him, and all of their sadness was gone. They knew Him, and they longed to tell others that He lived. Their first deed was to start that very hour to go to tell the eleven "The Lord is risen indeed."

This was a wonderful walk with Jesus. First He heard the story of their doubts and fears. Then He explained to them God's word, and His divine plan. Then He came into the home, and let them know Him. And they went out to tell others. This is the story of the Christian life. Our confession brings us His help. We come to know Him, and then we wish to work for Him. Dr. Bosworth expresses this thought from the walk to Emmaus in prayer form. May it be the prayer of His followers:

"O Lord, walk with me in the hours when the great certainties of life seem to be fading away, when the lights seem to be going out, and the soul grows cold. Win from me all the story of my doubts and fears. Bless me by the influence of Thy strong presence before ever I know that Thou art by me in the way."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

APRIL 1, 1923.

The Easter Psalm.—Ps. 16:1-11; Acts 2:22-27.

(Consecration Meeting.)

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

"They sing the song that ne'er grows old,
The sweetest story ever told—
Christ lives! Christ lives!
Forevermore!"

The fourth consecration meeting of the year brings lessons from the Easter Psalm (the 16th Psalm), which has for its theme, "Jehovah, the psalmist's Portion in life and Deliverer in death."

The psalm opens with a prayer, for safety, from the one true source of safety—the Heavenly Father. In life or in death, He is the one great refuge for His children.—Verse 1.

The best things in life come from God. His greatest gift to the world was Jesus Christ, and the resurrection of Jesus, after His death on Calvary, comes our greatest blessing.—Verse 2.

"God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever."—Ps. 73:26. Other psalms testify to Jehovah's goodness and that He cares for us. No greater heritage could be desired than His blessings "in pleasant places."—Verses 5, 6.

"I have set Jehovah always before me. * * * I shall not be moved." The God who strengthened His Son through the dark hours on Calvary is the same God who cares for us, always. Even the end of life cannot separate Him from a faithful child of His.—Verse 8.

"My heart is glad." Easter is a time of gladness, of new life, of great promise. It gives expression to the Christian spirit of joy.—Verse 9.

The Easter lesson is "forever more." It points out the path of life, for death was conquered. There is fullness of joy in the presence of God—forevermore.—Verse 11.

On the Day of Pentecost, Peter quoted from the 16th Psalm as he addressed the Jewish people. He told them how Jesus of Nazareth lived, and did mighty works, but how He was crucified and killed by their very hands. But God raised Him from the dead. He showed the meaning of Jesus' risen life. Jesus spoke of one who died: "Our friend is fallen asleep." Peter said to the men of Israel "having loosed the pange of death," speaking of the resurrection. What is your view of life beyond the grave? Does Easter bring to you the blessed lesson of immortality?—Acts 2:22-27.

"She shall teach thee that the dead have slept
But to waken in more glorious forms,
And that the mystery of the seed's decay
Is but the promise of the coming life."
—Bryant.

"The voice of nature loudly cried,
And many a message from the skies,
That something in us, never dies."
—Robert Burns.

"O may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence."
—George Elliot.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Make this a real Easter Consecration Meeting, with decorations and music in harmony with the theme of the meeting. The meeting may very appropriately be called an "At-the-Cross Meeting." Aarrange a tall, white cross on the platform in the room in which the prayer-meeting is to be held. On the cross have holes, in which white candles are set, at least one for every member present. After the song, "At the Cross," ask each to take part with an Easter verse, thought or prayer, showing what Easter means in their lives, and as each one takes part, the chairman of the Prayer-Meeting Committee will light a candle. Every one must take part in order to make the cross shine brightly. At the close sing softly, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."

The Easter meeting may be made a "flower meeting," when each member will bring flowers to decorate the room during the meeting, to be used as gifts to sick members at the close. The flower and an Easter call from a Christian Endeavorer will bring Easter cheer to the sick room.

Can it Be True?

Can it be true He lives again,
That we His loving face may see?
Will He who gave His life for men
Again our friend and helper be?

Can it be true the Crucified,
Just as of old, will walk life's way
And with His faithful few abide,
To guide and cheer from day to day?

Can it be true Death had no pow'r
Upon the Man of Galilee;
That life divine shall be our dow'r
Because He gained the victory?

Oh, yet it's true, we know it's true,
He walks once more with mortal men;
Oh, yet it's true, we know it's true,
The loving Lord doth live again.

DIXIE ENDEAVOR DAY—MARCH 18.

Christian Endeavor Societies throughout the South will be observing "Dixie Endeavor Day" on March 18th. The copy of the program sent out for the day has just reached us, and it includes special songs, and a pageant written to tell of the work of Christian Endeavor. It presents "Thelma," who is not interested in Christian Endeavor work, in spite of the efforts of her friends. One night she has a wonderful dream, in which the "Spirit of Christian Endeavor" impresses upon her subconscious mind that which her friends have been trying to get her to realize. Twelve characters take part in the pageant.

The Christian Endeavor Societies of the Christian Church should plan to make this a big event. Given on Sunday night, it makes an impressive service. An offering for the great Christian Endeavor work now being undertaken in Dixie should be taken in connection with the pageant, and made as liberal as possible.

If your society has not received a copy of the pageant, or planned to observe Dixie Endeavor Day on March 18th, write today to the Dixie Endeavorer, 5 Ferger Building, Chattanooga, Tenn., and a copy will be sent you without cost. Then plan for the greatest celebration in the name of Christian Endeavor that your Church has ever had, and express your appreciation for the great work of the All-South Christian Endeavor forces by a generous offering.

The pageant prepared for this program is one of the best ever offered to a society which wishes to present the work of world-wide Christian Endeavor—its value and blessings, to the whole Church.

A NEW PERIODICAL.

The Journal of Christian Education.

The initial copy of "The Journal of Christian Education," succeeding "The Teachers' and Officers' Journal," has just been received. This is to be a monthly magazine of thirty-six pages, devoted to Christian education, with special emphasis on Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor. The following departments are found each edited by an able writer: " Our Christian Homes," "Worship," "The Children's Division," "The Young People's Division," "The Adult Division," "The Administrative Division," "The Church School Plant," "Our Christian Colleges," "Who's Who in Our Church Work," "What's What in Our Church Work," and the "Question Box," and "Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Comments."

Through these departments, the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church is endeavoring to link up the many agencies of the Church into one program with one aim—the Christian nurture of the child and youth. Dr. W. A. Harper is the editor-in-chief of this new journal.

No Sunday School teacher nor Christian Endeavor worker nor Christian interested in the great work of Christian education, through our churches and colleges, can afford to be without this magazine. The subscription price is one dollar per year, or seventy-five cents to club of five or more to one address. We know of one Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention which voted last Sunday to include in its order of supplies for the next quarter a copy of this magazine for each teacher and officer. We hope that many more will do this, and that the Journal of Christian Education may be widely read and many of its suggestions adopted in the churches of the Southern Christian Convention.

THE RELIGIOUS SIGNIFICANCE OF THE HUGUENOT-WALLOON TERCENTENARY.

BY REV. JOHN BAER STOUDT.

Protestants in America are looking forward with great interest to the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the coming of the first Walloons (French and Belgian Huguenots) to America. This colony, the first which came to the Hudson River country, was composed almost entirely of Walloons who, like the Pilgrims, had found asylum in Holland and sailed thence, under the flag of the Dutch West India Company, seeking an opportunity to settle in the new world. In the newly built ship, "New Netherland," they entered what is now New York Bay in the spring of 1624, and made their home in the territory bordering on and lying between the Connecticut and Delaware Rivers, then known as New Netherland.

These exiles for the sake of their faith were filled with a deeply religious spirit. They were accompanied on their voyage by Sebastian Krol, a lay chaplain, who conducted services every morning, noon and evening on the way over, and on arrival at Fort Orange (now Albany), to which most of the thirty families in the colony went, he immediately began the work of providing for organized worship according to the tenets of the reformed faith. The religious policy of the colonial administration of New Netherland breathed a spirit of toleration and liberality which was rare in that age, and which echoed the spirit of freedom then found almost solely in the Dutch republic.

The following record in the rules laid down by the Dutch West India Company for the government of the colony bears interesting witness to its point of view:

"Within their territory they shall only worship according to the true Reformed religion, as it is done within this country (Holland) at present, and by a good Christian life they shall try to attract the Indians and other blind persons to the knowledge of God and His word without, however, committing any religious persecution; but freedom of conscience shall be left to every one. But if any one of them, or if any one within their territory, shall intentionally curse or speak blasphemy against the name of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ he shall be punished by the commander and his council according to circumstances."

The Huguenot-Walloon New Netherland Commission has been instituted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America for the proper celebration of the arrival of this first Huguenot-Walloon colony. Its chairman, Mr. Robert W. de Forest, of New York, is himself a descendant of a distinguished Walloon exile, Jesse de Forest. The personnel of the commission is made up of representatives from the constituent bodies of the Federal Council, from the Huguenot societies throughout the country, and from a number of outstanding civic and historical associations interested in the tercentenary. The President of the United States has accepted an honorary chairmanship of the commission, as have also the Queen of the Netherlands, the King of Belgium, and the President of the French republic—the three European countries most directly associated with the anniversary.

Co-operating committees have been set up in these countries, and likewise in Switzerland, Italy and England, which will all be reached by the Huguenot memorial pilgrimage planned by the commission for the summer of 1923, as the first part of the celebration. The pilgrimage will cover a period of two and a half months, including such outstanding religious centers as La Rochelle, Montpellier, the Cevennes and Paris, in France; Torre Pellice, the Waldensian capital in Italy; London, Canterbury and Edinburgh, in Great Britain; Geneva and Zurich, in Switzerland; Worms, in Germany; Brussels, Mons and Louvain, in Belgium; Amsterdam, Leyden and The Hague, in Holland. In the last country named, the participants in the pilgrimage will be the guests of the Leyden Pilgrim Fathers' Society, and the program will be arranged to fit in with the celebrations which will then be going on in Holland in connection with the silver jubilee of the reign of Queen Wilhelmina. Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, the chairman of the executive committee, and Rev. John Baer Stoudt, its director, will accompany the tour and will interpret the religious and historic significance of the places visited. Applications for participation in the pilgrimage should be made as soon as possible, either to the commission, at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York, or direct to Dr. H. W. Dunning, 188 Rawson Road, Brookline, Mass., who is making the arrangements for the trip.

For 1924, the plans (so far as they have been worked out) call for the observance by the American churches of "Huguenot-Walloon Tercentenary Sunday" on April 24th of that year, when it is hoped that many special commemorative services will be held in honor of the Huguenots. Local civic and historical celebrations will be held in the several Dutch and Huguenot centers in the Middle States, and also along the Atlantic coast, since a strong Huguenot-Walloon emigration went to Virginia, Florida and South Carolina. An international Huguenot congress is to be held in New York; another local event in that city will be the dedication of the Huguenot Memorial Church in Huguenot Park on Staten Island, near the site of an early Huguenot colony which was massacred by hostile Indians. Preparations are being made to compile a series of Huguenot memorial volumes, the separate articles or chapters to be written by authorities of note.

The tercentenary celebration will carry over to 1926 in order to join in the civic commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of New York City by the purchase of Manhattan Island from the Indians by Peter Minuit. The year 1526 also marked the organization of the colony into a Protestant congregation.

At this time, Rev. R. A. Whitten, Columbus, Ga., is in Eastern Virginia, working in the interest of the Men and Millions Campaign. Dr. J. O. Atkinson writes, under date of March 6th, saying: "Bro. Whitten is a fine fellow, a good brother, and I think a devout Christian. He was licensed at last session of the Georgia and Alabama Conference and has since then been in the active ministry. The captains and pastors will find him agreeable, energetic and loyal to work with. Brethren, whatever you can do for this cause, do it now, as the leaders in the work are calling on you. The days are passing and soon the five-year period for the work of the Men and Millions will be gone, and will the work be done?

Christian Orphanage

EASTER SUNDAY AND THE ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Easter Sunday comes the first Sunday in April. It comes at one of the most beautiful seasons of the year. The trees are dressing out in their beautiful suits of green and arrayed in trimmings of flowers of the most beautiful colors. The fields, dotted with peach and apple trees in full bloom, are a thing of beauty. The young girls are happy over their new Easter hats and dresses, and the young men rejoice because they had encugh money to buy a new suit. The sun seems to shine brighter, and the birds sing sweeter than at any other time in the year. We have left the cold, winter winds behind, and we are emerging into breezes more pleasant and days more balmy. We are happy, we hold no grudge against any man, and just feel like we want to help every one in need and make them happy, too, so all the world can rejoice together because we are commemorating the resurrection of a living Saviour.

While we are happy and have a heart full of love, let us make it complete by doing a kind and noble deed. Let us make a special offering (one that will be in keeping with the beautiful season) to help our ninety-eight little orphan boys and girls at the Christian Orphanage. They have been unfortunate. You have been richly blessed. They appeal to you for help; you can help them. They must be fed; they must have clothes. They cry to you; they are dependent upon you.

Be at your Church on Easter Sunday morning, or the one Sunday in April when the annual Easter offering is made, and join in with a big, open heart and help swell the offering to large proportions, so you and your Church membership will be happy over the event. Help build up an institution of charity that will be a great blessing to helpless humanity and one we can point to with pride.

We are dependent on the Easter offering to bridge us over the spring and summer months.

A CANADIAN WINTER.

Believing our Southern friends would like to know about a Canadian winter, I shall write a brief description. I was present at the convention of the World League Against Alcoholism, held in Toronto, thirty miles from here, and some of our Virginia delegates asked if they were seeing a sample of Canadian weather. I replied, "Yes."

It was snowing and melting then—the last of November. It has been snowing quite frequently ever since. We did not see the bare earth from early in December till last week. During that time it snowed nearly every week, sometimes every day a little. And then keeping the streets cleaned of snow was more than fun, even requiring horses and wagons to haul it away. Nevertheless, many bright, sunshiny days intervened, and even a few weeks of brilliant sunshine with the thermometer registering zero, above and below to 18 degrees. My two-year-old daughter enjoyed tobogganing rides on the snow slide in our backyard. Skating rinks for ice skating were seen in almost any yard where there were boys and girls. These were made by banking a little snow around the plot, pouring water on snow which froze, then sprinkling the plot as often as necessary to obtain the proper thickness of ice.

Everybody enjoys winter here except the sick and shut-ins. Games of all kinds are played on ice. People from three to fifty can skate. Snowshoeing and skiing amused some. Of course, the pleasure driver and farmer with his load of hay, bread man and milk man, all used vehicles on runners—sleighs and cutters. However, automobiles and trucks could travel nearly every day in the city. Last week brought us a visit of spring, but as quickly vanished, for Mr. Canadian Winter was displeased and snowed us in again. Great fun to shovel off sixteen inches Monday morning, with snow banks three feet high on either side. If I were able I would send some snap-shots of snow scenes to my Southern friends, for I know you would get a better description from the picture.

I always appreciate the warm, spiritual rays of the CHRISTIAN SUN, which is still shining in our Canadian home. May the Lord continue to bless our editor and also the good wife, whom I know is a jewel of the Southern type.

is being published in McCall's Magazine. It is the most important and epoch-making contribution ever printed by an American magazine, because here for the first time has a master-writer and master-historian picked out shining thread of the Biblical narrative, dropping away all details from it and presenting it not only in the simplest and most beautiful of English but fixing it also in its exact historical perspective.

MARRIED

EDWARDS-WARREN

At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Warren, Burlington, N. C., Saturday, March 10th, at 8 P. M., Mr. Emmett Jackson Edwards, of High Point, N. C., and Miss Emma Mildred Warren, of Burlington, were united in marriage. It was a quiet home marriage and only a few invited friends and relatives were present. The Warren home was beautifully decorated for the happy event, and following a charming musical program the two plighted their troth at the improvised marriage altar, using the impressive ring service and ceremony.

Immediately after the marriage Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, amid showers of rice, left for a Northern trip.

Miss Warren, since her graduation at Elon has been a very successful teacher for two years at High Point, and the past year in the City schools of Burlington, and is exceedingly popular among a host of friends and acquaintances.

Mr. Edwards is a promising and prosperous business man of High Point.

The writer officiated.

J. O. Atkinson.

COPELAND-BEAMON

On December 27th, 1922, Mr. Mathias Copeland and Miss Hettie Beamon, both of Savage, N. C., were quietly married. Only a few of the near relatives of both parties being present. Mr. Copeland is a successful farmer of Gates County. Miss Beamon is the daughter of deacon W. C. Beamon, of Oak Grove. Both are popular and have a host of friends who wish for them a long and happy life. They were married in Suffolk, Va.

J. M. Roberts.

Dendron, Va.
March 9, 1923.

Died at his home, Dendron, Va., March 4, 1923, little Prior Cox, only child of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Cox. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Hall, his pastor; assisted by Mr. Flowers and Mr. S. C. Owen.

The floral tributes were many. After the service at the home the body was taken to the family burying ground near Dorey.

It has pleased our Heavenly Father in tenderest love, to transplant to His garden above one of our choicest flowers. Prior was loved by all who knew him. He was courteous to all people, a faithful, dutiful child in the home, and a most patient little sufferer in his recent illness.

"O, not in cruelty, not in wrath,
The reaper came that day,
'Twas an angel visited the green earth,
And took our flowers away."

We extend our love and sympathy to the bereaved parents, who, more than we, will miss him, whom God's angel bore away.

"And the mother gave in tears and pain
The flower she most did love,
May she find that flower again
In the fields of light above."

CLARK

Mrs. John T. Clark, of near Wakefield, Va., while visiting in the home of a near neighbor, on the afternoon of December 3rd, 1922, was suddenly taken ill, and as the shades of night were darkening on this lovely Sabbath evening, she fell asleep, passing quickly to the reward she had so deservedly won. Because she was our friend and coworker, because we are feeling our loss so keenly, and because her genial smile and helpful deeds will be greatly missed in our community; we the Ladies Aid Society of Spring Hill Christian Church offer the following resolutions:

First: We extend our sincere sympathy to her family, who so deeply mourn the loss of wife and mother. We bid them look to the Father for peace and comfort, in this hour of their affliction. May her passing away serve to strengthe the bonds between earth and heaven, and some day may there be an "Unbroken Circle" around the Great White Throne.

Second: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread upon the minutes of our Society and also that copies be furnished The Christian Sun and The Waverly Dispatch for publication.

Mrs. J. L. Foster,
Mrs. E. B. Richardson,
Miss Adelle Matthews,
Committee.

DIED

Mrs. W. J. Rothgeb, of Luray, Va., Route No. 3, was called to her eternal home on Sunday, March 11, 1923, after a lingering illness of several years' duration. She had been confined to her bed, however, for only a short time, although her suffering had been intense for the past two years or more.

Her age was 60 years, 6 months and 3 days. She had been a member of Leaksville Christian Church since April 5, 1906.

Her thoroughly consecrated Christian life and example was one of rare beauty, consistency and devotion. She died as she had lived, firm in her trust in God, fully resigned to His will and plans concerning her, and perfectly willing to go when He saw fit to take her.

She is survived by her husband and three sons. One of the sons, R. O. Rothgeb, is Secretary of Leaksville Church and President of the C. E. Society of the same church. Another son, Keyser, is Treasurer of Leaksville Church and Superintendent of the Sunday School.

The funeral was conducted in Leaksville Church on Monday, March 12, by her pastor, assisted by Eld. J. B. Jenkins and Eld. A. W. Campbell.

EURE

Whereas it has pleased our heavenly Father to take from our church community our beloved sister, Martha L. Eure, be it resolved:

First: That we, in great faith, humbly bow in submission to the will of Him who is too wise to make a mistake. Sister Eure was afflicted for many years before her death, but she bore her afflictions with great patience and often expressed herself as trusting in the Lord.

Second: That we, one and all, strive to imitate her in all that is good and let the Christ light shine in us.

Third: That we extend our deepest sympathy to our aged companion and friends and commend one and all to the Father who is able to heal all that come to Him.

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the church records, that a copy be sent to the family and a copy be sent to the Christian Sun for publication.

Jesus the Emancipator of Women—

Woman had little chance in the world before Jesus came. Yet she figures largely in the Old Testament. Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Miriam, Hannah, Ruth, Esther, and a host less conspicuous, many of whom are unnamed, occupy an important place in those ancient Scriptures. Hannah, as the maker of great men; Ruth, as a passionate pilgrim at whose feet the world bows in admiration and praise; Esther, the uncrowned queen whose unselfish daring ever commands the admiration of mankind, occupy the front seats upon the stage of earth's immortals. Study the Bible with the influence of woman in mind and one will be amazed to find what God wrought through her in spite of existing ignorance and prejudice.

How Henry Ford Dispenses Charity—

Henry Ford, of automobile fame, is said not to believe in charity, in the sense that the term is ordinarily used, meaning giving something to the poor to help relieve temporary needs. He thinks it is far better to help a man to help himself. To this end he has had a careful analysis made of every job in his great manufacturing plants to find out just what physical qualifications are necessary for the performance of each job. He has found that in some jobs a man need have only one leg, so when a one-legged man applies for a job he gives him a job of that kind. Some jobs do not require legs at all. Some jobs can be performed by men with only one hand, and two jobs were found that could be performed by a man without either hand. He found ten jobs that could be performed by blind men. When these handicapped men want work they are put into places which they can fill. The result is that he has nearly 10,000 of these subnormal men in his employ. He insists that he is not employing them for any sense of rendering them charity, but says he puts men where they can earn their wages. Is not this the real way to bestow charity? For charity, in the true sense, is that love for men that will prompt one to do everything that he can for their real welfare. It is far better to give a man a job that he can perform, and out of which he can make a living, than to treat him as a beggar and give him a dime or a dollar.

Let Us Have the Two Properly Related—

In intellectual processes there is an extremism which is ever the foe of soundness and stability. The idea of balance seems either to be absent or considered false. Thus there is no middle of the road. Conservatism must either be tabooed or swallowed up in ruthless, one-eyed radicalism. Now, here is an editor who is making a plea for educational evangelism. This is good. Such a plea cannot be made too strong. But why does he teach by implication that revivalistic evangelism, while once useful, has become a failure? The primal impulse of true religion is evangelism. Christianity is organized evangelism, and true evangelism is always a process in which two stages are as natural as seedtime and harvest. What is erroneously called revivalistic evangelism is bringing the seed into a form of radiant life in a new-found light. Educational evangelism is bringing that form of radiant life into its highest and most useful maturity. Neglect the seed in the beginning, fail to pass it through the darkness and travail of self-immolation, forget that except a man be born of the water and the spirit he cannot see the kingdom of God, then what is called educational evangelism will lack that vitality which is linked with eternity. Neglect the plant after it has sprung into life, and what is called revivalistic evangelism will have proved a vain and evanescent thing. But have a proper seed sowing and a proper cultivation and there must be one of God's own harvests. Then why talk about a new evangelism? Why indulge the hope that the educational evangelism will finally supplant the revivalistic? Why not follow the teaching so harmonious with common sense and nature itself that one must be converted and become as a little child that he may grow into the fullness of God?

The Immense Cost of Governing the U. S.—

It may astonish some to know that each one of us who works with hand or brain for wages, salary, or other compensation, is, on the average, contributing one day's work a week to the expense of governing the nation. In other words, something like one-seventh of the annual earnings of the people of the United States are paid back to the nation or some other political entity in the form of taxes. The sum total of all our annual taxes—Federal, State, municipal, county, and the rest—"equals the sum total of the cost of the government of the United States, the price-tag on the garments of American democracy." The staggering total of eight and a half billions is the estimate made after careful study by William P. Helm, Jr., in The Budget (New York), published by the National Budget Committee. In making his estimate, this writer reminds us that the total of all public employees in the United States, including all political subdivisions, aggregates 2,000,000, or one out of every twenty employed persons in the country. Now, "if to govern free America requires the undivided attention of one man or woman out of every twenty of its workers, what is the cost in dollars and cents"? Mr. Helm uses census returns, and makes careful estimates where such figures are lacking and finds that "the total cost of American government in 1921 was about eight and a half billion dollars," distributed as follows:

Cost of maintaining the Federal government	$4,666,671,954
Cost of maintaining 28 State governments	1,008,540,232
Cost of maintaining 253 municipal governments in cities of more than 30,000 inhabitants	1,638,296,052
Cost of maintaining the municipal governments of all towns and cities of from 2,500 to 30,000 population	431,287,059
Cost of maintaining municipal governments in 12,905 incorporated communities of less than 2,500 population	123,147,687
Cost of maintaining county governments in the 48 States	592,068,972
Total cost of American government in 1921	$8,460,011,587

The writer for the National Budget Committee tries to give us an idea of what this enormous sum means:

"Assume, for instance, that all this money had to be paid out in gold. If we were to ferret out all the gold above ground in the world today the sum would be but little more than sufficient for one year's payments.

"The national income of the United States recently has been estimated by leading economists at from sixty to sixty-five billions of dollars annually. The government's own investigation dates so far back as to be of little value, but lends some credence to these estimates. Assuming that sixty billions is approximately correct, the cost of government is about 14 per cent—more than one-eighth—of our national income.

"We have forty million workers, or thereabouts. If the cost of government were to be equally distributed among them, the burden on every man and woman in business or professional life, including the two million government workers, would be about $220 a year. On the basis of five persons to one family, the cost of government is about $400 per family per year.

"Or figure it still another way. Our forty million workers enjoy an estimated gross income of sixty billion dollars. Of that they contribute about 14 per cent for the maintenance of the government. If they should contribute labor instead of dollars (and they do, of course, pay in labor), every worker would give as his share more than seven weeks' labor every year. Every week every one of us would work approximately one day without pay as our share of government upkeep and our contribution to the cost of government.

"Such is the price we pay today for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness under our present intricate and far-flung system."—Literary Digest.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Get ready for the Convention which meets at Henderson, N. C., on May 1, 1923. The time is not far off—get ready for it now.

Since quite a number of new subscribers have been recently added to the list, as it seems, of their own accord, THE SUN must be meeting with general approval. The fact speaks well for the paper.

Did you notice the message in the SUN from the women of the North Carolina Conference Woman's Board, concerning the one-day school of missions? They begin at Henderson, N. C., April 8th.

And What do you think of Rev. Jack Spratt's sermon in this issue? He is not fooling, but much in earnest. He will likely preach for the SUN family frequently, and you may as well get acquainted with him now by reading his first sermon, as it appears on page three of this issue.

Beginning with the first issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for April, the publishers will offer a classified list of premiums for those who will solicit subscribers for the paper. A prize will be placed in the reach of all, and all may win. Begin at once to line up prospective subscribers. When the list appears you can make a choice and work to secure it.

You will do well to follow Chaplain Rountree in his discussion of the trinity. Did you say that you cannot understand the trinity? And did you say that you will believe nothing which you cannot understand? Then you will miss believing many things which are true, for many true things few of us, if any, can understand. Read Chaplain Rountree's discussion of the trinity.

When you wish matter to get in the next paper you must be sure to get it into the hands of the editor not later than Saturday morning before the next issue is to appear. The other day two communications came on Tuesday morning for the paper of the same week. It was then getting ready to go to press, and the editor was more than one hundred miles from the office. Of course, we could not get it in. Another sent an official paper, saying, if possible, get it into the next paper. It was important to have it so appear, but it reached us on Tuesday morning, and as in the other case just named, the paper was then getting ready to go to press in Richmond, while we were in Henderson. We are not only willing, but glad, to accommodate our friends just as far as we can, but the time limit ties our hands so that we cannot do as wished in many instances.

We were called to Liberty, Vance County, N. C., a few days ago to attend a funeral service. We had not been there in about forty years, when we were there to dedicate their (then) new house of worship. There was a big crowd and a splendid house of worship, but since then things have changed a great deal. That house grew old, and it has been replaced by another and a much larger one, and by far more handsome. Though we were there but an hour or two, yet we were definitely impressed as to the situation. It is one of the finest openings for a great country church with which we are acquainted. They have a large constituency, a big and a good house of worship, and a fine farming country. They have a fine pastor, but he comes to see them and preach to them but once a month, when they need him for every Sunday, and we believe they are well able to have preaching every Sunday, if they could only see it that way. Rev. J. E. Franks, of Wake County, is their pastor and a man with a strong hold on the affections of the people. If he could only live among them and preach for them every Sunday, we believe that Church would spread its influence far and near, covering a much larger area than it does now, although it now is doing much good, we believe. Let Liberty move its present popular pastor to that community, and let them take care of him, as we fully believe they are able to do, and the work there will greatly enlarge in even one year. Brethren, do not lose your opportunity.

In estimating the weight and influence of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Rev. Clarence E. Flynn, of Indiana, makes use in a recent issue of The Northwestern Christian Advocate of some forceful language. He says that Methodism was raised up to spread Scriptural holiness throughout the lands. He takes the stand that there was no other Church that could do this work of combatting worldliness. He declares that there had to be a voice to cry out against worldliness. Then he affirms that Methodism was that voice. Then he declared that there had to be a force launched against political graft, social privilege, and ecclesiastical abuse. Then he adds: "Methodism was that force." Again he asserts that an emphasis had to be laid upon the necessity for an experience of Christ within, the hope of glory. Methodism was that emphasis. Our brother is plumbing the tract for his Church, but we really thought there were some other churches in the land that did combat worldliness. Bro. Flynn, are you not mistaken? It may be that in that day your Church was the only one that would preach holiness, but, beloved, have you not gone back on it? does the Methodist Church now preach holiness as it did fifty years ago? If it does not, then tell us, please, just what that means. But we still feel that you must have been dreaming, or doing something else, when you said that the Methodist Church was the only force to combat worldliness. Why, brother, we really supposed that there were a number of bodies of Christians who had long been making a fight against worldliness. Are we in this surely mistaken? Tell us, please, for if that is true we wish to give honor to whom honor is due.

From the same source comes another paragraph which is surely interesting. We are glad to have a brother speak out so boldly as this brother does when he says: "Frequently we hear some one talking about the changing church and the evolving faith. The Church is changing and the outward form of the faith is evolving, it is true; but in what direction? Is the movement upward or downward? If we are moving forward to a more deeply spiritual Church and a more effectually saving faith, well and good; but let us have a care lest we be moving backward to the very condition against which Methodism was a protest. If we are on the way to higher standards and better things, all is well. If we are drifting back to easy and self-indulgent ways, to empty display and heartless formality, all is not so well. The world still needs a saving gospel, and ours is the Church to preach it. Shall we prove true"? Good, indeed! We are drifting, no doubt about that, but as our brother well asks, Where? That is the question and a question which some one in the Methodist Church ought to answer to the awakening of that great brotherhood. Not only so, but some one in all of our Churches ought to ask and then answer in the spirit of the Master. If we are drifting, will not some one get up and tell us whither? If the Methodist Church is drifting, as Bro. Flynn suggests, we may be sure that she is not drifting alone—some others of the same, or a similar, class are drifting along with her. If we are drifting and all unaware of the fact, it may be that we are drifting into whirlpool and not even awake to the dangers which may await us in such a place.

We have received Vol. I, No. 1, of The Journal of Christian Education, published at Dayton, Ohio, by The Christian Publishing Association of that city, and edited by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, assisted by Rev. Hugh A. Smith, D. D., Versailles, Ohio; Miss Helen Stearns, 9 Shawmut Avenue, Bradford, Mass.; Mrs. F. Bullock, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio; Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Erie, Pa.; Rev. J. E. Kauffman, 412 Green Street, Piqua, Ohio; Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., 108 Stafford Avenue, Richmond, Va.; Rev. H. Shelton Smith, Ph. D., 90 Phalley Avenue, New Haven, Conn.; Rev. W. G. Sargent, 138 Lenox Avenue, Providence, R. I.; Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C.; Rev. R. C. Helfinstein, D. D., 109 South Bradford Street, Dover, Del. Price $1.00 per year, monthly. This journal has been established by the General Convention of the Christian Church and will become the mouthpiece of the Convention in its effort to correlate and unify all of its forces for Christian education. The undertaking is stupendous and will call out the best there is in its corps of editors. The front page has the picture of youth as the center of these forces, which are named as the Church, the Home, the Christian College, Sunday School, Missions, Christian Endeavor, Social Life, Boy Scouts, or Camp Fire Girls, Recreation and Amusement, Week-Day Religious Instruction. The motto of the journal is: "We are builders together with Him." The fine face of the youth on the first page has hair only on one side of his head, and apparently has a big tear running down the cheek. We suggest that that tear be taken off his face and that the other side of his head be given some hair, for then he will be a better-looking boy and seem more ready for training. We wish the new venture real and great success, but to bring complete success will call out all the talent the men and women who have it in charge can command. It is a great undertaking. It will be sent in clubs of five to one address for 75 cents a year. Send all subscriptions to the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio.

THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION TO MEET IN EXTRAORDINARY SESSION WITH HENDERSON CHURCH.

The First Christian Church of Henderson, N. C., Dr. J. P. Barrett, pastor, has extended the Convention an invitation to meet in Henderson for the extraordinary session, to be held this spring.

The Executive Committee appreciates this invitation and hereby gives official notice of this acceptance.

The Convention will open Tuesday, May 1, 1923, at 3 P. M., and will close with the evening service Thursday, May 3rd.

The Henderson Church is a good Church, but not as strong as some, and I, as President, without the Church's consent, am suggesting that if any minister or delegate wants to help them in the entertainment, you can do so by simply writing, requesting them to arrange for you at the hotel, you paying your bills. This is only a suggestion, and I apologize to the Church now for making it. L. E. SMITH, Pres.

Building the Christian Life on the Right Foundation and the Outcome

By Rev. Jack Spratt.

"For other foundations can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now, if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."—1 Cor. 3:11-15.

One striking difference between the unsaved and the saved man is the unsaved man rather likes to lower the standard of the Christian life, while the saved man seeks to keep it at least as high as the Bible puts it. This is perfectly natural—the unsaved man sees no need of living so circumspectly, but the saved man realizes that he has an ensample and that he must follow his leader. The unsaved man likes to lower the Bible standard of the Christian life, and for the reason that he does not wish to conform to its teaching. Let us study some facts in the Christian life.

1. The essential part in every building is the foundation.

A building without a foundation would be a monstrosity in architecture. It is just as true that a Christian life built on no foundation is practically impossible. Take away the foundation in either case, and you have nothing on which to build, either for time or eternity. In the Christian life, no man can lay the foundation on which the building must be erected—it is already laid, and the man who would build safely must build upon the one foundation which God has laid for him—Jesus Christ.

2. Every man must build on Christ as the sure Foundation, or He will build on a sandy foundation.

You can choose to suit yourself. You can build your Christian life on Christ, or you can build on a sandy foundation. Building on Christ means life everlasting; building on the sand means death. If you build on Christ you will erect the spiritual structure of gold, silver or precious stones; or, if you build on sand, you will build of wood, hay, stubble, and these mean loss to the builder, for they cannot hold up the structure when the storm comes, and under its pressure all will go down in a crash.

3. But keep in mind the work you do in building must be tested.

Your work must stand the test before it can be accepted. The one for whom you build must be assured as to the character of the work you have done, whether it is safe and sound, or shoddy and unreliable. The work must be of the highest character if you are to get a good reward. If it be of poor workmanship, then your reward will be of the same class as your work. It is said that a certain woman who, when she went to heaven, was greatly surprised because the mansion given her was a small and an ordinary building. There was hard by a very elegant mansion. She wished to know why she could not have that. She was told that this handsome mansion belonged to Mrs. Mary Jones. "Oh"! said she, "Mary Jones! why she was my servant down in the world and sure she is not to have a better mansion than I"! "But," said the angel, "we gave you the very best we could, for we put into its construction all the material you ever sent us that could be used for that purpose—all your life yielded—and we did the same for Mary Jones, but she put her life into her Lord's service and served faithfully, and of course she has a better house on that account. You gave very little of your time, talents and means to the cause of your Lord, and naturally enough you have smaller reward—a small mansion in which to spend eternity. You are rewarded according to your works. See Rev. 22:12. That is also the teaching of Paul when he says: "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire." Jack Spratt says he would rather be saved as by fire than not to be saved at all, but that he greatly desires to be saved by the blood of the Lamb and through faith in the crucified One. You may be saved as a believer, but condemned as a builder. What a life that will be to have it all saved—

Soul saved,
Life and character saved,
Example saved, influence saved,
Time saved, the whole of life saved.

Here are two members:

One is saved.

He is a regular attendant in most of our services.

He hears his minister preach in every service.

He goes to the prayer-meeting regularly.

He goes to the business meeting.

He goes to the Sunday School.

The other one of the two is a half-way Christian, and that means he is only a professing Christian. Jack Spratt says, as he sees it, that is no Christian at all.

He only occasionally goes to Church, and once in a while he goes to prayer-meeting, and less often to the business meeting, and still less often to Sunday School. He rarely visits the sick, and is hardly ever heard in public prayer.

Now, do you think there is any difference between these two church members? Would you just as soon be the last as the first? Do you think even if both should be saved that both would be entitled to the same rewards? Jack Spratt says he does not believe in that sort of religion getting a man a full reward of that which is good.

Such an one may be saved as a believer, and yet be lost as a builder. That means, so Jack Spratt thinks, that he had in his life nothing but leaves which left the Holy Spirit grieved over a wasted life. Would you like to go to heaven and appear before your Saviour and the angels with nothing but leaves, a life wasted in sin and not a trophy to lay at the Master's feet—not one! Jack Spratt says he would rather go that way than not at all, but at the same time he says he would be awfully ashamed to go to heaven and appear before the Saviour empty-handed—and nothing but leaves. Alas, for a half-way Christian! Will there be any room in heaven for him?

WHICH?

Has Our God Lost His Power, or Has the Church Lost Its Faith?

Nothing is plainer in the Scriptures than that the believer must contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. If the Church is to grow in spiritual life and bring men into the kingdom of God she must be strong in the faith.

When the Church was first established on the Day of Pentecost three thousand persons were added to the Church. The secret of this great ingathering was in the fact that the disciples had tarried at the feet of Jesus till they were all filled with power from above. When that was done, the Church was praising and glorifying God's name for a Saviour and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Under the Spirit's power, the demons came out of the man. In those days the preachers preached Christ crucified and that He rose again from the dead. Then He saved men and women from sin.

When I was a child, men preached and prayed with such mighty power that I, though a child, could then feel the influence, and do feel it till this day, and that has been forty years ago. I now expect to feel it as long as I live. Of course, in those youthful days I thought as a child, but now I understand that Jesus lives in the hearts of men and women, as the guest of the soul, making them happy in His presence.

We pray for power that can save the people from worldliness, the lust of the flesh and the eye and the pride of life. In all my life of fifty-two years I never visited a movie or a circus, or anything of the kind. And why should the movies stop the mouths of the preachers? Let the ministers seek and get the power that comes from above on the faith that was once delivered to the saints. Let us carry Jesus into our churches and then we shall have no more trouble in keeping our members out of questionable places. When Jesus is abiding within the heart of the believer, the believer will not be found in the movies—certainly not. I am not saying that the man or the woman who has only a formal sort of religion will not go to the movies and other places of doubtful propriety, but the man who is filled with the spirit of God will not even desire to go, and he will not, because he has something infinitely better than a movie, a circus, a theater or a card table. A Church filled with the Pentecostal spirit will bring men and women to Christ. He will save them and their children. Christ must reign in the human hearts if He is to save the people from their sins, for the human heart is the throne of Jesus. Without Jesus in our hearts we cannot live for Him, or do His will in bringing men into submission to His will.

Remember, you cannot whitewash Satan's work by carrying it into the Church. Let the Church do away with Satan's work and then allow Jesus to clean His temple—that will mean something.

Mrs. R. N. Murphy.

A GIFT.

It is impossible for me to make public mention of all the gifts I receive from my friends. I serve a people who are so thoughtful of their pastor that gifts are inevitable. The gifts of such men as Brother Sam Pickard and Brother Everett Neville to their pastor amount to more in value than all that some families pay to their church's every enterprise. But I received a "present" the other day that deserves special mention. It was a Morrocco-bound volume of "The System Bible Study," presented by Brother Albert M. McCauley.

Now, I want to commend Brother McCauley's example to others whose pastor has not been thus remembered. It is a fine thing to supply the need of your pastor's pantry, but it is a rare and highly appreciated thoughtfulness that considers the need of his study.

UNBALANCED WORK FOR THE KINGDOM.

We need to watch very closely our tendencies, or we may go far astray and so come short of the end in view. Well and wisely balanced work is the need of the Church. Even a ship at sea needs to be properly loaded, or its safety may be endangered. Today is a busy day with the Church. Perhaps it never was so occupied with work, and especially with money-raising, as it is today. Now the raising of money to finance the kingdom is a great and a good thing, if properly done. Indeed, for many years this one phase of Church work was terribly neglected, but now the load has been shifted and we are working the financial side to the neglect of more weighty matters, not that the finances of the Church are not very important, but that the spiritual side of the work of the Church is more important.

Human nature seems to be given to extremes. If we be going too fast in one direction, and for some reason a halt is called, we are just as likely as not to shift and go to an extreme in some other direction. Fifty years ago not much was said or done in the interest of the financial side of the work of the kingdom. The stress was on another side of the work, but since then the wind has shifted, and now the other side is neglected, but the financial side is the all-important matter. We have felt for several years that the tendency is not to even up the work and so keep the whole field well under cultivation. It has for some time been apparent to unbiased minds that the Church which can give the most in money is naturally looked upon as in the lead in the Lord's work, and most certainly such a Church is worthy of unstinted commendation, and yet after all that something remains to be done with great zeal on the part of the Church is very clear, for a Church without spiritual life and power is to all intents and purposes not a Church at all.

The raising of great sums of money by the Church is to be commended most highly, but if we raise big sums of money and yet have no revivals, we are but paving the way to have a big human and barren institution so far as spirituality is concerned. A Church is, or should be, the custodian of spiritual gifts sent from above. When it, therefore, ceases to be such a custodian, it ceases in essential elements to be a Church. What we really need to be doing is not raising less money for the spread of the Gospel and the building up of the kingdom, but we need to be seeking for far more spiritual power. This is vital to the very life of the Church, and the ministers and Churches need to recognize this as a fact and work to see that the financial side of the Church does not unbalance the spiritual elements. A ship at sea with all of its load on one side may keep along to its destination unless a storm arises. If the ship should get caught in a storm, loaded all to one side, it would have a poor chance to reach its haven of safety. It is just as true of the Church—if she is upheld by money rather than by the Holy Spirit and money, then you may expect to see failure come at almost any moment.

We have been led to this line of thought by a confession which The Presbyterian Standard has recently made as to this very matter in the Presbyterian Church in the Southern States. We have an idea that this confession would be true if it should come from any one of by far the larger portion of the various denominations, and so far as that is true there is the pity of the present situation. We are laying too much stress on the money side of our work as compared with the stress we are laying on the spiritual side. But to that confession we now ask your attention. It appeared in the Presbyterian Standard of March 14, 1923. The editor says:

PROGRESS NEEDED ALONG ANOTHER LINE.

"Ministers from across the sea who have been studying the methods of the Southern Church, all seem impressed by our great progress in raising money for our work. Compared with other churches we have done a great work, and we have reason to be proud of it.

"Since the progressive program was instituted, we have increased our gifts to the benevolent causes from four million to nearly twelve million dollars a year. The severest critic of the Church can certainly find no fault with this work.

"These visitors, however, have found one defect to which they point—a defect that is very serious, which if not remedied, will tell in the end upon every line of work. They call attention to the fact that we are laying our stress upon raising money, but do not seem to be doing much toward bringing souls to Christ.

"It seems that from an increase of 42 per cent on profession of faith we have come down to 14 per cent increase. If this decrease continues, we shall be forced to sing another song, which will not be one of triumph. We need to take care lest we develop in a one-sided way. We should push every side of the program, if we are to have a symmetrical Church."

In a few short years an increase from four millions for benevolences to about twenty millions! What an increase! But wait a minute. When they were raising four millions a year they had an increase in professions of faith, but when they got to raising about twelve millions a year in money for the work of the Church the professions of faith had fallen from forty-two per cent to fourteen per cent. Now that sets forth the point for which we are contending. Let us increase our money gifts all we can, but then see that the increase in professions of faith keeps up with the increase in money raised. That will somewhat balance the work and make the Church far more effective in its efforts to save the world from sin through our Lord Jesus Christ. The one defect in the work of the Presbyterian Church, we fear, is the one defect in many others, and among them our own. We are glad that The Standard has spoken out on this matter, and we sincerely wish that it may lead us all to open our eyes and see what we are doing—which way we are going in the first great work of the Church of Christ. We must not count the raising of large sums of money as the sum total of our work. Indeed, the winning of souls to Christ and building up the spiritual interests of the kingdom come first and should be the leading feature of our Church work. Let us get to work on the spiritual side of our work as well as the financial side. The one should at least keep pace with the other, for then great things will come to pass and the cause of Christ will certainly go forward, ultimately reaching the ends of the earth.

NOW IS THE TIME TO LEND A HELPING HAND.

That is encouraging news from Elon College. Of course, our readers will recall the fact that on January 18, 1923, the administration building of that institution was burned to the ground, leaving only a few pieces of the walls standing. This great loss laid upon the college authorities Herculean tasks, but the gratifying part of it all is that the tasks so far seem to be yielding to the touch of the men and women who have undertaken to rebuild and on a much larger scale than ever before.

The progress already made is, as it seems to us, assurance to all that the work is in good hands and that the building will be ready for the opening next September. Mr. Stout, the contractor, is already on the job with a force of men and the work of rebuilding is beginning. Alamance County, the county in which the institution is located, promises one hundred thousand dollars, and the cash and pledges so far from all sources reach to $232,276.52. That is fine and a good promise of what will be given by the people before the day of winding up the campaign comes.

Every one who has any interest in the institution seems to be very hopeful of a fine outcome ere the work is completed. The progress of Elon College, backed by not a large constituency, so far as numbers are concerned, has been phenomenal. The people are acquainted with the circumstances by which the beginning was surrounded. Little or no money and not many friends, the outlook was not promising, and but for the unyielding devotion and the untiring labors of Dr. W. S. Long, its first president, it would seem that it could not have been made a success. When Dr. Long retired, the presidency fell into the management of Dr. W. W. Staley, who gave to it much valuable time and labor. Then came Dr. E. L. Moffett, who put his best strength into noble and faithful efforts to build it up. When he retired, then came its present president, Dr. W. A. Harper, whose ability in the handling of the institution has commanded the admiration of our people generally. And now to his hands is committed the work of rebuilding, and so far he has shown unusual ability in directing the new enterprise. Let us all lend a helping hand and see that he has the encouragement and money that he must have to bring success to the undertaking. Success now means a new day for Elon.

THE FREEWILL BAPTIST AND OURSELVES.

For fifty years we have heard much said of Christian union, but we have not seen much come of it—not much in the way of real union—but we must admit that under this much-talked-of union, sentiment has grown largely. The thing to be regretted is that the practice of union has not grown with the talk and the sentiment.

Many have been the union efforts which have promised much, but came to little—little as to real union. In a number of instances the progress made has been most promising, till the parties on both sides seemed to be ready to say, "I will," and then both sides either stopped the proceedings or backed out, not showing any disposition to go any further.

Recently there was what has been called a gesture at union between our people of the Christian Church and the Freewill Baptist. It may be well to call it a mere gesture at union, as union may be on the way, and yet it will take some time for it to actually arrive. However, union on the way is better than disunion going downhill. Union is in the air, and it is as an aroma filling the room and preparing us for a sweeter fellowship, and may be some day for union in fact.

There are yet many peoples (denominations) which cannot unite because they are so unlike in their doctrinal views. There are others which are so much the same in their views that it would seem to be an easy matter for them to come together, viz: the Christians, the Freewill Baptists and the Methodist Protestants. As we see it, there is no good reason why these three bodies might not unite in a short while, if all parties could be properly approached. These three bodies are much alike in their doctrinal views and in government, and we know no reason why they might not come together as one body. It is true there are some minor differences between these peoples, but nothing that need be a barrier to union. We might just as well, and better, be one body than three. Together, we could do a great deal more for the cause of Christ. The union of these three bodies is well worth considering.

THE SECRET OF THE POWER OF THE CHURCH.

Perhaps not in many years has there been as much criticism of the Church as there is today. One reads and hears in many directions the expression that the Church is not making good. Perhaps the most insistent criticism of the Church comes from people who have never in their lives done anything to make the Church a power in the world. Indeed, most of these people have no proper conception of the distinctive work of the Church. The newspapers especially are busy telling the Church where it is failing and how it may make good. We think that it is not unjust in the beginning of a discussion like this to say to a great many of the critics of the Church, "You do not know what you are talking about." It is usually supposed that intelligent people do not discuss that about which they are in sublime ignorance, and yet men do discuss the Church who are entirely incompetent of making a sensible criticism because they have never taken the trouble to find out what Jesus Christ intended His Church to be. A great deal of the inefficiency of the Church today is the result of the attempt of her ministry to allow external forces to control their activities. The one thing upon which emphasis is being laid in these days is the duty of the Church to create a better social environment for the people. They seem to think that the salvation of a man is to produce in him a physical comfort. So we are lectured constantly upon feeding the poor, giving them better homes, providing them with a better companionship, instructing them in the laws of hygiene. All these are very familiar to those who are reading the output of the modern lectures of the Church and her failure. We are perfectly free to say that the greatest charitable organization in the world is the Church of Jesus Christ, although we have organized charity into a science. If the Church for one minute were to drop charitable work, not one of these scientific organizations could live. The Church has always shown an interest in the social life of the young, but she has constantly refused to commercialize her talents in this direction. The Church has always been the mother of education, and although the tendency now is to steal it away from the Church and secularize it, scarcely any university in this land exists which was not organized and financed by the Church of Christ. In fact, there is no more unjust criticism in the world today than the criticism of the Church that she has not concerned herself in regard to the physical comforts and intellectual growth of men.

But it was not to answer the cry for physical comforts nor for the mental development of men alone that the Church was formed. Man is a triune creation—a body, a mind, a soul, but the greatest of these is the soul. Man has a relationship to the physical world and to the physical fact, and these are apprehended through the physical senses and through intellectual training. But there is in every man born of woman a sense of something that is more than physical fact, and that is not alone to be apprehended through a mental process. The savage in the wilderness had the intuition of immortality burning in his heart. He built altars to God and worshiped Him in his ignorance, and the Church that is a success is the Church that teaches men the infinite glory of their spiritual natures, the necessity of the worship of God, and further even than this, the possibility of personal, spiritual contact with God on earth. It is not the duty of the Church to get up a final ritual, and to magnify the external appeal of the luxury and beauty of worship so much as it is to make the house, dedicated to God, a place where men are conscious of God and His presence, and from which they go out into the world subdued by the sense of a divine fellowship. We must insist that the soul-life of men is the result of the abiding spirit of God in the hearts of men. Any other religion than this is only a polite paganism. It follows, then, that the power of the Church is in its worship. The Master spoke of worshiping in spirit and in truth. John upon Patmos saw marvelous things. He came into the knowledge of spiritual facts because he was in the spirit on the Lord's day. Whatever may be said in opposition to it, it is a fact that there is a spirit that apprehends God and truth, and it only comes to him who lives in the spirit of worship, who hears God speak in his deepest consecrated soul, because he lives in Him to do His will. This ought not to seem to be a very strange thing. A thousand men will behold the sun as he sinks beneath the western hills and see nothing but the sunset, but the poet and the artist will behold a thousand mingling shades and tints of colors in the dying sun. His soul will be filled with rapture at the pure beauty of the sunset. It is the vision of the poet and the artist that interprets the beauty of the sunset. An old organ may lie for years, dusty and neglected and without a voice, but a Mendelssohn will come and touch his fingers to the keys, and all the harmony of the world will begin to speak at the wooing of his touch. It is no wonder that some men know nothing of God and write like pagans, for they have not the spirit of worship in them, and the Almighty God cannot speak to stone and make it understand the truth. The power of the Church, then, is the power which comes from a worship that is inspired by the ever-present and enthralling spirit of God. There are other things that might be said, but this is the secret of it. The Church can never fail of power as long as the holy spirit of God abides in her precincts and within the hearts of her worshipers. The Church is more than an enterprise. It is the only kingdom over which God presides, and whose citizenship are men who have heard the Holy Spirit speak.

We must not be too much impressed by these modern critics of the Church, but we must pray to the Holy Father to help us teach to the world that holiness of life is the very first requisite to the vision that can understand God and His will. Only through this divine endowment can men understand the Church and recognize her power in the world.—Methodist Protestant.

CANNOT TRUTH RUN DOWN ERROR?

Cannot truth run down error? In the greater plans of God it must, and possibly it may in every way and in every place, but there are some instances in which it seems that human agencies are not sufficient to accomplish so great an undertaking. Take the matter of the so-called letter from Jesus Christ, which was found eighteen miles from Iconium forty-five years after the crucifixion of our Saviour. It has been denounced as a forgery so many times, and yet there are some good-hearted people who cling to it and seem unwilling to give it up, notwithstanding the many exposures which have come to it. Now, the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN has received a copy of said letter, sent by a brother who says he would like very much to see it in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It gives us real pleasure to accommodate our readers, but we cannot become a party to any such forgery. Some person who wished to do something unusual forged the letter and gave it out, since which day the world has not been lacking in people who accept this story as truth and claim to believe it and wish to see it given to the world. Before we could publish it we should feel constrained to have the brother who asks us to publish it to make a personal journey to Iconium, and there get the proof that the story of the finding of this letter under a stone near Iconium is true, being vouched for, not by the man who claims to have found it, but by the highest and most reliable government authorities in that country. Then come back to us, and if the evidence seems beyond the possibility of a doubt, we will then consider the wisdom of publishing it, but till we can thus be assured, please do not ask for its publication, as we do not believe the letter is genuine. It is too bad that so many excellent people can believe such pleas, and yet cannot believe the sure promises of the Bible. Bro. C., be careful how you give encouragement to such a forgery as this letter undoubtedly is. It does not become God's people to have part in getting such a letter circulated among the masses, for many have had no chance to know the whole thing is spurious, and therefore they swallow it as a sweet morsel. Do, please, have nothing to do with such a fraud.

DID CIVILIZATION EVOLVE FROM BARBARISM?

That foremost archeologist, Professor A. H. Sayce, of Oxford University, says it does not. Let us note what he has to say as quoted in a recent number of a contemporary:

"Neither in Egypt nor in Babylonia has any beginning of civilization been found. As far back as archeology can carry us, man is already civilized, building cities and temples, carving hard stones into artistic form, and even employing a system of pictorial writing. And of Egypt it may be said that the older the culture the more perfect it is found to be. The fact is a very remarkable one in view of modern theories of development and of the evolution of civilization out of barbarism. Whatever may be the reason, such theories are not borne out by the discoveries of archeology. Instead of the progress we should expect, we find retrogression and decay; where we look for the rude beginnings of art, we find advanced society and artistic perfection. Is it possible that the biblical view is right after all, and that civilized man has been civilized from the outset? If so, we can no longer go to the savage to learn how our first ancestors lived and thought, for the savage will represent either degeneracy from a higher type or else a different race. In any case, the culture and civilization of Egypt and Babylonia appear to spring into existence fully developed, as Greek mythology averred that Athene had sprung from the head of Zeus. Archeology, at all events, has failed to discover the elements out of which, according to the doctrine of evolution, they ought to have grown."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The more one thinks about system, the more obvious its value appears. The more chaotic or spasmodic any enterprise is, the less permanent its results. Speculation is not to be compared with systematic business. Drives for money are not to be compared with a financial system. "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." It is a sad commentary on Christianity that it has produced the real activities of the world and then allows the world to make better use of its wisdom than the Church itself. The world is using every principle of Christian teaching, in this generation, while the Church lags in the application of real business. There are streams that are rushing torrents after torrential rains; and then run dry when rain ceases for a time. Then, there are streams that seldom roar, but send forth a steady current to water meadows, farms, turn mills, and supply thirsty beasts with a drink. There are people who flare up with big subscriptions, and then diminish in enthusiasm on pay day. Excitement is not a good standard for donations, though sometimes good contributions are made under the enthusiasm of a great meeting or a great plea; but for permanent support, the systematic contributor is the more reliable. Even in the conduct of local Church expenses it is the regular contributors that furnish the means to meet the monthly demands.

It is surprising to listen to people, who give occasionally to charity. They seem to think they are liberal; but such contributions are inspired by a Christian atmosphere and lack crystalization. Granite is composed of quartz, feldspar and mica; but piles of these in different quantities and places can never make granite. These elements must come together under a fixed law or system. All the elements of Christianity enter into a full-fledged Christian. His donations, like his life, are regular, systematic, continuous. It is the function of the Church to plan and teach a system that will enlist the approbation and co-operation of all faithful members. Big gifts should be voluntary, and not in the spirit of rivalry. A challenge may sometimes be worthy, but a system is far better.

Subscriptions are often made under enthusiastic appeals, by telling what others have done, and payments are made reluctantly, under protest, or not at all. All this weakens the sense of financial and moral obligation, and leaves the subscriber indifferent, sour, or resentful. Any method that fails in Christian satisfaction and loyalty is doubtful in its application. The five-year subscription plan for Men and Millions has produced that dissatisfied condition in some churches, and we must devise some plan that will prevent its recurrence. In the meantime we must exercise Christian patience in the collection of Men and Million pledges, try to keep subscribers loyal to their pledges till they are fully and finally paid, and plan so as to relieve them of the apprehension of another drive when the five-year period expires. The constituency must be restored, somehow, to a normal and hopeful feeling of loyalty and liberality to the cause of Christ. This desire is righteous, needful and possible. All obstacles to this end must be removed, criticisms of delinquents must be avoided and condemned, whole-souled faith in members and their pledges must be cultivated, and generous judgment extended to all. As a rule, we are too censorious toward others. We need to expect the best of men. A good collector never expresses doubt of collections. If God were to lose faith in us it would kill the Church. His faith in us seems to be greater than our faith in Him. We trust Him because He trusts us. We love Him because He first loved us. His faith in us should inspire out faith in one another. Faith works upward, inward, and outward—upward in God; inward in self; outward in others. This is the spiritual triangle by which all spiritual problems are solved, as the triangle is the basis of all mathematical calculations. Faith is the working power in religion. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." The Church needs an increase of faith as a working dynamic, as the eleventh chapter of Hebrews shows.

ELON LETTER.

With appropriate exercises, the first shovel of dirt was removed for the foundation of the new administration building given by the people of Alamance on March 21 at 2 P. M. Dr. J. W. Wellons offered prayer, and then with a new shovel removed the dirt. Prof. A. L. Hook was present with his camera and photographed those who were present, and this picture will be preserved. As I write, a large force of laborers are removing dirt at a rapid rate, and soon the concrete footings will be poured. Before another week is past, with open weather, the noise of the bricklayer will be abroad on the campus. By September we are expecting to be in our new buildings. The building committee is likely to proceed with the erection of the administration building, auditorium and science hall, and, if possible, get them ready for September. The library will be erected later.

Present at the removing of the first shovel of dirt was the daughter of the first student who ever made arrangements to enter Elon. I am referring to Mr. H. C. Simpson, of Greensboro, who came over and arranged with Dr. Long to go to school and then helped build the administration building to pay his expenses.

Dr. Long is still devoted to the college he fathered. He attended the trustee meeting on January 24 and was optimism itself throughout the day. So also were Drs. Staley, Watson and Wellons, of the original trustees. Since returning to his home at Chapel Hill, Dr. Long, as has been stated in The Sun, has been suffering from illness and a severe burn. He is now better, and will soon be entirely well again. The Christian Church will earnestly pray that this splendid leader and seer may be spared us many, many years.

A characteristic message has come from his sick-room. Dr. Atkinson brought it to me. Our founder and first president is agonized in spirit about the rebuilding program. He has prayed constantly that God would open up the hearts of our people to respond liberally. He sent me word that he is ready to borrow a thousand dollars on his home and give it. No sooner had Dr. Atkinson told me this than I determined to write him a letter of dissuasion. The letter has gone. We ought not to let this grand old patriarch of our Church thus burden himself in his sunset period of life. I do not believe the Christian Church would approve our allowing Dr. Long to make such a sacrifice, and I so wrote him. But who can fail to admire the spirit of the man who loves the cause of his manhood's devotion with such consecration of purpose and dedication of means that he, in his eighty-fourth year, will propose to do what Dr. Long has proposed? So long as the Christian Church has such men as Dr. Long in it to befriend the cause of Christian education, and sacrifice for it, Elon is safe.

We honor you, beloved leader, for your splendid spirit of sacrifice and devotion, but, like David, when the water from the well was brought him, we cannot accept your gift. Your fine loyalty will, however, win us friends from other places, many of them, and your beloved Elon will go forward toward the realization of the ideals you set for her in the days preceding her birth. We shall all try to do our full duty, inspired by your example. W. A. Harper.

AND THE SUN WAS DARKENED.

We will soon be studying the Sunday School lesson, the subject of which is, "Jesus Crucified." In it you will notice the words, "And it was about the sixth hour, and there was darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour."—Luke 23:44. One of my lesson helps has, "Darkness came over the whole land," and says, Prof. Moffatt adds, "Owing to an eclipse of the sun." Where did Prof. Moffatt get that idea, and what does he mean?

I do not find the thought or the utterance in the original Greek. Does he mean to say that the darkness was from a natural cause just as we have an eclipse of the sun by the moon's shadow coming between the sun and the earth? Or does he mean that the sun was obscured by supernatural power? Was that "darkness" of the sun a natural eclipse, or was it a supernatural darkness?

If he means a natural eclipse, then how could that be? I have been taught that the time of the Jewish Passover, the time when Christ was crucified, was the time of full moon; and hence, if it was full moon, the "darkness" when Christ hung on the cross could not have been a natural eclipse of the sun, because the moon was full.

An eclipse is the obscuration of light of a heavenly body by the intervention of another body. If this "darkness" could not have been caused by the obscuration of the sun by the moon's shadow, what other heavenly body did or could have eclipsed the sun on that fateful day when Christ hung on the cross? Did any heavenly body eclipse the sun that day? Was it not a supernatural darkness rather than simply an eclipse of the sun.

As I understand it, an eclipse of the sun is caused by the moon's shadow passing between the sun and the observer, or, what comes to the same thing, by the passage of the moon's shadow over the observer.

A total eclipse of the sun observed at a station near the equator, under the most favorable conditions, it is said, may continue total for about seven minutes and fifty-eight seconds, while in latitude 40 degrees, the duration can barely equal six minutes and fifteen seconds.

It is evident that no ordinary eclipse of the sun could have occurred at this time, for the moon was full, and the darkness lasted about three hours, which is several times the length of an ordinary eclipse of the sun. The duration of this "darkness," if my calculations are correct, was about twenty-three times the length of an ordinary eclipse of the sun under the most favorable conditions and at a point where total eclipses are longest.

There were strange and mysterious things which took place on the day that Jesus was crucified—the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst, and the earth did quake, and the rocks were rent, and the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose.

In all of these things do we not see the hand of the eternal God wonderfully and supernaturally displayed?

In my thought, I limit not God, who created the heavens and the earth, in His workings to the laws of nature. To me, He is the great free Spirit, all wise, all powerful, perfectly good and holy, and a loving Heavenly Father, who, as the great free Spirit that He is, can do all things commensurate with His will.

P. H. Fleming.

DRIFTING.

Are we drifting too far from the shore? There is the danger in this age of forms and fashions. It is so easy to drift from the ideals of the Christian life, as given to us in the Scriptures. We are inclined to give more thought and time to material things, forgetting the more necessary, the spiritual factors, in life.

We have tried to shade things between good and evil into a sort of middle ground, but it cannot be dont in fact. There is no such possibility. We must make our choice of one or the other; we must choose to live for God or we shall live for the world—Jesus or Barabbas. There is no middle ground in the Christian life. He that is not for Me is against Me, said Jesus. He also said that he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad. So we may be sure that if we are not gathering with Him and for Him we are scattering abroad, so giving our life and service to the wicked one. We all agree that it is of great importance that the physical body be kept in good condition, but to place the physical above the spiritual is not reasonable. We desire and need a vigorous body, but the body minus the spiritual life is like a closed house, with neither light nor warmth.

Great souls are those whose lives are filled with the love of God. It matters not whether that life exists in a vigorous or a frail body. It may be that we have not a strong, vigorous body, but we can, through faith in Christ Jesus, be strong spiritually. Of all things which we need most in this life is to have Jesus Christ as our personal Saviour and the guidance of the Holy Spirit in everything we do.

Well did the poet admonish us to—

"Take time to be holy."

And he might have added, with much force, to take time to study God's word, for it is in such a study that we learn what we really need. Are we, as Church members, making our every-day life a living example, worthy of following? Or are we drifting so far from God that they are afraid to follow us? If the Church as a whole were devoted to God and working for the saving of the people through Christ, then the light of the Church would shine so bright that others would be constrained to follow and so glorify our Father in heaven. Let us not drift with the tide of worldliness by which we may be surrounded, or we may fail to reach home in safety.

The Word tells us that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, yet it is sad to see how seldom you may meet one who desires to talk of God and the life He gives, and the love with which He invests such a life. Now, if we talk of the things which we love most, do we talk in trying to teach others the way of the Cross? I think God wishes us to take His word as our waybill to heaven. He wishes us to study it and then to talk it in our homes, in our community, whether among friends or foes. If we were careful to do this, we would shine out for Christ. We would grow strong spiritually. Now, may I appeal to you as an humble follower of Jesus to shine out for Christ, not by putting on, but by putting in, by putting in Christ and His truth to the enrichment of our lives, and at the same time resolve not to drift from Him and from our allegiance to Him. As Christians, let us keep up the family altar in our homes. Let us never neglect the daily reading of God's blessed word. The best gold of the kingdom lies in the Bible. Let us get it out and use it in the spread of the truth. Just remember that every coin of this gold bears the image of a bleeding heart and a face of wondrous love. But do not forget that it will do us no good unless we open its pages and study its messages. The greatest wealth for the human heart and life is locked up in unread Bibles. What a shame this is for the man or the woman who calls himself or herself a Christian and yet allows the dust to accumulate on all this wealth and for the reason that it is not used.

Let us read the Bible, let us love it, and let us live it, and so become one of God's happy millionaires.

"NATURE'S SPRING PLOWING."

"Every spring, nature, the most industrious and persistent of farmers, gets the soil ready for the spring planting." All winter long she is working through the frost to loosen up the earth so that the yield may be great.

The floods come down the valleys, carrying with them the richness of the highlands, thereby enriching the lowlands.

Nature's work is indispensible, and yet the work of man may, and does, supplement nature and increase her yield in proportion to the expenditure of time and energy.

But why talk about spring when we seem to be having typical winter weather, and what bearing does it have upon our lives?

When I refer to spring, I would not have you think of any particular season of the year, but rather to those days, months, or periods of time when we are able to see God in nature, when everything is taking on new life and presenting an attitude of upward striving toward God.

The only thing that is necessary to put new life into us is the omnipotent power. When we walk and talk with Him, then it is that "December's as pleasant as May." When we acknowledge Him in all of our ways, then does He acknowledge and guide us.

Winter might be thought of as the obstacles and disappointments—the rain and gloom of life. I believe the same process is going on in our lives during days of disappointment as was taking place during the winter months in the fields, preparing for spring. Our days of disappointment are preparatory to higher, nobler and more appreciative life. We might compare the obstacles in our lives to the winter.

Springtime will be better appreciated and sweeter because of the winter experiences.

I believe we may have springtime in our hearts the year around, provided we take Christ into our lives; provided we seek the kingdom of God and put Him first into our lives and every-day experiences; provided we see our duties in terms of God's will for us. God has a plan for each of us, and we must seek His will concerning these lives.

The religion of the Greeks was very much like ours in some particulars, and yet very different. They consulted many gods for their welfare, whereas we only consult one—that one being all-powerful.

If they wished to win in battle they consulted the war god. They consulted the god of agriculture for abundant crops. They had a god to represent every material walk in life. Our God embraces all of these.

He is able and willing to strengthen us over different obstacles of life so that our hearts may be purer and nobler and our Christian experiences sweeter as the years go by.

I believe we may have springtime in our hearts in winter as well as summer, but to me the beginning of real spring weather is when all nature seems to be in tune, when new life is springing up on every hand, when every cloud feels a stir of might, and even the odor of the air seems to tell us that "God is present every where."

We may say with Lowell—

"Everything is upward striving. 'Tis as easy to be good now as for the grass to be green, and the skies to be blue; because my heart is pure."

May the spring season bring us new visions of Him and our work, and may we be able to retain such experiences throughout the whole year.

THERE CHRIST IS BORN AGAIN.

Wherever one repenting soul
Prays, in its agonies of pain,
By God's sweet grace to be made whole,
There Christ is born again.

Wherever (bond of ancient thrall)
A strong soul bursts its shackling chain,
And upward strains to meet the Call,
There Christ is born again.

Wherever vision of the Light
Disturbs the sleeping souls of men,
Night trails away its shadowy flight,
And Christ is born again.

Wherever a soul in travail turns
And climbs the barriers that constrain,
With steady cheer Hope's sweet lamp burns,
And Christ is born again.

Where one foul thing is purged away,
And life delivered of one strain,
Love rims with gold the coming day,
And Christ is born again.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. A NEW EVANGELIST

It is a pleasure for the undersigned to speak a word by way of introducing to the pastors and the churches of the country Mr. N. D. Nielsen, of Elyria, Ohio, who for many years has figured prominently as one of our exceptionally successful business men, but who is now under the leading of God, to devote his time exclusively to evangelistic work.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THESE BUSY DAYS.

The writer wonders if CHRISTIAN SUN readers really know the character and extent of the many activities of the Church now going on in the Southern Christian Convention. His work as mission secretary has called him into many parts the last few weeks and he has reason to know that the Church is neither dead nor sleeping.

In the far South he found Rev. H. M. Gray at Lanett, Ala., already in a campaign to raise $9,000.00 by June 1st, so as to build for cash a much-needed Church in that city. Bro. Gray is a man of vision and of action, and his people are with him. We fully expect to see a beautiful new Christian Church built, completed and dedicated at Larrett during this good year 1923. Rev H. W. Elder is beginning his campaign for a $15,000.00 Church at Richland, Ga., and those who know Bro. Elder's faith and energy have no doubt as to the outcome of his desires and dreams.

In North Alabama our new mission field of the Alabama Conference, Pastor J. D. Dollar, is pushing toward completion a new house of worship at Arab, Ala., and hopes to begin another building in that field soon.

And then the entire brotherhood in the far South is aroused to wonderful liberality and activity for the completion of the initial building of Bethlehem Christian College at Wadley, Ala., so as to be able to open that institution for students September 1, 1923. Rev. Geo. Hunt is throwing himself with all the energy, hope, courage and conviction of his soul into the great task of raising funds for the great undertaking so that the building may be pushed to completion. The spirit of co-operation and determination is beautiful, and the work is being done as unto the Lord.

Coming to North Carolina, our Raleigh faithfuls are launching out into the deep indeed. Plans for their new Church building have been adopted, the old building is being torn away, and the campaign for funds with which to erect the new and modern house is already on. Their new pastor, Bro. W. D. Parry, has taken hold of the work in great earnest, and he and his people are moving in great harmony toward their goal of a $75,000.00 Church.

Our Durham Church is nearly complete and will seem when finished much like a new home "out and out" and will be ample and attractive.

Our people in Carroll County, Va., are pulling for another house of worship, and under the leadership of Pastor Bradshaw it seems they will soon have a house going up. The land has been donated, the plans are being drawn and the work is shortly to begin.

At Norfolk, Va., Dr. L. E. Smith and his people are building a real temple of worship. This is to be one of the handsomest and most adequate Church plants in the two States. It is of Indiana limestone and it required over twenty-five freight cars to bring the stone from the quarry to Norfolk. The inside of the walls is of brick, and it required over a million bricks to go into these walls. There are tons of steel and miles of piping for wiring and heating in the building, and when completed the main auditorium, which is only a fraction of the building, will seat 1,700 people. It is an enormous and imposing structure and promises to be ready for occupancy by September 1.

Our Richmond brethren are racing with Smith and Norfolk in their endeavor to get into their new and imposing house of worship. Dr. Walters and his people are happy and busy as their splendid edifice grows under the hands of skilled workmen.

And then President Harper is turning all eyes toward Elon. Alamance County has raised $100,000 in cash and pledges for a new administration building. Others have given or pledged $60,000 on buildings, and at Suffolk last Wednesday the emergency fund committee voted for the president to raise $150,000 more to complete a $300,000 building fund. Already the work of building has begun and workmen are gathering for the great task.

These are some of the activities coming under the direct notice of the mission secretary the past few weeks. There are others he has not seen, but the above will suffice to show that there is activity in many quarters of our Zion, and that the Christian Church is not asleep, but is up and trying to do things worth while in kingdom service.

ALBERT FRANK SMITH.

Albert Frank Smith was born February 21, 1856, in Person County, N. C., and died February 28, 1923, in Rex Hospital, Raleigh, N. C., whither he had been carried for a surgical operation from his home at Fuquay Springs, N. C., some three weeks previously. He was born into a family of twelve, of whom five brothers and three sisters survive, namely: T. J., J. H., R. Y., S. M., and C. L. Smith, and Mesdames B. Brown, B. H. Peed, and R. L. Daniel. He was married three times. From the first marriage there survives one daughter, Mrs. S. S. Puckett, and from his second marriage a daughter, Mrs. W. W. Howard. Fifteen years ago he was married to Miss Ella Johnson, of Wake County, who survives him.

Soon after moving to Wake County, Brother Smith united with Wake Chapel Christian Church, and with his membership carried a heart of loving devotion to his God and an unceasing passion for the welfare, success and progress of his Church and Sunday School. He served for several years as a most efficient and faithful Sunday School superintendent and a worthy and beloved deacon of his Church. No man of the community was held in higher esteem and more universal admiration for his Christian walk and work than was Brother Smith. He assured the writer while in the hospital during his fatal illness, and a few days before he departed, that he was absolutely and wholly reconciled to God, was not afraid to depart, and that if it was God's will he himself was most ready and willing. Only a day before his going away he requested the song which was a great favorite—"If Ever I Loved Thee, My Jesus, 'Tis Now"—and this in his weakness of body, but in perfect composure and strength of mind, he himself endeavored to sing. One seldom witnesses such triumphant faith and victory over disease, pain and death as one witnessed in the sick room of this goodly and godly man. As his pastor and brother-in-law said on the day of the funeral, "Everybody loved Brother Smith."

An immense throng of neighbors and acquaintances met at Wake Chapel at the funeral hour—3 P. M., Friday, March 2d—to pay last and loving tribute to this faithful soldier of the cross and devout man of God. The floral designs were most abundant and appropriate, and the Masonic fraternity, of which the deceased was a member, interred the body according to their ancient and solemn rites and customs. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. White, of the First Presbyterian Church of Raleigh, several others, ministers and laymen, voluntarily offering their words of testimony to the love and life of their departed neighbor and friend.

The workers die, but the work goes on, and the community of which he was a great part will pay perpetual tribute to the memory of this fallen prince in the house of Israel by carrying forward to greater success and achievement the work of the Church and Sunday School to which his own loyal life was so thoroughly dedicated and consecrated.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE'S NEW DEPARTMENT.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago announces that Rev. Solomon Birnbaum, director of the Emmanuel Neighborhood House, Baltimore, Md., has accepted a call to its chair of Jewish missions.

In this connection, Dean James M. Gray states that the institute had long desired to add a course in Jewish missions to its educational department, and about a year ago had received the acceptance of the Jewish Christian scholar, Rev. Joel Levy, to head up the work, but unhappily the latter was taken ill soon afterward and passed away in June, 1922. Mr. Birnbaum, he says, was unanimously recommended for the new chair by the Educational Committee of the Hebrew Christian Alliance of America, and was commended in the highest terms as a student, a worker among the Jews and a Christian man, by Pastor Dolman, head of the Church of England Mission to the Jews in Wansbeck, near Hamburg, Germany, under whose ministry he was converted to Jesus Christ.

Testimony to the same effect was received also from the well-known Prebendary Webb-Peploe, of London, and from the secretary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity Amongst the Jews, under which he labored in Leeds and London.

Mr. Birnbaum is under middle age. He was born in Austria and received his early education there and in Constantinople, where, as a student, he made a beginning as a Christian, though he dates his real conversion to his later contact with Pastor Dolman. He took his B. D. from the University of London in 1914, and studied theology at St. John's Hall, Highbury, the Theological Seminary of the Church of England, from which also commendatory letters were received. In 1916 he received his B. D. honors in Semitic languages and comparative religions.

Dean Gray mentions the growing feeling among Christian Jews and also Gentile Christians engaged in Jewish evangelization, that the time is ripe for a forward movement in this so greatly needed and much-neglected work; adding that a hindrance to greater progress in this direction has been a lack of proper training on the part of missionaries to the Jews, both Jewish and Gentile. Comparatively few have been fully equal to the task, which calls for a knowledge of Hebrew, of Jewish history, Rabinnic literature and the Yiddish dialect, not to mention Messianic prophecy with its Jewish interpretation and the refutation of it from the Christian standpoint.

Mr. Birnbaum will enter upon his work in the institute at the beginning of the summer term, about May 1. Earnest prayer is desired of all readers interested in the salvation of the Jews, that God's blessing may rest upon the work then to be inaugurated.

FAMILY ALTAR

MONDAY.

"What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee." —Ps. 56:3.

We shall never forget a remark Mr. George Muller once made in answer to a gentleman who asked him the best way to have strong faith. "The only way," replied the patriarch of faith, "to learn strong faith is to endure great trials. I have learned my faith by standing firm amid severe testings." This is very true. The time to trust is when all else fails. Dear one, if you scarcely realize the value of your present opportunity, if you are passing through great afflictions, you are in the very soul of the strongest faith, and if you will only let go, He will teach you in these hours the mightiest hold upon His throne which you can ever know. "Be not afraid, only believe," and if you are afraid, just look up and say, "What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee," and you will yet thank God for the school of sorrow which was to you the school of faith.

O brother, give heed to the warning,
And obey His voice today.
The Spirit to thee is calling,
Oh, do not grieve Him away.

TUESDAY.

"Hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end."—Heb. 3:6.

The attitude of faith is simple truth. It is Elijah saying to Ahab, "There is a sound of abundance of rain." But then there comes usually a deeper experience in which the prayer is inwrought; it is Elijah on the mount, with his face between his knees, travailing, as it were, in birth for the promised blessing. He has believed for it—and now he must take. The first is Joash shooting the arrow out of the windows, but the second is Joash smiting on the ground and following up his faith by perseverance and victorious testing.

It is in this latter place that many of us come short. We ask much from God, and when God proceeds to give it to us we are not found equal to His expectation. We are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end and trust Him through it all.

Fainting soldier of the Lord,
Hear the sweet inspiring word,
"I have conquered all thy foes,
I have suffered all thy woes;
Struggling soldier, trust in Me,
I have overcome for thee."

WEDNESDAY.

"He will keep the feet of His saints."—1 Sam. 2:9.

Perils as well as privileges attend the higher Christian life. The nearer we come to God, the thicker the hosts of darkness in heavenly places. The safe place lies in obedience to God's word, singleness of heart, and holy vigilance.

When Christians speak of standing in a place where they do not need to watch, they are in great danger. Let us walk in sweet and holy confidence, and yet with holy, humble watchfulness, and "He will keep the feet of His saints." And "now unto Him who is able to keep us from stumbling, and present us faultless before the presence of His Glory, to the only wise God, our Saviour, be glory, and majesty, dominion and power, both now and forever. Amen."

What to do we often wonder,
As we seek some watchword true,
Lo, the answer God has given—
What would Jesus do?

When the shafts of fierce temptation,
With their fiery darts pursue,
This will be your heavenly armor—
What would Jesus do ?

THURSDAY.

"My expectation is from Him."—Ps. 62:5.

When we believe for a blessing, we must take the attitude of faith, and begin to act and pray as if we had our blessing. We must treat God as if He had given us our request. We must lean our weight over against Him for the thing that we have claimed, and just take it for granted that He gives it, and is going to continue to give it. This is the attitude of trust. When the wife is married, she at once falls into a new attitude, and acts in accordance with the fact, and so when we take Christ as Saviour, as Sanctifier, as Healer, or as a Deliverer, He expects us to fall into the attitude of recognizing Him in the capacity that we have claimed, and expect Him to be to us all that we have trusted Him for.

You may bring Him ev'ry care and burden,
You may tell Him ev'ry need in pray'r,
You may trust Him for the darkest moment,
He is caring, wherefore need you care?

Faith can never reach its consummation
'Til the victor's thankful song we raise;
In the glorious city of salvation,
God has told us all the gates are praise.

FRIDAY.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord."—Ps. 37:5.

Seldom have we heard a better definition of faith than was given once in one of our meetings by a dear old colored woman, as she answered the question of a young man how to take the Lord for needed help.

In her characteristic way, pointing her finger toward him, she said with great emphasis: "You've just got to believe that He's done it, and it's done." The great danger with most of us is, that after we ask Him to do it, we do not believe that it's done, but we keep on helping Him, and getting others to help Him; superintending God and waiting to see how He is going to do it.

Faith adds its amen to God's yea, and then takes its hands off, and leaves God to finish His work. Its language is, "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in Him, and He worketh."

Lord, I give up the struggle,
To Thee commit my way;
I trust Thy word forever,
And settle it all today.

SATURDAY.

"Pray without ceasing."—1 Thes. 5:17.

An important help in the life of prayer is the habit of bringing everything to God, moment by moment, as it comes to us in life. This may be established as a habit on the principle on which all habits are formed, of repeated and constant attention, moment by moment, until that which is at first an act of will becomes spontaneous and second nature.

If we will watch our lives we shall find that God meets the things that we commit to Him in prayer with special blessing, and often allows the best things that we have not committed to Him to be ineffectual, simply to remind us of our dependence upon Him for everything. It is very gracious and mindful of Him thus gently to compel us to remember Him and to hold us so close to Him that we cannot get away even the length of a single minute from His all-sustaining arm "In everything * * * let our request be made known unto God."

Let us bring our least petitions,
Like the incense beaten small,
All our cares, complaints, conditions,
Jesus loves to bear them all.

SUNDAY.

"Lo, I am with you always."—Matt. 28:20.

This living Christ is not the person that was, but the person that still is, your living Lord. At Preston Pans, near Edinburgh, I looked on the field where in the olden days armies were engaged in contest. In the crisis of the battle, the chieftain fell wounded. His men were about to shrink away from the field when they saw their leader's form go down; their strong hands held the claymore with trembling grip, and they faltered for a moment. Then the old chieftain rallied strength enough to rise on his elbow and cry: "I am not dead, my children, I am only watching you—to see my clansmen do their duty." And so from the other side of Calvary He is speaking; we cannot see Him, but He says: "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world"; and He puts it, I "am"—an uninterrupted and continuous presence. Not "I will be," but the unbroken presence still is with us forevermore.

Soon the conflict shall be done,
Soon the battle shall be won;
Soon shall wave the victor's palm,
Soon shall sing the eternal Psalm;
Then our joyful song shall be,
I have overcome through Thee.

TO THE PASTORS AND CHURCHES.

Try as hard as I may, I cannot get away from the impression that God is calling me to the evangelistic work. I have been so impressed since I was first called to the ministry, and I cannot get away from it.

I am truly convinced that there are some very good pastors that are not good evangelists, and many evangelists who would not make successful pastors. The Scriptures say some pastors, some evangelists. I am truly convinced that many of our best pastors at times need some one to help them in bringing about a revival. However, many of our best evangelists have to have (necessarily), because of their large expense in the way of organization, so much money that the country and smaller churches cannot employ Them. This being the case, I am still more impressed that the Lord would have me to offer my services to help any pastor, or church, that should desire my service.

I am willing to help any pastor or church, and trust it to the people to give as God directs them. I am going on the field with pastor and people, calling the people to prayer, consecration and personal work, bringing the simple message of the Cross, for I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, as it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

I will have to conduct two or more revivals on my mission field this year, but as I have not made dates for them yet, will make dates with any church or pastor for any time this year. It is quite probable that I will give full time to this work in the late summer and fall, so I would be glad to arrange dates with any church or pastor at once, that I may know how to make my future arrangements.

May God's richest blessings rest upon each pastor that is trying to lead his people to God by holding up the Christ to them, for He is the hope of the world today.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—Who was Aaron, the man of whom we read so much in the Bible?—J. G. S.

Answer.—Aaron was the brother of Moses and the son of Amram and Jochebed, who were of the tribe of Levi. He was born about 1,600 years before Christ. Aaron married Elisheba, who was a daughter of Amminadab. Aaron had four sons. They were Nadab, Abihu, Eleazer and Ithamar. He had an older sister, Mirriam. He was also the first high priest of the Israelites. He was also the spokesman for Moses at the court of Pharaoh, and, contrary to the opinion of many, Aaron was some three years older than was Moses, the great Israelitish law-giver. Aaron did much to help Moses in his great work of delivering Israel from the bondage in Egypt. It was Aaron and Hur who held up the hands of Moses in time of battle with Amelek. Aaron and his descendants were set apart for the priesthood. Later he was succeeded by his son, Eleazer. Aaron died at the age of 123 years on Mount Hor, which is now called Mount Aaron.

Question.—What was the meaning of Ab, as used in biblical literature?—B.

Answer.—There may be several meanings to this little word, but as used in the Bible it means father, and was the name of the fifth month in the ancient Jewish calendar, or more correctly speaking, the Hebrew calendar.

Question.—What was Abaddon, as mentioned in Rev. 9:11?—C. C. S.

Answer.—Abaddon is the name given in the New Testmanent to the bottomless pit. It is a Hebrew word and by some is supposed to mean the angel of the bottomless pit, or the world of darkness, the home of the lost soul.

Question.—Who was Abagtha, as named in Esther 1:10?—Janey.

Answer.—Abagtha was a chamberlain of Ahasuerus, the King of Persia.

Question.—Please tell me what Abana was and where we may find its place, as mentioned in the Bible?

Answer.—Abana was the chief river of Damascus. It is now called Barada. It was used in ancient times for watering purposes, to orrigate the many gardens along the banks of that river.

Question.—What was Bethabara?—D. J.

Answer.—It was a place in the days of Gideon unto which he told his men to take the waters unto Bethabara on the Jordan, and they immediately did as he told them. At the time they were fighting the Midanites. It was doubtless due to their prompt obedience that Gideon and his army took two princes, Oreb and Zeez. Then there was a place called Bethabara, in the New Testament. It has been identified as the place where John the Baptist baptized the people in the Jordan River. It is mentioned in John 1:28 as the place where John was baptizing.

Question.—Is there anything definite known of Bethany?—John T.

Answer.—Yes, there are a great many things known of Bethany. The name means the house of dates. It was a village on the Mount of Olives, near Jerusalem, and it was chiefly known as the residence of Lazarus and his two sisters, Mary and Martha. They were residing there at the time of the death of Lazarus. Christ often visited this home, and it became known as the scene of some of the most interesting events of his life. It was only a short distance from Jerusalem.

Question.—What were the Cherubim so often referred to in the Bible.—T.

Answer.—We do not know a great deal of these strange beings, but it is said that they were not angels. Their mission, it has been said, was to serve as witnesses of God's presence. Representations of them were often used in the Tabernacle and the Temple. The two golden cherubim stood in the Holy of Holies upon the mercy-seat in the Tabernacle. We know but little of these strange beings. We are told that they had wings, but beyond that we know very little of them.

Question.—Who is this man Grant, of whom we have heard so much of late as to his views of Christian teaching?

Answer.—Mr. Grant is an Episcopal minister in name, but he does not stand for the teachings of that Church. On the contrary, he stands against the doctrinal views of the Episcopalians, at least in some large degree. He is now and has been for several years, rector of the Church of the Ascension in New York City. He is also in favor of divorce—and what else, we know not.

Question.—Can you tell me if the use of the trench in warfare is modern or ancient?

Answer.—It is ancient. It was used in battle as a means of protection in old Bible times. Get your Bible and read the following passages and you can see for yourself: 2 Sam. 20:15; 1 Sam. 26:5; 1 Sam. 26:7; 1 Sam. 17:20.

Question.—What is meant by tribulation, as used in the Bible?—C. C. Z.

Answer.—Tribulation implies distress. The word comes from the word tribulum, a threshing sledge. The beating out of the grain in threshing gives force to the thought of tribulation. The tribulum beats out the good from the bad, even so does tribulation work upon the life of the individual who suffers from its torture.

Question.—How many orphans has the Christian Orphanage at Elon now under its care, and what does the institution profess to do for such as may come under its care?

Answer.—The Christian Orphanage, located near Elon College now has under its care ninety-eight orphan children and they are expecting two more soon, making the list an even hundred. That is quite a large family of children. That institution feeds and clothes its inmates, and in addition thereto, they teach them in morals and Christian truth; they also teach them to work, and give them training in the elementary branches, and as they reach the point in their grades where they are qualified, as far as they can, they give them a chance in the college course. The Christian Orphanage is one institution of which our people are very appreciative. It is worthy of all the help we can give to it in its noble work for the helpless. Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, the superintendent, is the right man in the right place. His administration has been eminently a success.

Question.—Are any of the descendants of James O'Kelly now living?—H.

Answer.—Yes. There are several, among them Morings, a Mrs. York, the Herndons, Mrs. E. T. Vickers and Mr. Fred. W. Harward. No doubt there are many others, scattered through the country, with whom we are not acquainted.

Question.—Was Barton W. Stone a member of the Christian Church?—A. C. X.

Answer.—He was, beyond the possibility of a doubt, as we believe.

THE TRINITY IN MAN.

Paul said: "God is one God and Father of all, who is over all, through all, and in all."—Eph. 4:6.

The Ancients.

It appears that what we know as "the trinity" was not known to the ancient world, except in a dim and shadowy way and then only to the more important religions of antiquity. It seems that their symbols did include some idea that was similar to a threefold existence of Deity. For instance, we are told that Egypt had a hieroglyph for God which was represented in a globe with wings and a serpent coming up out of it. The globe represents God's eternity, the wings his activity, and the serpent his wisdom; and they thought of their god as Osiris, whose wife was Isis and whose son was Horus, and, to them, all three were equal with one another as their god.

India's idols were represented with three heads, and the god of Greece is represented by the sun with three beams of light. Such ideas as these have been handed down in man's conceptions of Deity, making it easy for us to believe that it has pleased God to plant His threefold nature deep in the nature of man, so that any and all who give it any thought may gain a satisfying glimmering of its truth, thus making it not surprising that the idea of this threefold nature of God has been given and vouchsafed to the prominent religions of the world. The conception of the threefold nature of the Gods of the ancients was very crude and imperfect, and they were only brought into a clearer understanding when Christ came and the kingdom stood revealed in fullness.

Nature and the Trinity.

Nature itself is one of our best teachers. Turning to it, we find the very same principles and facts from which the ancients got their information. Take the fact of space, it is exhausted in length, breadth and thickness. Time consists of the past, present and future. A person consists of body, mind and spirit. A circle is exhausted in a center, a radius and circumference. Every length has two ends and a middle. The fewest straight lines that will enclose anything is three—the triangle. The globe itself is made of solids, liquids and gas—earth, water and air. All life is classified in three kingdoms—mineral, vegetable and animal, and these component elements are in turn each composed of three parts, which I will discuss later. Everything of nature has a threefold existence, and the threefold nature of God, who has created everything, has so manifested itself that it has come to be expressed in the dogma which we call "trinity."

Man and the Trinity.

Now, let us think of ourselves a moment. What are you made of? Answer: body, mind and spirit. The body is substance, form and force. The mind is intellect, will and emotion. The spirit is the outgoing influence of the others, and completes the personality.

Let us take the mind, as above—intellect is thought; will is energy, and emotion is the fountain of feeling. It is plain that thought is not feeling, neither is it energy. Feeling is not thought, nor is it energy. Energy is not feeling, nor is it thought; and each one of these is dependent upon the other. They cannot be separated. They all complete a thing we call "man" and they make one indissoluble whole. Again, take an act of yours. One may say that the act was the result of your thought, and another may say it was the result of your work; another still may say that it expressed your love. I say it was the result of all three, and to this we all agree. Thus it is, that you are three, and yet you are one indissoluble whole.

So we come to speak of God in the same way. God is to us the Creator and Protector. The Son becomes the Redeemer, and the Spirit is the Sanctifier; and the one God did it all. It is out of this understanding that we became conscious of the following facts and fall down and worship him:

First.—That God is the Father of us all, in all, and through all; and the universe (including us) is a unit of law and order which, when violated, becomes sin and provokes the wrath of God.

Second.—We also become conscious that our Father is revealed to us in His Son "God was in Christ reconciling the world to him." Through Jesus we become acquainted with God. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Christ comes into our vision and in Him we see the Father.

Third.—We become conscious of an influence —a spirit—emanating from God through Jesus the Son, which reveals the character of God, inspires us and draws us to him, and this in turn moves our every power of love and directs every act of goodness. Notice how we cannot even express all this except in a threefold way.

If we understand this, can we not worship God with more joy? We are told that the Unitarian believes in one God only and a divine humanity. Well, he who believes in the trinity believes in something grander still, and that is the humanity of God.

God loves, and if He does, He must have a supreme object to love, and that object is man—you and I who are in His own image and created by Him. We are human, but at the same time we are His children and the supreme object of His love; if so, there certainly must exist in him all perfect human qualities and he lives in us to perfect us in those qualities, for it is by such qualities he reveals himself to us in the human form of his Son Jesus. We never doubt for a minute that He took upon himself the nature of man and lived under human conditions; and we also believe that it is through this medium that we come to know Him and are raised up by that is, to those perfect qualities in him.

This brings into our view a nearer and closer relation in which God stands to us. It is in this way that he is in our midst aiding our daily lives. He has not left us to "sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish." A god who made the world and placed it under law and order, and then redeemed it through His Son, and then left it to rise or fall eternally according as it is accepted or rejected, is not a God we like to think of, nor does it comprehend the work of the Holy Ghost at all. But a Father who, after sending His Son, still stays with us in the Son continually blending his life with our lives, guiding us into truth, guarding our lives against dangers, inspiring our lives with hope, consecrating our lives with affection—appeals to us as complete; and this is the work of the Holy Spirit. It is this blending, guiding, guarding, inspiring and consecrating that is the Holy Spirit working in all, and through all, to do His good pleasure.

The trinity is the master truth, then, that explains all departments of truth in God, nature and man.

[To be continued. The next subject will be "Substance, Form and Force."]

Do You Help Fill the Social Garbage Can?

The knights of King Arthur took as one of their vows "to speak no slander; no, nor to listen to it." Could all people live up to that high standard, what a different world this would be! The same may be said of scandal. There is a strange relish on the part of many for the social garbage can. They take a special delight in drinking from the sewer ditches where the stench rises to heaven. Why this eagerness on the part of people for social filth? "To speak no scandal; no, nor to listen to it," would be a good vow for the scandal-monger and all who will listen to him.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

April 8, 1923.

Subject: Abraham, the Hero of Faith.—Gen. 12:1-25:8; Heb. 11:8-9.

(A Survey of the Life of Abraham.)

Golden Text: "Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned unto him for righteousness."—Rom. 4:3.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 145:1-10.

Reference Material: 2 Chron. 20:7; Neh. 9:7, 8; Ps. 105:6; Isa. 41:8; Matt. 3:9; Acts 7:2-4; Rom. 4:1-25; Gal. 3:6-9; James 2:21-24.

"Biography is the only true history."—Carlyle.

The International Uniform Lessons for six months will be a study of the great outstanding characters of the Old and New Testaments. Each Sunday will present a Bible hero or heroine, for the study of the characteristics which made that life great, and the qualities which may be admired and emulated. Twenty-five men and women appear in this series. The Scripture references in some cases are more lengthy than usual, but will be found full of interest, as they tell the story of men and women who lived for God, men and women who sometimes failed to live up to the highest, as men and women fail today, but still characters which, through trust in God and love for Him, have carried on His work, and represented Him on this earth. There is thus a double benefit to be gained from these lessons. It is helpful to know the facts of these great lives, presented as a whole, and not piecemeal. It is more inspiring to know the motives which guided them, to feel the spirit back of their deeds, and to carry the worth-while from this biographical study into our own lives, that as Christians today we may be heroes and heroines for Him, because we are carrying out His will.

Abraham, the Friend of God.

It is most fitting that this study should open with the character of Abraham, the father of his race, a man leading in the Old Testament, and mentioned again and again in the New by Jesus Christ and the Apostle Paul. He is called the "Friend of God." What more could be said?—Isa. 41:8; 11 Chron. 20:7; James 2:23.

Abraham's Friendship With God.

Charles Kingsley was once asked by Mrs. Browning the secret of his fine life. He replied, "I have a friend." In this way he expressed the secret of his beautiful life. His friendship with Jesus Christ meant everything to him. Abraham, too, had a friend, and he was the "Friend of God." That friendship kept him so close to God, that he enjoyed his constant counsel and protection and guidance. Abraham did wrong in his life, but the ties of love for God brought him back, and God understood and forgave.

Friendship makes demands. Abraham was called to leave his home to go from place to place, to give up his fertile fields and go to the hillsides, to rescue his nephew from danger and captivity. All grew out of his friendship with the Heavenly Father, which led him to be a friend to man. But with the demands, friendship brought blessings. True friendship, based on loving, understanding sympathy always does. Dr. George L. Robinson finds in the text of the lesson seven great promised blessings which God assured Abraham that he would receive—(1) country, (2) nationality, (3) blessedness, (4) greatness, (5) service, (6) protection, and (7) universalism. God called Abraham to fill a great place in the world, but with the responsibilities, he gave him strength to fulfill them. That is God's way. "God's biddings are His enablings."

Abraham's Faith in God.

"By faith, Abraham, when he was called, obeyed." One outstanding characteristic of this hero was his faith, or trust in God. This faith was manifested in unquestioned obedience to all demands. He left his home, not knowing where he should live, or what was before him. Can the world be brought to God, without men, like Abraham, who are willing to undertake great things, "in faith believing." Missionaries are going out in this spirit. Without a sublime faith in God, they could not face the new surroundings, the frequent dangers, and the many discouragements of the mission field. Many incidents in Abraham's life showed his faith. (1) His departure from Haran, when God promised that he should make of him a great nation, and bless him, first showed his supreme trust. (2) When the herdsmen of Lot began to quarrel with those of Abraham, or Abram, as he was then known, his separation from Lot, giving the nephew choice of location, revealed Abraham's feeling that God would care for him, and after the separation Jehovah told him to look north and south and east and west, and all that land that he could see would belong to him and his descendants. (3) Faith is revealed in prayer. In his prayer for Sodom, Abraham shows his deep concern for the city, his faith in the power and justice of God, and his persistency in desiring God's people saved. "Prayer is not bending God's will to meet ours, but is our willingness to meet the divine will." He believed that God would do right. He believed that God was listening to his petition. The man of faith is the man of prayer. (4) Abraham's faith was rewarded by the birth of Isaac. He had prayed long for a son. God had promised that Sarah should bear him a son. Then after the boy had grown larger, and they had come to love him very, very dearly, God called Abraham to sacrifice him, his only son. And the "Friend of God" never hesitated. He was willing to give his best to God, if that were the demand. Only the voice of the angel of Jehovah stopped the human sacrifice. This was the supreme test of Abraham's faith, and because he met it, still added blessings were given to him. "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice."

"The Hero of Faith," "the Friend of God," the "Father of the Faithful." surely here is a man who has a message for all ages, and all people. His life had an influence that affected a world. He followed God's plan. God has a plan for your life. He wants your love, and faith and obedience, that He may give you His friendship and guidance.

"Trust and obey,
For there is no other way
To be happy in Jesus,
But to trust and obey"!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

April 8, 1923.

What are wise and unwise uses of the Lord's Day?—Isa. 58:8-14; Ps. 118:24.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

"Another six days' work is done,
Another Sabbath is begun:
Return, my soul! enjoy thy rest,
Improve the day thy God has blessed."
—Stennett.

Observance of the Sabbath is one of God's most positive commands.—Gen. 2:2; Ex. 31:12-17; Deut. 5:15; Ezek. 20:12. The prophet knew these commands, and he knew that the Sabbath had oftimes been disregarded. The wise use of the Sabbath is to obey God's commands, and keep it holy, a day for rest and worship.

The prophet Isaiah is discussing the wrong and right observance of fasts. He has condemned the fast for pleasure or strife, or for show. God does not require such fasts. "Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry," asks the prophet, "that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house"? When the fast day, or our Sabbath day is wisely observed, God is near to hear. He blesses the day and his glory is there. He is listening for His children to call upon Him on His day. Does the Lord have a place in your Sabbath?—Verses 8, 9.

Helping another is service to God.—Matt. 25:40. Ministering to the hungry, whether their hunger is physical or mental or spiritual, is an opportunity to let the Christian light shine, to glory of our Father who is in heaven. Jesus Christ taught: "It is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day."—Matt. 12:12. By His words and deeds He approved deeds of kindly helpfulness and relief on the Sabbath day.—Verse 10.

"And Jehovah will guide thee." Sunday is an opportunity to spend much time listening to His voice for guidance. Through public worship, and private communion, He has a message to give which is often missed, because the listener is not in tune with the Sender. His spirit can enrich the life. He wishes to satisfy. —Verse 11.

Placing God first insures a wise use of the Sabbath. To make His will and work foremost, wins His approval and blessing.

God never intended that the Sabbath should be a sad, gloomy day. "Call the Sabbath a delight." It should be a day of joy, real joy. There is a distinction between the pleasure that tears down the body and the character, and the joy which brings genuine satisfaction. God promises that His blessing shall be upon him who thus regards Sunday, and God's promises never fail.

"This is the day which Jehovah hath made." The Lord's day! Perhaps if we always called it that, we would be more careful about its observance. That is what Sunday means to the Christian—the Lord's day. Are you showing by your life, week after week, that Jesus is the Lord of your Sabbath?

How many Sabbaths have you spent in your life? What have they meant to you? Those are the hours that should bring you nearest to God. What are your Sundays bringing to you? Are you better fitted for work Monday morning? The feeling on Monday morning has been declared the test of a well-spent or wasted Sunday.—Mark 2:27, 28.

"I have seen it stated that two million people in England are obliged to labor seven days out of every week. A committee reported that 300,000 men in Greater New York never have a day of rest. So long as there is in the world one human being who is deprived of his weekly day of rest, there is a wrong to be righted, and a tragedy to be brought to an end."—Charles E. Jefferson, D. D.

"The intense pressure of modern living and the electric methods of business competition demand, as never before, a weekly rest day."—Rev. Martin D. Kneeland, D. D.

"As we keep or break the Sabbath day, we nobly have or meanly lose the last, best hope by which man rises.—Abraham Lincoln.

"Sundays the pillars are
On which heaven's palace arched lies;
The other days fill up the spare
And hollow room with vanities:
They are the fruitful beds and borders
In God's rich garden; that is bare
Which parts their ranks and orders."
—George Herbert.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Give a special invitation to members of the Church and Sunday School to meet with the Christian Endeavorers to discuss this important subject. Surely to attend the Young People's prayer-meeting is a very wise use of part of the Lord's day.

Ask certain members to be ready to discuss certain questions related to the subject, as the following:

What methods of keeping the Sabbath bring us and others the most complete rest?

If Jesus is Lord of your Sabbath, how ought you to observe the day?

If Jesus were truly the Master of all we do and say and think on the Sabbath, what changes would we have to make in the way we keep it? (Give this question to several.)

What place has worship in our Sunday program?

How is the Sabbath desecrated in our community? How can the Christian Endeavor Sociey help to correct this?

What is our responsibility, as Christian Endeavorers, in setting an example of a wise use of Sunday?

What blessings come from keeping the Sabbath day holy?

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "Safely Through Another Week," "O Day of Rest and Gladness!" "One More Day's Work for Jesus," "Jesus is All the World to Me," "More Love to Thee."

For a solo, or other special musical number, "Just for Today" or "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," will be impressive.

One Christian Endeavor Society always found that they had their best prayer-meeting on the Sunday night after an hour or two had bene spent in a special song and prayer service with some shut-ins of the Church membership, or in a neighboring institution. Why not prepare for this meeting by carrying the Gospel in song to some one who is kept away from Church services?

TWO KINDS OF COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

"There's more in the man than there is in the land."—Sidney Lanier.

This was the decision of Dr. Emmet Hightower, associate editor of Sunday School periodicals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, after he had visited two country Sunday Schools on the same Sunday. The Church houses were quite alike. The neighborhoods were very similar. As far as material conditions were concerned, the situation in both places seemed about the same. But there was a difference—and that difference lay in the appreciation which the people of one Sunday School had for the worth and opportunity of their Church work, as shown in the way the Sunday School was conducted. Dr. Hightower gives the following descriptions of the two Sunday Schools in a leaflet published by the Sunday School Board of the Methodist Church.

1. Sunday School was set to begin at 10 A. M. The pastor and the editor arrived at 9:30 A. M. A few men and boys were grouped under a tree in front of the Church building, and a few women and girls were inside. Ten o'clock came, and the pastor inquired for the superintendent. A citizen said: "He has company from the city today and will probably be late." At 10:20 the superintendent arrived. He spent five minutes greeting the pastor and neighbors. Urged by the pastor, he finally led the way into the building, and was leisurely followed by the other men and boys. Then he sought out a song book and spent five more minutes finding a song and grouping some young people about the organ. At 10:30 he announced the first song. Two songs were followed by a long, rambling prayer. Then the superintendent turned to the regular Uniform Lesson for the day, and such as cared to do so read with him "respectively." At 10:45 the classes were asked to take their places. The result was a general moving about over the house amid great confusion. In two minutes everybody was again seated, but there was a buzz of conversation and general disorder. The confusion was augmented by the secretary, who moved from class to class to get reports and offerings. At 10:50 all the teachers were addressing themselves to the lesson. The teacher of the Women's Bible Class (ages 12 to 80) sat down with her back to the class and read the lesson through in a low monotone, while members of the class chatted and gossiped. The teacher of the Men's Bible Class asked a few general questions and sat down. We could not hear what took place in the other classes, but evidently the minds of the children were far away from the Sunday School. In ten minutes all the teachers had turned their backs on their classes and resumed their seats, and the pastor began Church service promptly at 11 A. M.

2. It was a small, rectangular building, similar to the one visited that morning. The Sunday School met at 3 P. M., and was followed by preaching. When the pastor and editor arrived at five minutes past three, after a hurried noon meal and a hasty drive, the Sunday School had already begun. Every class was in its proper place, and so was every officer and teacher, and a spirit of order and worship pervaded the very atmosphere. The opening program was brief, but appropriate and well-considered, and consisted of good singing, Bible-reading, appropriate prayer, and announcements. Then curtains were quietly drawn, separating every class from the rest of the school, the teachers began their work. The superintendent sat at his desk, and so did the secretary, and the pastor seated himself in a Bible class and gave good attention to the teacher and joined in the discussion of the lesson. Each teacher made the class record and took the offering, and these were quietly sent to the secretary. Thirty minutes were allotted to the lesson period, and no teacher finished before the set time, a fact which gave evidence of careful preparation for the task of teaching. At a single tap of a small bell, the curtains were pushed back, and without the slightest confusion the superintendent proceeded to conduct the closing worship. This done, all classes except those of the smallest children remained in place, no one left the house, scarcely a pupil moved and the pastor proceeded with the Church service. After the benediction the people remained in and about the house for quite a while in neighborly conversation.

Can you recognize your Sunday School in these two types?

Why not resolve to be the "man" or the woman who will make your Sunday School carry on its work better?

PLANS TO AMERICANIZE SEVEN MILLION ALIENS.

Hon. James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, has announced plans for a country-wide Americanization drive, to the end that the half of the foreign population which is not American be educated to desire and be fit for citizenship.

"We are confronted with a serious problem in our alien population." said Mr. Davis.

"We have 14,000,000 foreigners in America, 7,000,000 of whom live among us without assuming the duties of American citizenship. We propose to enroll these aliens, to take an annual census of them, in order to provide for them the opportunity to learn what America means and what the privileges and duties of American citizenship are.

"We propose to Americanize the alien before he alienizes America. We propose to make him a citizen if he proves worthy of citizenship, and to send him whence he came if he proves unworthy.

"A blatant and cynical immorality is raising its head among us, and it must be conquered. We must drive home to all America that the honor of the individual is the honor of the family, and the honor of the family is the honor of the State. We must sanctify our family life, for no nation can long endure which is based on a foundation of broken families.

"From all the world there arises a miasma of foul political, economic, and social doctrine which breeds a fever of revolt against all law and order, a plague of hate and destruction.

"In this new conflict, America must hold fast to those eternal principles of right and justice laid down in our fundamental laws. American citizenship must have behind it honest patriotism, love of liberty, and respect for law. We must stand firm on the principles enunciated in the birth of the republic.

"We must pledge ourselves that representative government shall endure."

Plans for the organization of naturalized immigrant Americans for patriotic service are being worked out by the Labor Department.

Such an organization, the department believes, would be of great service in the Americanization of 7,000,000 foreign-born residents who are not naturalized. The title "Castle Gardeners" has been suggested for the organization, because old Castle Garden in New York City was for a long time the landing-place of immigrants.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Since we have been in charge of the Christian Orphanage, a great many contributions of different things have been sent in to help us in the work. Each contribution has been highly appreciated and has brought joy to us and has made the work more pleasant. But one of the sweetest contributions that has come to us yet is a barrel of real old "Georgia Cane Syrup," donated by our Church and friends of Kite, Ga. It is the kind that the children would rather have than any other. I know the syrup is better than Dr. Atkinson's good old Porto Rican coffee, and I believe is as sweet as Bro. White's Royal food for bees. I know some mighty good preachers that were fed on this syrup, and I wonder if it doesn't make people grow sweeter and better. To say the least, it is very pleasing to the taste and makes all the children happy. I wish more of our churches in Georgia and Alabama would remember us in such a sweet way.

One call for sheets is being answered in a real sweet spirit, and the fololwing have been received since our last report: Mrs. Joel E. Harrell, Suffolk, Va., 2 sheets; a friend, Mt. Auburn Church, N. C., 2 sheets, 2 pillow-cases; Mrs. J. T. Brooks, Vass, N. C., 2 sheets, 4 pillow-cases; Mrs. J. A. Dees, Vass, N. C., 2 pillow-cases, 1 towel; Janie West, Vass, N. C., pictures; Mary E. Baird, superintendent primary department, Lincoln, Kans., 2 sheets and 2 pillow-cases; Mrs. A. S. Dunn, Lynchburg, Va., 2 sheets; Mt. Gilead Church, N. C., 10 sheets; Circle No. 5, Woman's Missionary Society, Burlington Church, Mrs. S. A. Horne, leader, 15 sheets, 1 dress, 1 suit, 5 pairs of hose; Truitt Philathia Class, First Church, Greensboro, 15 sheets; Christian Church and friend, Kite, Ga., 1 barrel of syrup (good old Georgia cane); Young People's Missionary Society, New Lebanon Church, Elberon, Va., 5 sheets; Ladies' Adult Bible Class, Liberty (Vance) Church, 1 quilt; Ladies' Missionary Society, Liberty (Vance) Church, 1 quilt; Mrs. C. O. Rem's S. S. Class, Liberty (Vance), 7 cup towels; Miss Rosa Best, Burlington, N. C., 2 sheets; Miss Myrtle Bloyd, Lincoln, Kans., 2 pairs pillow-cases.

We have received to the present eighty-seven sheets—still lack 113. Who will send them?

Rosemont Christian Sunday School (Va.) mailed us a check for $110 to furnish a room in the new building. We appreciate this very much. This leaves two large rooms in this building to be furnished yet. What Sunday School will be kind enough to do this for us?

Don't forget our ninety-eight children when you make your special Easter offering. They are dependent upon you for support. I feel sure you will be liberal, as you have always been good to us in this work. They are our neighbors' children in our own homeland. Let us be kind to them and give them a chance in life to grow up to be useful men and women.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

MARRIED

DUKE-WORTHAN

A very pretty marriage took place on Saturday, March 10, 1923 at the residence of the bride's father on 1041 27th St., Newport News, Va., when Miss Ora Thelma Worthan became the bride of Mr. Charles Elisha Duke, Jr. Both the contracting parties are members of the Christian Church and very popular in the East End section of Newport News. The words that made them one were spoken by their pastor in the presence of quite a number of their immediate relatives and friends. Happiness and sunshine attend them.

RAIFORD-BURTON

On the evening of February 21, 1923, at the home of the officiating minister, 1612 Prentis Ave., Portsmouth, Va., Mr. W. Emerson Raiford and Miss Amy V. Burton, both of Sedley, Va., were quietly united in marriage. They will make their home in Sedley where the groom is engaged in the mercantile business and the bride has for some time been stenographer in the bank of Sedley. They have the best wishes of their many friends.

W. D. Harward.

PARKER

Whereas it has pleased God to take from our church community, our beloved sister, Denie C. Parker, be it resolved:

First: That we, in great faith humbly bow in submission to Him who is too wise to err. Knowing that His will should be done on earth as in heaven.

Second: That in the death of sister Parker, Sarem Christian Church has lost one of its faithful members, her neighborhood one of its true friends, the home a loving wife and mother.

Third: That we, one and all, strive to imitate her in all that is good and let the Christ light shine through us as it did through her goodness.

Fourth: That we extend our deepest sympathy to the family in these great afflictions and commend one and all to the Father who is able to heal all that come to him.

Fifth: That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the church record, that a copy be sent to the family and a copy be sent to the Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. Rosa E. Harrell,
Mrs. Sallie M. Gatling,
Mrs. Katherine Felton,
Mr. W. D. Langstun,

CHILDREY

Earnest Childrey was born March 29, 1896 and died March 1, 1923. He was the son of R. C. and Rosa O. Childrey of near Waverly, Va. He had been a member of Centerville Christian Church for a number of years. He had never been a very strong young man, and had suffered more or less all his life; the last few years his sufferings were deep, and the treatment in the sanitorium under skilled doctors and nurses failed to relieve him of his tubercular trouble. He leaves to their loss a mother, two brothers, John W. and Shirley, one sister, Mrs. Florence Liverman. The burial was in a family burying ground on the farm of Bro. W. A. Tatum. The burial services by the writer in the presence of relatives, neighbors and friends of the family. Peace to his dust till the resurrection morning.

GRAMMAR

Mrs. Alice Grammar died in Richmond, Va., February 2, 1923. She was about 72 years old. The family record not being available. She was buried in Waverly Cemetery February 23, 1923. She leaves 3 sons and 2 daughters. The details of her sickness and death are not known to the writer. The family formerly lived near Waverly, Va., but are now scattered. There were but few relatives and friends present, as the body was shipped in on railroad and the community and old friends did not know of her death. This is the fourth burial of aged women the writer has conducted and assisted in during the winter months.

Jas. L. Foster.

ISLEY

Earl Jones, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Isley, Burlington, N. C., Route No. 6, who died March 20, 1923, after a brief illness, was laid to rest March 21, in Bethlehem Church Cemetery. Funeral services were conducted from Bethlehem Church by Rev. G. O. Lankford and the writer.

The deceased was born August 15, 1911, and at the time of his death he was 11 years, 7 months and 5 days old. He leaves father, mother, grandparents, Rev. and Mrs. Frank Isley, and Mr. W. T. Warren, one sister, one brother, a number of relatives, and a host of friends who will miss his presence.

Earl was a member of Berea Christian Sunday School and was always happy in the Service of Jesus. He was esteemed highly by all who knew him. His care and respect for older people is a good model for every boy and girl. He loved with a true love all his associates and little friends, and during his great suffering he called the names of all his schoolmates. There will be a vacant place in home, in church and in school, which can be filled only by Jesus, and may He heal all those broken hearts and help loved ones to wait with patience the dawn of that crowning day. May this little one lead father and mother to higher hopes for glory at last, to those who are faithful. Earl waits for you, loved ones, on those shining tablelands, where the love of God alone is sung.

Wm. T. Scott.

It is always sad to see these tender human flowers die. We always think what the child might have been could it have grown to manhood or womanhood. Much sympathy was felt for the parents in their loss. May God comfort the home. Burial at the Waverly, Va. Cemetery and services conducted by the pastor.

Fighting the Devil With the Inkstand—

When Martin Luther was toiling at his version of the Bible, he imagined that he saw the devil and promptly hurled his inkstand at the arch-enemy. The incident is highly suggestive of the attack that Luther made upon "the devil and all his works" when he translated the Holy Scriptures into the vernacular of the common people. The inkstand is a good instrument with which to fight the devil. The Church has not been as wise as it should in carrying its books and periodicals to the very people who need them most; that is, the very large class which has not yet become interested in good religious literature. The effort should be to reach the multitudes.

Mexico Expels the Papal Delegate—

What is regarded as the most serious setback the Roman Catholic Church has had in Mexico is the recent expulsion of Monsignor Ernesto Filippi, papal envoy to that country. The law on which President Obregon based the expulsion decree prohibits the holding of large religious services in public, and dates back about seventy-five years. According to the Mexican authorities, the papal delegate refused to obey the orders of the governor of Guanajuato, who forbade a great gathering at Silao in that province for the ceremony of the enthroning of a statue of Christ as King. He is also accused of inciting the Catholic priests in the country to defy the Mexican government. In a public statement, President Obregon said that hereafter foreign church dignitaries would not be permitted to come to Mexico to make themselves arbiters of the affairs of the Catholic Church in that country. This is generally understood as meaning that no more papal delegates will be permitted to engage in religious work in the country, and as being a distinct step in the breaking of relations between Mexico and Rome.—Watchman-Examiner.

A Working Program—

One day, not a great while ago, I journeyed to where a reputed wise man was to be, and with all the humility I could muster sat at his feet to learn. He had many things to tell; many, many things, just as a wise man should, and among the many things this: "A minister should go to his study at a definite hour every day, for a definitely determined period, for definite tasks, and permit no interruptions."

Not very long after, I again journeyed to where another reputed wise man was to be, and with even more humility than before, sat at his feet to learn. He, too, had many, many wise things to tell, and among them this: "Every interruption is an opportunity. No man ever knocks on my door who is not sent by God."

Going home and to my own study, I sat down and pondered in my heart the statements of these two wise men. Both could not be right, that was certain. But both could be partly right—that seemed certain, too. Could I not, then, evolve from them a program of my own, incorporating in it the truth of each? I pondered on, and at last this came to me.

I will establish from time to time definite tasks for myself. I will endeavor to devote some time each day to them, but I will accept every interruption as a God-sent opportunity for service, or a test of my grace. GIL BONHEUR, JR.

This is a fine plan, brother. Stick to it and you will be blessed.—EDITOR.

"The Intention of His Soul"—

From the manuscripts before me, I turned my eyes questioningly to the rows of books on my shelves. I was weary, weary of study. My eyes smarted and my brain ached—"The Intention of His Soul." Well, it sounds more formidable than inviting, but I will read a while on a venture.

I was very thirsty one day. In fact, I had been hours without water. Hours without water, but never a minute without toil. Oh, for a drink! The thicket ahead was most uninviting. I had avoided several very like it, passing around or obliquing to the right or the left for a few yards. But for some unaccountable reason I parted the screening bushes of this one and found half hidden beneath the underbrush a pool of water that proved cool and sweet to my parched tongue and burning throat, and to those of many another.

Some books are like that pool—cool and sweet to the smarting eyes and the tired brain. And very often they are discovered just as I discovered the spring, unexpectedly, undesignedly—unaccountably impelled to take it from the shelf as I was drawn to part the bushes and peer into the thicket.

I read for a long while, pleased and gripped. I read at random—"Abigail Voices," "The Exits of the Soul," "The Snare of the South Wind," "The Credentials of a Leader," "An Acid Test," and "Castles in Spain." "Pretty fine sermons," I thought, and turned to the frontispage to find they were not sermons at all, but essays; essays by one Hubert L. Simpson, and for the "untheologically minded."

Thirty men came at my invitation to the pool I had discovered in the thicket. I wonder if tired eyes and weary brains will turn to my book? Those who knelt at the spring were refreshed; those who read the essays will be helped.

GIL BONHEUR, JR.

Conditions in the Near East—

Those whose hearts have been stirred by the unspeakable sufferings of the refugees of the Near East, will be interested in the following cablegram received very recently from Athens, regarding present conditions:

"In many ways the situation today is more satisfactory than a year ago. The orphans from Anatolia are now on friendly soil, where they can enjoy, both now and in the future, full rights to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness, and where they can be educated to man's estate with the certainty they will be permitted to become useful citizens of the world. Money and effort spent on these orphans will unquestionably be a sound investment for the future. No longer can it be said that Near East relief is bringing up children to provide material for future Turkish massacres.

"The situation in the Caucasus also gives ground for hope. Within the next year there is reason to believe there will be a rapid trend toward normalcy in Armenia and Georgia. Our orphans there, some of them are now approaching the age when they can take their places as citizens, will perhaps be the most important factor in the future of their country.

"The refugees' situation in Greece continues desperate. Among Greece's million refugees are many thousand orphan children whose plight should have constructive attention as soon as we have provided adequately for our own orphans from Anatolia. No phase of Greece's refugee problem is so serious as the plight of the children, many thousands of whom have already fallen victims to epidemics, cold and exposure. No phase of the refugee problem is more deserving of American sympathy and help.

"Today more than ever before, the future of the Near Eastern countries seems to be in the hands of the children. The most powerful single force towards regeneration and brotherhood will undoubtedly be our children brought up under American ideals and Christian citizenship by Near East relief.

"We shall get much larger return for per capita investment on our orphans in new homes here. For instance, new buildings at Syros are being constructed out of one year's saving in the cost of maintenance of the same children in Greece as compared with Anatolia. In Greece we shall have the full sympathy and active support and co-operation of the Greek government and people, and there is every reason to believe we shall shortly have in Greece the finest orphanage establishments in the history of the organization."

This copy of this cablegram was sent to the office of the Board of Religious Education by Miss Ruth G. Brown, Sunday School secretary of the Near East Relief, as a message to our Sunday Schools who have been helping in this work. The followers of Jesus Christ, who love little children of all lands, must be interested in this plea, in His name, for the suffering boys and girls of the Near East.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Our old friend of the long ago, Rev. A. C. Ycumans, is pastor of the Church at Greenville, Ohio.

We are sorry to learn that Rev. P. H. Fleming has been sick of late, but we are glad to know that he is out again.

And now we enter the showery month—April—may there be indeed and in truth "showers of blessing" descending upon our work everywhere.

The last news from Dr. W. S. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., was that he was improving slowly. We wish he may have a speedy restoration to health.

Bro. Hermon Eldredge is visiting among our people in Eastern Virginia, speaking in the meetings which are being held for our young people.

Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va., seems to be moving along well in his work. He has some communications in this issue which may interest you.

Bro. Sam Davis, the blind pianist, is open to engagement in revival work. He deserves real encouragement. His address is Norfolk, Va.; Park Place.

Rev. C. J. Felton, Toronto, Canada, is moving along well in his work there. He has recently organized a new Church in the eastern suburbs of Toronto. So now we have two churches in Toronto. His many friends in the South will be glad to hear of his good work and the fine outlook before him.

What are you doing for THE CHRISTIAN SUN in your Church? Did you say, "Nothing"? Well, suppose all of our churches should be handled in that way, what could we expect would come of our cause? Suppose you make a good, honest effort to get your people interested in reading the Church paper, do you not think it would be much better for the cause?

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, secretary of religious education for the Southern Christian Convention, is a busy little lady. She is on the go week after week, traveling to the different sections of our work and preparing the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor lessons for the young people. The Church at large hardly realizes the time she is giving to this work. We have heard of chips of the old block—Miss Eldredge is a good second to her father, and no doubt he feels grateful to God for the gift of such a daughter.

Dr. D. A. Long, writing from Franklinton, N. C., March 26, 1923, says: "I preached at Pope's Chapel yesterday, 11 A. M., and at the M. E. Church, in this place, last night. I returned here in time for the Sunday School at our Church at 3 P. M. yesterday. I will preach here next Sunday at 11 o'clock A. M. on 'The Life of Christ,' and at 7:30 P. M. on 'The Death and Resurrection of the World's Redeemer.' At 3 P. M. next Sunday I will marry two of our young people in the M. E. Church at Creedmore, eighteen or twenty miles away. The fire a few days ago came near destroying the Church building at Pope's Chapel. The damage has been repaired."

The death of Bro. Irvin M. Green, near Henderson, N. C., in the month of March of this year, cast a gloom over a large number of loved ones, neighbors and friends. Especially are his children deeply grieved. His neighbors gave him the name of a most excellent man. The funeral, at Liberty Church, in Vance County, was very largely attended. The services were conducted by the editor of this paper, assisted by Bro. Ellis, pastor of the Henderson Baptist Church. It was also a Masonic funeral.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, pastor of our First Church at Greensboro, N. C., has recently enjoyed a gracious meeting in his Church, with twenty-four additions to its membership. He was assisted by Bro. Alfred Shumate, of Lima, Ohio, whom Brother Clem regards as a splendid helper in such meetings, both in the singing and personal work. Brother Shumate is a member of the Christian Church at Lima, Ohio, if we are not mistaken. We wish our people may give him employment in his line of work regularly.

A letter from Dr. W. S. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., to his brother, Rev. D. A. Long, Franklinton, N. C., under date of March 26, written by his own hand, brings us the gratifying news of his continued improvement. His many friends throughout the Church will rejoice that he is doing so well, even though as yet his improvement is not rapid. In writing to his brother, he says: "I did not feel the burn, and knew nothing of it until Dr. Manning began to dress it. I was unable to stand on my feet for more than a week." He further adds: "I have had good nursing—could not have had better. My friends here and elsewhere have been exceedingly kind, for which I am profoundly grateful."

Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., one of our aged and afflicted ministers, writes, under date of March 26, 1923: "About 6 P. M. fifty-five years ago, Annie Eliza Moring and William Gaston Clements were united in marriage at the home of James Madison Moring in Orange County, N. C. Since that time our Heavenly Father has greatly blessed us. He has given us seven children, as follows: Edwin Wellons, Joseph Lee, James Barrett, Synthia Irene Caldwell, Nanie Jane Stephenson, Annie Stella Green and Mary Ethel Hupp. All of our children are living, and all are members of the Church. Mrs. Clements is not in good health, but she is improving slowly we think." This little personal note will be read with much interest by the many who have known and loved Brother Clements and his good wife for so many years.

We are deeply pained to learn through the Herald of Gospel Liberty of the death of Bro. Ira D. Mellott, of Pennsylvania. He was a man of fine qualities, not the least of which was his devoted friendship. We have known him for many years, and we have known him only to love him as a brother in Christ. He was a layman and secretary of the Rays Hill and Southern Pennsylvania Christian Conference. He was a devoted Christian and a hard worker. We believe he was a blessing to the brotherhood in Pennsylvania. We met him for the last time at the Burlington Convention last October. He and his wife and son drove through from Pennsylvania on his auto. It was a pleasure to greet him and his family once more in the flesh, but little did we think it was to be our last meeting on earth. To the devoted wife, children and friends, we extend a brother's love and sympathy in this great sorrow which has befallen them. May God bless, comfort and guide them always. Precious be his memory!

We understand that Rev. J. W. Holt is now confined to his room. He has been feeble some time, and we are pained to know that he is growing weaker as the days come and go. To add to his affliction, his devoted wife had the misfortune to fall and sprain her ankle, but she will soon be over the accident. Many hearts will deeply sympathize with these dear friends in their sufferings. God bless them and keep them in peace of heart and mind.

Rev. G. O. Lankford, the beloved pastor of our Church at Burlington, N. C., is all the while up to his eyes in business for the kingdom. Our latest news of his work was to the effect that he is preaching a series of ten sermons on the following subjects: "The Greatest Vocation," "The Greatest Vision," "The Greatest Sin," "The Greatest Saviour," "The Greatest Power," "The Greatest Love," "The Greatest Law," "The Greatest Hope," "The Greatest Harvest," "The Greatest Portrait." That surely gives him a great field for thinking, and for impressing his congregation with the truly great things in Christianity.

We surely are a denomination of secretaries. Rev. McD. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio, is secretary of evangelism; Rev. W. H. Denison is secretary of stewardship; Mrs. Emma S. Powers is secretary of woman's work; Rev. J. F. Burnett is secretary of the General Convention of the Christian Church; Rev. Omer S. Thomas is secretary of home missions; Rev. W. P. Minton is secretary of foreign missions; Rev. A. B. Kendall is secretary of Christian Endeavor; Bro. Hermon Eldredge is secretary of Sunday Schools. We name these from memory, but there are many more which we cannot name just here, at least we think so.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION TO MEET IN HENDERSON, N. C.

The First Christian Church, of Henderson, N. C., Dr. J. P. Barrett, pastor, has extended the Convention an invitation to meet in Henderson for the extraordinary session, to be held this spring.

The Executive Committee appreciates this invitation, and hereby gives official notice of this acceptance.

The Convention will open Tuesday, May 1, 1923, at 3 P. M., and will close with the evening service Thursday, May 3rd.

The Henderson Church is a good Church, but not as strong as some, and I, as President, without the Church's consent, am suggesting that if any minister or delegate wants to help them in the entertainment, you can do so by simply writing, requesting them to arrange for you at the hotel, you paying your bills. This is only a suggestion, and I apologize to the Church now for making it. L. E. SMITH, Pres.

NOTICE.

All persons expecting to attend the forthcoming session of the Southern Christian Convention to meet with the Christian Church in Henderson, N. C., May 1st, and who desire entertainment at the hands of the Church are requested to notify me, as the pastor of the Church, at your earliest convenience. We will not hold ourselves responsible to provide entertainment for those who do not notify me. Henderson, N. C.

In this issue we have the closing letter of Simon Abe to his former pastor, Rev. T. E. White, Windsor, Va. We understand that some of our readers have taken this tilt between these two brethren too seriously—they have thought the two brethren were not friendly, but that is a mistake. It is true that Brother White did give Brother Abe a pretty good dressing down for the way he had lived and served under his pastorate, but he did it so well that we think Simon Abe himself must have seen that he was doing it for his good. Then Simon Abe's letters to Brother White were once in a while pretty keen, but it was all, on both sides, I think, meant in a most friendly way, and if you will notice Brother Abe's last letter carefully you will see that Bro. White seems to have helped Simon Abe to see himself in a better light, so that Brother White seems to have won him over to be a better friend and supporter of our denominational enterprises, and that is quite an accomplishment. So, after all, we think both of these brethren are to be congratulated on what has been accomplished by their letters. It takes a good "hauling over the coals" sometimes to get a man to see himself, and that, we think maybe, Brother White has done. You could hardly expect Simon Abe to come out and "own the corn" the first thing, but now you see Brother Abe comes out about as strong for these good works as Brother White wanted him to do. Maybe both of them have been helped, and in turn it may be that both have helped the cause by talking so plainly of the failures of each other. Now, that it is ended, let us all try to profit by what has been said and get down to better work than ever.

The Christian Church, Henderson, N. C., was greatly surprised and highly gratified in the closing moments of the Sunday night service, March 25, 1923, when Bro. Herbert A. Carlton, who, though not a member of the Henderson Church, is a devoted member of the Christian Church elsewhere, arose in the congregation and, addressing the Church, said: "Brethren and sisters, I wish to make this Church a present of a new car for the use of the pastor of this Church. I give it on conditions that the Church will own it and keep it for the use of the pastor, whoever he may be; that you will pay the license and the upkeep of the car. The car is to be strictly for the use of your pastor." Then he took his seat. Quickly some one moved that the car be accepted. The motion was seconded, and then a unanimous vote was given, expressing the high appreciation of the Church for Brother Carlton's generous act. After the benediction the members gathered about Brother Carlton to express their personal appreciation of his kindness and generosity toward the Church. In this the pastor and his wife wish to join most heartily, for since our coming to this Church Brother Carlton has anticipated our needs in so many instances and has in like manner generously met the same from his own individual purse. For the information of our readers, we will say that Brother Carlton is of the Richmond family of Carltons. What we have just said of his generosity will indicate that he is "a chip of the old block," and that will express to as many as know of their large generosity to our Richmond Church and to Elon College, what a friend the Henderson Church and its pastor have in this man and his excellent family, for Mrs. Carlton, though a Presbyterian, never tires in her kind attention to the pastor and his wife of her husband's Church.

A Model in Helping One Another.

By Rev. Jack Spratt.

"Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always laboring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God."—Col. 4:12.

We have a rare character to study at this time—a model in Christian living and serving—and yet the Church of the twentieth century has hardly heard of him. Indeed, he is mentioned only three times in the Bible—twice in Colossians and once in Philemon. His lack of prominence does not detract from his efficiency and usefulness. He is not only a model for the rest of us, but seemingly he is a model as a Christian without knowing it. Jack Spratt only wishes that this noble and unselfish man might become a model for our Church members today—yes, and for our preachers, too. At the time he was mentioned in the text he was a preacher, but he was not at that time filling any regular pulpit for his brethren. Just then he was a prisoner, and while he could not fill a pulpit, he was by no means idle as a Christian, as our text very clearly shows. He was laboring for the Colossians in prayer. He was laboring fervently in prayers for the Church. He was then more of an intercessor than he was a preacher, and this is a good suggestion for preachers now adays, and other people as well. When we cannot be a preacher in the pulpit, we can be an intercessor even if in prison, laboring fervently in our prayer for the cause of Christ.

Do you wish to know who Epaphras was, and what he was doing while he was in prison? The text tells us about all we may know of him:

1. He was one of them—of the Colossian Christians.

2. He was a servant of Christ, seeking to do the Master's will in whatever situation he might find himself. He was a model in that.

3. He was laboring fervently in prayer—praying for the life, service and peace of the Church at Colosse.

What was he praying for?

1. He was praying that the Colossian Church might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. What a prayer that must have been! That means that he was praying, not merely for one of his personal friends, or for his family, but he was praying for the whole Church that it might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. Do you realize that Epaphras was not at play? He was busy. Lazy folks do not do much praying—it takes too much of their time to rest. That is the way Jack Spratt thinks about it. A praying man is a busy man. That is one of the great needs of the Church today—men who are busy in prayer. And what better work could a busy man be doing than praying—praying for the whole Church; praying that the Church members may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. If a Church should reach that standard—standing perfect and complete in all the will of God—mountains of difficulties would crumble before its onward march. In this day of doing big things in the work of the Church we hear not much about efficiency in prayer, but that is where efficiency counts in the work of the Church.

2. He was praying that the members of the Church at Colosse might become mature Christians. Oh, how scarce are mature Christians! How valuable they are in the Church! What is a mature Christian? Oh, he is one who has developed in his spiritual life till he is qualified to fill the place and to do the work that God has given him to do, and do it well. How can we reach such a degree of power? Epaphras did it by prayer and the study of the Word of God, doing whatever his hands found to do. Reader, will you diligently strive to reach such a degree of maturity? Then begin now.

3. Epaphras was praying that the Church at Colosse might grow in grace and live in peace. Oh, that every Church had a few such Epaphrases in its membership! Then a new day of spiritual life and activity of the right kind might dawn.

4. He was also praying that they might become fruitful Christians. Jack Spratt says, stick a pin down here and remember that no one can become a fruitful Christian without prayer and the study of the Word.

5. The prayer also included the wish that the Church members might be kept in the truth and grace of God. Two things are much needed in the Christian life—one is to keep full of truth, and the other is to enjoy the grace of God, and that simply means to enjoy the favor of God. You cannot be full of the truth unless you are a praying and a Bible-studying Christian, and these are very necessary if you are to enjoy the spiritual favor of God.

Epaphras was a true yoke-fellow, and that means he was in right relationship with the brethren and sisters of the Church at Colosse. (1) He was in full sympathy with the entire Church in its efforts to live a right life, to be true to the truth and in their purpose to build up the cause of Christ. It also meant that he was with them in love—in real co-operation. As Paul expressed it, they were "knit together in love." That is a very strong expression of the relationship between the members of the Church at Colosse, and that ought to be the relationship between the members in all Churches—if knit together in love, every little rumpas that comes along will not tear the Church members asunder, nor divide the Church in its love and service. What a blessed situation for the Church!

Jack Spratt says that he thinks Epaphras in his prayers for the Church reflected his own character and the kind of a Christian he was. Oh, how beautiful must have been his life, as he gave it in prayer, that the Church at Colosse might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. Nothing binds Christians together more than the true love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Spirit.

A man had a tenant. He furnished him team and implements for farm work. One day the landlord went over to see how things were going. When he arrived he saw his tenant out in the field as if he were burying something. He found that of the two horse he had furnished for work, Dick and Billy, Billy was dead, and the tenant was burying him. While standing by the grave, Dick came up and stood looking on, as if much grieved. The landlord seeing this, said to the tenant: "I believe Dick loved Billy." The tenant said: "Of course he did, for they have pulled together for twenty years." Indeed, pulling together in love! What an example! And shall a horse know and do better than a Church member? Jack Spratt declares that would be a shame on Church members. He not only says that, but he says if Church members be real Christians they will surely pull together as well as common horses.

HAVE CHRISTIANS A DEFINITE MISSION?

Almost one hundred and forty years ago the Christian Church, as represented in these columns, came into existence, and as it came into existence, to it was given a definite mission which was twofold in character—

1. To add its mite to the great work of winning the world to Christ.

2. To seek to remove the divisions in the Church of Christ and to bring the people of God into real Christian fellowship.

Have we accomplished these missions?

As to the first part of our mission, we have done a little, may be more than we know, but any way, we have been pressing the battle against sin and darkness and we feel assured that we have been the channel of some light to the children of men. Enough has been done to give us assurance that to the extent of our faithfulness we may hope for further usefulness in the Lord's vineyard. What a field is the world! So open, so inviting, if seen in the right light, and especially if used in a wise way, for a wise use of opportunities must precede fruitage of a high order. We waited almost a hundred years before we definitely undertook to obey the Great Commission as given by Jesus Christ. Fifty years ago we had almost no city churches in the South—a bold proof of slowness to accept and use opportunities as offered to us. Let us look for a few minutes upon one of the most fruitful fields for us as a people in the South. In 1873—just fifty years ago—in our Southern work we had only one little church in Berkley and one in Suffolk. Where we then had no churches, we now have as follows: In the cities by the sea and the suburbs where we then had only one little church, we now have seven, and most of them very active and aggressive in the work. Let us take a little excursion through our Southern work to see where we have churches now and where there were none fifty years ago.

In Virginia.—We have in Norfolk and Portsmouth and suburbs seven churches where we had only one fifty years ago—one at Holland, one at Franklin, one at Windsor, one at Ivor, one at Wakefield, one at Waverly, one at Richmond, one at Winchester, one at Danville, one at Ocean View, one at Newport News, one at Isle of Wight Courthouse.

In Georgia.—Two at Columbus, two at La Grange, one at Richland, one at Vanceville.

In Alabama.—One at Wadley and one at Lanett.

In Delaware.—One at Dover and several country churches.

In the same time we have established Elon College, and we are now building Bethlehem College at Wadley, Ala. We have also established the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, in North Carolina. We have also in the same time aided very materially in the establishment of our mission work in Japan and in Porto Rico. There, too, a good work is in progress in the planting of the Gospel and in the establishment of churches and schools. We are small, but we have no need to hang our heads in shame because we have done so little.

Considering that we are a small body and never having been trained in such work, we hold that this is not a poor showing for fifty years, and under the blessings of God the next fifty years should mean a great deal more in the development of the work of the Christian Church. We can hardly appreciate this gain unless we imagine it all taken out and then take a good look at what we should have left—then you can see that fifty years of work has meant a great deal to us as a people.

As to the second part of this mission of the Christian Church, viz: the union of the people of God, we need not say a great deal, as the work speaks for itself in the greatly increased spirit of unity among practically all the denominations, with certainly few exceptions. The spirit of unity that is now manifested in all of the larger branches of the Church of Christ is certainly most gratifying. Perhaps some may laugh at such a claim as that we have influenced these larger bodies for the closer fellowship of God's people. Be that as it may, we are by no means sure that the Lord has not honored our faith and desire for union by giving the present union spirit among the denominations as our hire in His service. We feel sure, too, that to stand for union at a time when the leading denominations were so averse to the thought has not been forgotten by Him who prayed that "they all may be one." It is true, as a people, we have spent a hundred and forty years in this good cause, but not without most gratifying results. It is a fact that the world is not yet ready for our ideal of union, but it is also true that the denominations are preparing for the coming of this great event, that many of the larger bodies are even now hungering for the union of God's people. They are not yet quite ready for union, but they are getting ready, and rapidly, and we believe the day is not far distant when the union of the denominations will be much nearer than it is now.

Did some one say the Churstian Church has had no part in bringing about this great change? Well, maybe not, and yet who can say that the Lord did not fan the flames as we sent them forth; we may be forgotten, but the flames are sweeping on, consuming the sectarianism which has so disturbed the Church of Christ for hundreds of years. A small flame can set a forest on fire and consume the trash of centuries. The little flame may be forgotten, but its work was well done and issued into a great clean up of ecclesiastical debris. In so far as the work of the Christian Church was of God, no matter how others have looked upon it, when the great movement for the bringing together in Christian fellowship of the people of God, in answer to the prayer of His Son, the little Christian Church will have its reward and the Lord will give us our due. We are not so bothered about getting credit for it all now. We are only concerned that the work He has given us to do shall be well done and fruit in glory to His name. In the sweet by and by we shall not lose our reward.

That the Christian Church holds the only feasible plan for union among the people of God, we think cannot be disputed. The great body of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, comprising something like thirty millions of Church members from the leading denominations of the land, is even now co-operating upon practically the very basis of union which our people have been offering to the Church Universal for more than a hundred years. That alone speaks volumes of hope for our cause. Some have gone so far as to intimate that there is no longer any need for our people, as an organization, since our idea of union is so gen-

to the prayer of Jesus that "we all might be one." This fact is certainly a pela for us to continue to stand firm and keep this feasible plan of union before the people of the various denominations. If our stand for the last hundred and forty years has brought such good results, we certainly ought to be stimulated by that fact to continue to stand and keep this plan before the world. It may not be in every particular just the basis of union, such as we will all come to at last, but it is the kindergarten of the greater work, and therefore we must be loyal and faithful, keeping it before the people. If our work is of the Lord, in due time He will bring the harvest, and the glory will be to His blessed name forever, and He will not forget the men and women who dared to stand before a gainsaying world for the union of the people of God through the latter part of the eighteenth century and then on through the nineteenth century and thus far into the twentieth. Let us stand in the spirit of Christ, that we may be used of Him in gaining the ends He has in view, and when we have done that it will be enough that His purpose is served in the union and saving of the world.

"THE HUMORS OF EVOLUTION."

The truth is God's jewel, but some men have a hard time finding it. It may be that they find what looks like a jewel, but they are not sure whether it be a real jewel or if it be a fake jewel, and because of this fact they often hold to the fake jewel and let go the real jewel, and it really seems as if a man can hold as fast to a fake jewel as he can to the real. That is the misfortune of selecting truth jewels. If some men ever get the mind fixed on one, he cannot turn it loose and again fix it on a genuine truth; at least, he is not likely to do so. You need not bring fact or argument to these dear people, for they are going to hold to the idea they first got fixed in their minds. No matter who sees it as error, they must see it as a truth of rare and great value. Do let us try to turn loose the error and grasp the truth, for error, though it may give a kind of temporary satisfaction, yet in the long run only the truth can stand and hold its own.

Take this matter of evolution. Many brethren hold to it with a grip that is worthy of a better cause. No matter what may be shown, they hold on to evolution. The fact that it does not harmonize with Genesis does not for one moment break their hold on this scientific (?) theory. Evolution must be right, even though it disputes the word of Him who created all things. He has told us how he did it, but they say: "No, even creation itself was a matter of evolution." Everything has come up through a process of development, and in the minds of such people that claim of the evolutionist settles everything for them, Bible or not Bible authority. Beyond all question, as we see it, it is not true to the facts involved. God said that He created the world and all that therein is, but the evolutionist says, "No, not created, but 'evoluted.'" But where did it get the first atom in which to start evoluting? Even evolution cannot make something of nothing. Evolution, as we see it, does not even claim to create—it simply claims to develop this or that from something, not from nothing. Why, to make a horse of nothing would be too much for the evolutionist; he could not do that. As we understand him, he does not even claim to make anything of nothing, not even TIAN SUN may give Mr. Rockefeller's plan careful study and then do your best to take care of your own children. There are many who through evolution. Give him this or that as a starting point and he will claim to work wonders, but require him to start the evolutionary process and make something of nothing, and he will surrender at once. He knows he can not develop something out of nothing, not even for the sake of making good his theory of evolution. If any evolutionist will, by means of evolution, make something of nothing, demonstrating it beyond all doubt, then we promise to take off the hat to evolution and give him three cheers. Now, Mr. Evolutionist, if you will get a box and clean it out so that nothing shall be left, going far enough to pump out the air and then close it hermetically, and then let evolution bring forth some living thing we shall be ready to believe in the possibility of the truth of evolution, but till that is done we beg to be excused from accepting the teachings of evolution as truth against what we learn in Genesis.

We subjoin here a bit of interesting reading from an exchange, in which we are told of a lecture on "The Humors of Evolution" by a talented and scholarly physician. The lecture was given in Syracuse, N. Y., on March 12, 1923, by Dr. J. J. Walsh, of New York City. The following is the report of the lecture as given by our exchange:

"The Humors of Evolution."

On monday evening, March 12th, in the First Baptist Church of Syracuse, we had the privilege of hearing Dr. J. J. Walsh, of New York City, speak under the auspices of the Syracuse Forum on "The Humors of Evolution." It was the best address we have ever listened to regarding the falacies of the evolutionary theory of the creation and progress of the human race. It was full of wit and humor as well as being the product of eminent scholarship and profound and lond-continued research. The great gathering was thoroughly with him in his conclusion, which was: "I think there is something in evolution, but I don't know what it is, and nobody else does."

Dr. Walsh is a practicing physician of New York City, and an eminent historian and scientist who is identified with several famous hospitals and universities. It was, therefore, with unusual interest that we followed his arguments and proofs by which he reached the conclusion that the evolutionary theory is still entirely unproven and wholly speculative. He admitted it to be a beautiful hypothesis and a very captivating theory, but stated emphatically that "everywhere you turn you find some great principle which blocks its progress."

Again he declared: "There is no objective evidence for evolution; it is what we call subjective. The scientist says, 'It must be so,' because he cannot prove that it is so." He made the further positive statement that some of the most eminent modern scientists, among them Lord Kelvin, declare, "Science teaches the existence of a Creator." The realm of scientific research illustrates and emphasizes the unwillingness of the natural man to say: "I do not know."

Dr. Walsh stated that, aside from established facts, science is constantly reversing itself, and cited as support some of the theories that have been completely reversed within the last twenty-five years, a few of which we mention briefly here:

"Acquired characteristics are not inherited. Twenty-five years ago it was believed that tuberculosis was inherited. Now we know it takes only the quitter and that the man in whose family there has never been a tract of tuberculosis is in the greatest danger because he has no protecting virus in his veins.

"Scientists used to teach that the earth was an immense ball of fire—that it cooled off gradually through millions of years Now they declare it is in process of heating up, and believe that some day, about two millions years hence, it will be too hot to live on.

"Take the case of infantile paralysis. We have lately been scourged with it, and for a time we felt it was something new and dreadful come upon the earth. There is the mummy of a little prince of the third Egyptian dynasty, 3900 B. C., in a museum in Philadelphia, and the bones of this child show signs of his having suffered the same disease as our children. The germs of this disease produce precisely the same effect in the bones of children now that they did 6,000 years ago. In all the unthinkable generations of microbes during that length of time the microbe which caused infantile paralysis has not evolved, but is exactly what it used to be in the early history of the race.

"Three thousand years ago, Blind Homer roamed the streets and householders used to call him in and have him sing his poems. Three thousand years have made us forget Homer and appreciate the movies. Take the case of the greatest historian who ever lived—Heroditus. Paper hadn't been invented then. He used to read his history between events at athletic meets. I wonder what would happen today if the greatest living historian were to read his history between innings of the world's series games at the Polo Grounds! I think they'd make even shorter work of him if he tried to read history in the Yale bowl on the Saturday before Thanksgiving. We may have made improvement in mere things such as collar-buttons and shoestrings, but we haven't improved in mental capacity and in our thinking."

Here again we have the best scientific support, not of the theory of evolution, but of the Bible account of the creation of man and a subsequent degeneration of the human species through sin and disobedience to God, rather than an upward evolution through "striving."

A RICH MAN WHO TRAINS HIS CHILDREN AS IF THEY WERE POOR.

An authorized interview with John D. Rockefeller, Jr., showing how he trains his children in the handling of money.

We find in the public press a very interesting account of the way Mr. John D. Rockefeller teaches his children to take care of money, just as if their father was a poor man and could afford to do no more for them. Many have criticised Mr. Rockefeller for many things. Never mind about that. We feel sure, whatever may be said of him in other things, he has more sense in the training of his children as to how to take care of their money than nine-tenths of the poor men who so much need to teach their children the right use of money. His reference to the old woodpile went right to the spot and refreshed the memory of a certain boy, who was the son of a poor man, as to how he got some training in the same institution. We commend the following interview which was given out by Mr. Rockefeller as to how to train children, or rather as to how he trained his own children in the matter of economy in handling money, although he is independent and heir to the biggest fortune (speaking financially) in the United States.

Mr. Rockefeller cannot afford to spoil his children by giving them just anything they want. He could afford it financially, but he cannot afford it as a father who wishes his children to grow up and be a blessing to themselves and to the community in which they live. We wish every father and mother who reads The Christ erally accepted. We think that is a mistake. Holding this position for one hundred and forty years has fruited in great gains for the answer could not afford to give their children even as much as Mr. Rockefeller gives his, but you can give them in proportion to your ability and then require of them such handling of what you do give them as Mr. Rockefeller does of his. Many a boy and girl have gone wrong because he or she was never taught right, and consequently learned only the wrong way and of necessity knows no other way to go.

When the heir to the world's greatest fortune opens his heart and frankly tells how he is bringing up his own six children, ranging from five to eighteen years of age—five of them boys—to master their money, so that it shall not master them, young folks, especially, may well prick up their ears and give heed. It is with the personal permission of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and by the courtesy of the N. E. A. Service that the following intimate personal interview is shared with a multitude of boys and girls. It is the only interview Mr. Rockefeller has ever given out on what he regards as one of the most important and engrossing duties. He does not attempt to tell what other people should do with their children, but simply indicates the principles which he feels in duty bound to apply to his own, the result of which abundantly confirms the wisdom of his course.

"I regret," said Mr. Rockefeller, "the passing of the old-fashioned woodpile. I have failed to find a modern equivalent of the woodpile of my father's boyhood.

"Wealth," he said, "hurts children when they get too much of it. Just because a man can afford to hire people to wait on his children is no reason why he should do it. I don't.

"They ought to be helped to form the habit of doing things for themselves—things that need to be done—whether they like to do them or not. I think many modern children are not developing the will power and self-mastery that are essential to the solution of life's problems.

"That's what I mean about the woodpile. My father had to chop wood and do the milking. He probably didn't like doing the chores any better than most boys, but he acquired the habit of doing things he didn't like to do; his will was trained, and it helped him cope with other difficulties.

"Everybody knows that one of the things which is wrong with the world is extravagance. Extravagance hurts character. It is a man's duty to civilization to be thrifty. Whether a man can afford lavish spending isn't the point—it is wrong not to spend wisely, whatever is spent, whether a man can spare the money or not."

Families and individuals—children, too—should keep accounts of the money they receive and spend, says Mr. Rockefeller. His father kept accounts of his personal expenditures until he was past fifty. And he himself did so until a few years ago. Mr. Rockefeller, Jr., is forty-eight.

"Commencing at the age of seven or eight, each of my children receive an allowance of 30 cents a week," he explained. "The understanding was that out of it they were to save and to give, as well as to spend.

"Ten cents was to be saved, 10 was to be given for Church and Sunday School (for benevolence) and 10 for spending.

"I explained to them the importance of keeping accounts. At the end of the week I audited the accounts. A few years later they were getting a dollar a week; and, to teach accuracy in keeping accounts, rewards and demerits were given. If the account book was correct, the child got $1.05 the following week, $1.10 the next, and so on; if incorrect, only 95 cents, then 90, then 85."

These allowances never exceed a dollar or two dollars a week at the most until the age of fifteen. By then, Mr. Rockefeller considers, a child that has been properly trained ought to be able to handle his own finances. So the allowance is increased to cover all expenses outside of living, education and medical service. It includes clothes, fares (if traveling alone), entertainment, candy, sodas, and the like.

"I believe that children should know what to spend, how to spend, what things cost, whether a thing is worth buying—in short, the value of money.

"This, and keeping accounts, is important because of the principle underlying. It is of value to my children—to any child—to hold to the rigid fundamental principle of economics."

Mr. Rockefeller smiled over an experiment he tried.

"I was brought up to do things that needed to be done, whether I liked them or not," he said. "At seven years of age I began playing the violin, and I used to get five cents an hour for practicing. But that sort of thing doesn't work these days—or at least the standards are higher! Even with children, five cents an hour isn't an inducement any more!

"But I do pay wages for errands and chores. If a child honestly works, he earns such pay. It stimulates the desire to work. I used to get 15 cents an hour for sawing wood. But these days it's different. Down in the country we have wood hauled to the house. My boys and I load and unload it, and I pay them for the job. Yes, the scale is higher than 15 cents"!

Schools do not teach thrift and habits of work, Mr. Rockefeller finds.

"Education used to mean cramming the mind," he said. "Education really is learning how to use the mind. The tendency with many children of today is to follow the easiest way—the line of least resistance. You see it reflected in studies, in social life and in business.

"The modern theory of many people seem to be to let a child decide what he wants to do, and then let him do it. Of course, we all do best the things we like doing. But life cannot be lived wholly that way. How can a child later learn how to avoid the things he should not do? A disorderly mind is an untrained one."

Mr. Rockefeller hasn't much sympathy with parents who, having acquired means, say they hope their boys will never have to work as hard as they did. "It is a false idea to change standards that way and go with the tide," he said.

"A boy should do the wholesome things his father had to do in so far as is possible. It will teach him what qualities made his father successful. I am sorry I did not have that sort of chance in some ways. I want my boys to start work at the bottom."

THE SHORTER BIBLE.

Prof. W. S. Sanford, Ashton, Ill., sends us a copy of an editorial which appeared in The Herald of Gospel Liberty of April 17, 1919, and requests that it be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We are glad to comply with his request. The article is just as timely today as it was when it was written, four years ago. The only change in the situation now from what it was then is that the friends of the Bible have been awakened to the gravity of the situation. As we think, where then were only now and then one who was speaking in defense of the Bible, now there are many standing for the inspiration and reliability of the Old Book. The facts given in the article may be relied on as correct, so far as we are informed.—EDITOR.

We told you so, again and again, but you did not think it possible, did you? But few have thought it would really come to pass. We heard people talk of it, the newspapers discussed it, as likely to come to pass, but few, if any, have really expected it to come to pass in our day, at least, and yet almost before we give it serious thought, as a possibility, it is even now an accomplished fact.

Yes, we already have a Shorter Bible, or the New Testament translated and arranged by Prof. Charles Foster Kent, professor of biblical literature in Yale University, in which work he was assisted by four helpers. And who is Prof. Kent? He is one of our modern scholars who believes much of the Bible is of no special value. He says so in plain and unvarnished language. He is a higher critic, if you please. In his introduction to "The Shorter Bible," he says; "The Shorter Bible does not aim to take the place of the complete text or of the time-honored versions, but simply to single out and set in logical and, as far as possible, in chronological order those parts of the Bible which are of vital interest and practical value. That statement may be plain, but it is not consistent. He begins by telling us that the Shorter Bible does not aim to take the place of the complete text of the time-honored version. Does he mean that? Listen. At once he declares that what he has left out is lacking in vital interest and practical value, and yet he does not mean that that which has vital interest and practical value to the people of this age shall take the place of that which has no vital interest and no practical value to the people. That shows his inconsistency. The man who has a barrel of potatoes, many of which are worthless, very sensibly separates the good from the bad, but declares that while one part is good and the other part is worthless, yet he means not that the good shall take the place of the bad. We all know he does not mean it. He separates the good from the bad because, from his viewpoint, common sense demanded it, and he would not think of again mixing the good and the bad together in the same barrel. That shows up Professor Kent's inconsistency in selecting the parts which he himself says are of vital interest and of practical value to the people of this age.

After he has separated the valuable parts from the parts which he himself pronounces not of vital interest and of no practical value, then as if to conceal something, he practically says, I do not mean that the good parts which I have separated from the parts which are lacking in vital interest and practical value are to take the place of the parts lacking in vital interest and practicl value. Who can believe that he really means what he seems to say?

It is a fact that Professor Kent has given us the New Testament as the higher critic thinks it ought to be and as he means it shall be, if he can induce the people to accept it, and use it, as he has retranslated it. But what is the difference between the New Testament as our fathers read it and as Prof. Kent has given it to us? This is the difference. The New Testament which we have so long read and enjoyed has 7,067 verses in it, while the one Prof. Kent has given us has only 3,044 verses, showing beyond all question that Prof. Kent has cut out over half of the New Testament, and now asks us to accept his work, called "The Shorter Bible," as containing all that is of vital interest and all that is of practical value to the people of this age. Do you ask why Prof. Kent has thus cut out over half of the New Testament? Well, let us ask him. He says what he has kept is the part of vital interest and practical value to the people of this age. But Prof. Kent, from whom did you get your authority to make these radical changes in our New Testament? Did the Lord tell you that He had made a mistake by inspiring men of old to write the New Testament? And He commissioned you to cut out 4,023 verses, so leaving us less than what He originally gave us? Or did you just take a notion, under the promptings of higher criticism, to do it yourself? No doubt you did it on your own motion and according to the great wisdom (?) of higher critics.

You say in your introduction this: "The reader is often confused by these different versions of the same incidents and teachings." But, Prof. Kent, do you make the situation better by adding another version? Tell us, Professor, if nineteen veils blind a woman so she cannot see, do you think it will help her to see more clearly by putting one more veil on her face, so making her to wear twenty veils instead of nineteen? If you are right in your idea that many versions confuse the reader, do you really think you have helped by the addition of one more version?

Rev. Jas. B. Smith has given The Shorter Bible a thorough study, and he says that Professor Kent and his associates have taken out of the New Testament nearly everything which is miraculous, all allusions to the inspiration and infallability of the Scripture, the Olivet discourse, the great commission, and nearly every vital point of New Testament teaching is ruled out.

Let us give you a few samples of the omission: Matt. 1 is left out bodily. He puts in only two verses of chapter three. In Matt. 4 he gives us only verses 1 to 10 and 13, so leaving out more than half of the whole chapter. In Mark 2 he gives us only twenty-eight verses out of the forty-one. In Luke 8 he gives us only twelve verses out of thirty-four verses, and all of chapter 2. In Acts 5, he gives us only thirteen verses, so leaving out twenty-nine verses. In Romans 4 he gives us only verse 13. In 1 Cor. 3, he gives us only verses 21, 22, 23. In 2 Cor. 1, he gives us only five verses. In Galatians 3, he gives us only five verses. In Eph. 1, he gives us only five verses. In Phil. 3 he gives us only five verses. In Col. 1 he gives us only eight verses. In 1 Thes. 4, he gives us only twelve verses. In 2 Thes. 3, he gives us only five verses. In 1 Tim. 4, he gives us only three verses. In 2 Tim. 4, he gives us only twelve verses. In Heb. 1, he gives us only four verses. In Jas. 1 he gives us only thirteen verses. In 1 Peter 1, he gives only eleven verses out of twenty-five. In 2 Peter 1, he gives us only eleven verses out of twenty-one. In 1 John 3, he gives us only fifteen verses, and then omits entirely the second and third epistles of John and all of Jude. He gives only verses 4-6 in Rev. 1. He leaves out Rev. 22:18, 19, the verses which declare judgment against any who may add to, or take from the words of this Book. These are mere samples. Some of our brethren have thought that we have been unnecessarily exercised over the work of the higher critics, but now our fears are fully justified, seeing that in this their published effort at giving us a new Bible, they have cut out over half of the entire New Testament, and so would take from us many of the rich teachings of that portion of the Bible—that is what higher criticism will do for our New Testament if we allow it. It is true, Professor Kent says this Shorter Bible does not aim to take the place of the complete text, but what difference does that make, when he boldly declares that the parts he has left out have no vital interest or practical value to the people of this age? If that were true, then only his selections would be of any worth to the Church and the world, and so we would have, in that event, no possible need for the parts he has removed forcibly and without authority, save the authority of higher criticism.

Brethren and sisters of the Christian Church, shall we stand by and see the most important part of our creed—the New Testament—thus emasculated? We say, in the name of our God, it must not—it must not be—at least not by the consent and approval of our people—never!—Editorial in The Herald of Gospel Liberty, April 17, 1919.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Christian Education Institute for Berea, Cypress, Bethlehem, and Suffolk Churches was held in Suffolk on Saturday, March 24th, afternoon and night. The attendance was fairly good and the interest was better. Miss Lucy Eldredge, field secretary of Religious Education for Southern Christian Convention, had charge. Hermon Eldredge, field secretary of Young People's Work for the General Convention of the Christian Church, delivered two addresses, one on "Christian Education" and one on "Makers of Men." Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of First Church, Norfolk, delivered an address on "Graded Lessons." All of them were fine.

Miss Eldredge remained over Sunday and gave good messages to the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor Societies. Mr. Eldredge was at Holland and Holy Neck on Sunday and returned to Suffolk and delivered a great message on "Winning Our Young People" to our congregation at night. Twelve of these institutes are being held within the Eastern Virginia Conference, and practically all the Churches will have an opportunity to have contact with these great workers. Mr. Eldredge is also a member of the "International Sunday School Lesson Committee," and one of the finest field men in this country.

Before this is in print, Easter will have passed and Christendom will have proclaimed again belief in the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the tomb. The Christian religion stands or falls on this doctrine of the resurrection. "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." The harvest that feeds the world depends upon the resurrection of the grain that is buried in the earth; and, "except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." It is beyond our knowledge, but not beyond our faith.

Faith is larger than knowledge.
Faith is more universal than knowledge.
Faith is stronger than knowledge.
Faith goes before knowledge.
"We walk by faith, not by sight."

The child believes before it knows. "Knowledge is power," but faith is more powerful.

"Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God."

We do not know that the worlds were framed by the word of God, but we believe that they were so framed.

We do not know that Columbus discovered America, but we believe he discovered America.

We believe it on the testimony of history.

We believe that Jesus Christ arose from the dead on the testimony of history.

Easter reminds us again of this great historic event, and has the same place in Christianity that the Fourth of Jury has in American history.

Great historic facts crystalize into celebrations that keep alive great events.

The birth of Jesus, the crucifixion of Christ and His resurrection, all speak to us of events that cannot die.

Christmas, Good Friday, Easter are not mere words, but crystalized events that demand recognition by the faith of the Church.

ELON LETTER.

I write this on Good Friday, early in the morning, and I have good news for the faithful hearts and true of the Christian Church. A new day has dawned for our college. I felt that was the case when, on November 18th last, Mr. P. J. Carlton made me acquainted with his magnanimous gift of $25,000 for the endowment funds of Elon.

Then came the fire and dark days. On January 24, six days after the fire, the trustees in session brought light and the conviction that dawn was just ahead. Alamance County then provided her $100,000 in cash and subscriptions for the rebuilding campaign. A friend, inspired by that generous, helpful spirit, gave $25,000 for endowment. The sun was up and ascending the eastern horizon of our hope. I could not but feel that noon would be glad with a cloudless sky. The situation was tense, with something inspirational. Those of us in close touch with the conditions felt the atmosphere to be surcharged with great promise. We were not mistaken. Noon has come and the sky is clear. No cloud obstructs the beauty of a perfect day.

Two great-hearted men of our Church have each decided to give $50,000 to the building program of the $600,000 emergency fund. One of these gifts will be used to erect the library building. The other will construct the auditorium. The giver of the library building desires to remain incognito to the public. His wish shall be respected, but God knows and will bless.

Brother J. M. Darden, who is to furnish the $50,000 for the auditorium, also prefers to remain anonymous, but yielded to our urgent suggestion to change his mind because his building is to be a memorial to his wife's father, Mr. L. H. Whitley, and that it was only right that the Church should know. It could not be known without divulging the name of the generous heart that made such a splendid memorial possible. The auditorium will be the scene of the daily chapel and Sunday services, of the commencement exercises and of all other public events and entertainments. How fitting that on all these occasions we should meet in a building erected as a memorial to one of the most devout and consecrated men our Church ever numbered among its membership! Brother Darden will also present the college a life-size oil painting of Brother Whitley to hang in "The Whitley Memorial Building."

In this gracious act, Brother Darden has the approval of his wife and children. One of his daughters was away from home at the time he arrived at his decision. The first intimation she had of it was in the newspapers. She immediately wrote her hearty approval and congratulated her father upon having made it a memorial, not of his own great life, but of her maternal grandfather. It is great to be generous-minded. It is grand to be the head of a household that approves and appreciates generous-mindedness. It was Dr. Atkinson who suggested this splendid thing to Brother Darden. All I had to do was to reap a harvest already sown and cultivated.

Brother Darden stipulates in his generous provision for the auditorium that the Church must carry out to completion the emergency fund program. We accept the challenge, brother, and, God helping us, shall bring it to speedy and happy conclusion.

Recurring again to Brother P. J. Carlton, there seems to be no end to his generosity. On the day when the trustees met to launch their rebuilding program, as is known, he subscribed $10,000 to the emergency fund. He has since insured his life for $25,000 in favor of the college and is to pay the premiums himself. Truly, Elon has friends. Truly, a new day has arrived for our college.

It is Good Friday and a glorious day!

HOLLAND.

Missions.

The Woman's Missionary Society met at the home of Mrs. Job G. Holland March 13th. A program of reading and music was rendered, and refreshments were served. A pieced quilt, the whole, a finely arranged scheme of hearts and names, was finished. Each name represented 10 cents, and approximately $80.00 was sewed into the quilt. This strikes us as an excellent plan of raising money, for all the money is given and there is, besides, a valuable quilt for the orphanage. Through dues and donations and the quilt, a total of $125.00 was raised.

The Young Woman's Missionary Society met at the parsonage March 19th. The second chapter of "Lighted to Lighten" was studied, and mite boxes were opened. The return for the month in gifts and dues was $20.76. It was moved and unanimously adopted to raise this year's apportionment through dues and gifts, and not to resort to socials, plays, or a dinner—and they will. (That is wise.—Editor.)

Ladies' Aid Society.

The Ladies' Aid Society is in the midst of a financial campaign. When the Church was built the Aid presented it with a pipe organ. At the same time each of the members subscribed to the Church building fund, and their families are represented in each of the denominational drives. All but $250 has been paid, and they are now determined to raise that amount. And they will.

Sunday School.

The Sunday School weathered the winter in good style. The first six months of our Sunday School year gave us an average attendance of seven better than for last year. January and February, our two hard months, show us only five below last year's average attendance. This, of course, means we will this year exceed last year's average attendance by ten or twelve. These figures are not startling, but they are healthy and represent a slow growth that has been going on for several years. We are now studying the merits of the graded courses, and may in the near future adopt them. Our Sunday School, a mouth for both missions and the orphanage, is working smoothly now. Another six months should find us as well provided with expense funds as we were before the plan was introduced.

FIRST CHURCH, GREENSBORO, N. C.

Our series of evangelistic services closed last night. We had good interest and attendance for the two weeks. Mr. Alfred Shumate, of Lima, Ohio, assisted the pastor. Mr. Shumate is the very finest help I have had in meetings of this kind. He is an efficient workman, who is able to do what he sets out to do. He has had considerable training in lyceum work, which qualifies him to an eminent degree in song service and as a leader of choirs. He is a member of our own Christian Church, and it is to be hoped that our people will use him all the time. If we do not, we certainly do not deserve to have efficient workers. The results of the meetings here among those we cannot always see were twenty-four additions to the Church—three by letter and twenty-one on confession.

Pastor.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A FIVE-WEEK VICTORY CAMPAIGN.

People's Christian Church, of Dover, Del., is rejoicing over a great victory in raising funds for a new departmental Sunday School and social center building. For several months the Church has felt that owing to the recent growth of the Sunday School, which has practically doubled its enrollment within the past year and a half, the need of new class-room accommodations was imperative.

The Church has also recognized that in order to meet the present-day problem of enlisting the interest of the young people in the Church that provision should be made for the social and recreational life of the young people of the community. Hence, when the pastor, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, informed the official board at a recent meeting that he believed the opportune time had arrived for launching the proposed program, it was unanimously voted by the board that a canvassing committee should be appointed for the purpose of making a canvass of the members and friends of the Church to see what financial response would be made.

Five weeks ago yesterday, at the morning service, the pastor announced the action of the official board and stated that the campaign to raise the necessary funds for the construction of the proposed building would start at once. He had previously appointed A. G. Massey, chairman, and J. Henry Hazel, secretary of the committee, who, with him, were to select ten other men to serve with the chairman and secretary of the canvassing committee. This committee was later endorsed by the official board as the general building committee, the chairman of the board of trustees, the chairman of the property committee and the pastor being members ex-officio. From this committee a committee of seven men were selected to constitute the construction committee to have charge of securing the architect, letting the contract and lookinb after the construction work.

The canvassing committee was composed of twelve progressive, enthusiastic young business men and men of middle age, who met on the following Monday night after the announcement was made on Sunday, and in the pastor's office gathered for consultation and prayer to seek God's divine guidance in promoting the campaign. The plan of the campaign was carefully mapped out by the pastor, and the committee began its work with an enthusiasm and loyalty that could not be surpassed.

Such an encouraging response from the very beginning has never been known before in this community. Practically the entire membership was enthusiastically back of the project from the very beginning of the campaign. The sacrificial giving on the part of the members and friends of the Church spurred the committee on to their best efforts.

Within just five weeks to the day from the time the campaign was launched, the chairman of the committee reported to the congregation that as a result of the campaign pledges to the amount of $60,670 (sixty thousand six hundred and seventy dollars) were in the hands of the committee, and that the building program would begin just as soon as the construction committee secured the architects plans, and the contract could be let.

The present Church building is a structure forty-five feet wide by a hundred and ten feet in length, having a large auditorium and gallery, affording a seating capacity to accommodate seven hundred people. It also has a ladies' parlor and a large basement, which have been used for Sunday School and social purposes.
